This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. ALL THE REPORTED DECISIONS OF THE COURTS OF MICHIGAN

VOLUME VI

MAXIMS.

A list of the principal maxims of law cited in Michigan Reports with citations to the cases where found and applied. In some cases reference is made to the topic where the maxim is treated as a rule of law.

Maxims in equity, see Equity, I; and see also post ¶ 14 et seq.

¶ 1. A litigant is entitled to his day in court.—Ledyard v. Auditor General, 121 Mich. 56. Due process cases, see Constitutional Law, V.

¶ 3. Actio personalis moritur cum persona. [A personal action dies with the person.]—Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335. For applications of the maxim under the statutes and the common law, see Abatement §§ 2-17.

¶ 4. Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. [The act does not make a person guilty unless the intention be guilty also.]—Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150; Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212. See also Crimes § 2.

¶ 5. Between equal equities the prior in time will prevail, see Equity § 2; and see also post "when equities are equal."

¶ 6. Caveat emptor. [Let the buyer beware.]—Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68; Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 303; Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 Mich. 191; Tenney v. Hand, 32 Mich. 63; McGoren v. Avery, 37 Mich. 120; Tuttle v. White, 46 Mich. 485; Stevens, Auditor-General v. Lake George & M. R. R. Co., 82 Mich. 426; Maxted v. Fowler, 94 Mich. 106. For applications of the maxim in sales of personalty, see Sales, VI; in sales of land, see Vendors and Purchasers, II; fraudulent representations about land, see Fraud §§ 12, 16.

¶ 8. Communis error facit jus. [A common error makes law. The converse is "Communis error non facit jus."]—Malonny v. Mahar, 1 Mich. 26; Pease v. Peck, 18 How. (59 U. S.) 595, 15 L. ed. 518, affirming 5 McLean 486, Fed. Cas. No. 10894.

¶ 9. Conventus privatorum non potest publico jure derogare.—Jaquith v. Hudson, 5 Mich. 123; Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 Mich. 78. [See "Privatorum conventio juri publico non derogat"—Private agreements cannot derogate from public law.]

¶ 10. Day in court, see ante "A litigant is entitled," etc.

¶ 11. Delegata potestas non potest delegari. [Delegated authority cannot be again delegated.]—People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343,

351. Applications of the principle of this maxim, see Agency § 29; Constitutional Law, II, D.

¶ 12. De minimis non curat lex. [The law does not notice (or care for) trifling matters.]—Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12. For the doctrine that trivial errors will not be regarded, see Harmless Error; Indictment, XV. The maxim "de minimis non curat lex" held applicable to a claim that the amount stated in the notice of foreclosure sale under a building and loan association mortgage was excessive.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 13. Divinatio, non interpretatio est, quæ omnino recedit a litera. [It is a guess, not interpretation, which altogether departs from the letter.]—Jaquith v. Hudson, 5 Mich. 123.

¶ 16. Equity follows the law.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Child, 70 Mich. 163, and see Equity § 3.

¶ 17. Equity regards that as done which ought to be done.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Child, 70 Mich. 163, and see Equity § 8.

¶ 18. Equity regards substance rather than form, see Equity § 7.

¶ 19. Equity will not aid a forfeiture.—Wallace v. Kelly, 148 Mich. 336. See also Penalties and Forfeitures. Equity abhors forfeitures, applied in a case where a city sought to revoke the franchise of an electric light company upon a mere technicality.—Wyandotte Electric Light Co. v. City of Wyandotte, 124 Mich. 43.

¶ 21. Every one is presumed to know the law.—Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 118 Mich. 109. Writ of error dismissed in 178 U. S. 270, 44 L. ed. 1065, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931; Ledyard v. Auditor General, 121 Mich. 56; Toney v. Knapp, 142 Mich. 652. See also Evidence §§ 47, 48; Indictment § 133. The rule that "every man is presumed to know the law" applied as against a complainant in a proceeding to set aside tax sales.—Cook v. Hall, 123 Mich. 378.

¶ 24. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. [The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another.]—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Galpin v. Abbott, 6 Mich. 17; Niles v. Rhodes, 7 Mich. 374; Perry v. Cheboygan, 55 Mich. 250. Applied to the constitution, see Smith v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 114 Mich. 460, reversed in 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565. Applied in construing corporate charter powers, see Corporations § 70. Rules of implication in construction of writings, see Contracts, VI, A; Deeds, III, A; Wills, VI, A; Statutes, V.

¶ 25. Expressum facit cessare tacitum. [That which is expressed puts an end to that which is implied.]—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243. See also preceding maxim.

¶ 26. Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. [No action arises out of an immoral consideration.]—Quirk v. Thomas, 6 Mich. 76.

¶ 27. Ex turpi contractu not oritur actio.—Bank of Michigan v. Niles, 1 D. 401; Brooks v. Hill, 1 Mich. 118; Comstock v. Draper, 1 Mich. 481; State of Michigan v. How, 1 Mich. 512.

¶ 28. Falsa demonstratio non nocet. [A false description does not vitiate.]—Anderson v. Baughman, 7 Mich. 69; Johnstone v. Scott, 11 Mich. 232; Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 463. See also Contracts, VI; Deeds, III.

¶ 29. Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. [False in one thing, false in everything.]—Van Voorhis v. Van Voorhis, 94 Mich. 60. Application of maxim to credibility of witnesses, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 30. De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio et judicium. [See De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est lex—The law is the same respecting things which do not appear and those which do not exist.]—People v. Wells, 8 Mich. 104; Van Auken v. Monroe, 38 Mich. 725.

¶ 31. Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis. [The disposition of the law is stronger and more powerful than that of man.]—Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 Mich. 78.

¶ 32. Generalia specialibus non derogant. [Things general do not derogate from things special.]—Regents of University v. Auditor-General, 109 Mich. 134.

¶ 33. He who acts by or through another acts himself, see post, "Qui facit per alium, facit per se."

¶ 34. He who comes into equity must come with clean hands.—Applied in Lowes v. Lowes, 127 Mich. 307. See also Equity

§ 6. He who comes into equity must come with clean hands, and keep them clean.—Van Voorhis v. Van Voorhis, 94 Mich. 60. One who asks for a discretionary writ must come with clean hands.—Board of Supervisors of Cheboygan County v. Supervisor of Township of Mentor, 94 Mich. 386. Application of clean hands maxim in mandamus cases, see Mandamus § 10.

¶ 35. He that committeth iniquity shall not have equity.—Morley Bros. v. Stringer, 133 Mich. 690. See also Equity § 5.

¶ 36. He who seeks equity must do equity.—Wallace v. McBride, 70 Mich. 596; Malone v. Danforth, 137 Mich. 227; Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 137 Mich. 587. See also Equity § 4. "He who seeks equity must do equity" applied to a suit to set aside a deed to a son upon condition of support for the father for life after the death of the son leaving a widow.—Coe v. Dickerson, 129 Mich. 61. He who seeks equity must do equity does not apply on the law side so as to dispense with legal grounds for denying an asserted right.—Wheeler v. Dime Savings Bank, 116 Mich. 271.

¶ 37. He who keeps silent when he should speak will not be permitted to speak when he should be silent.—Michigan Shingle Co. v. State Investment & Ins. Co., 94 Mich. 389. Application of rule to raise estoppel, see Estoppel § 32.

¶ 38. He who sows shall reap.—McDaniels v. Walker, 44 Mich. 83, and see Lucas v. Parks, 84 Mich. 202.

¶ 39. Id certum est quod certum reddi potest. [That is certain which may be rendered certain.]—Paddack v. Pardee, 1 Mich. 421; Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70; Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 463; Lungerhausen v. Crittenden, 103 Mich. 173, 174; Auditor-General v. Ayer, 109 Mich. 694, 697.

¶ 41. Ignorantia legis neminem excusat. The general rule that ignorance of the law excuses no one and that a mistake in a matter of law is no protection is without exception as applied to the general laws of the country and one's rights or duties as defined by them.—Parks v. Brooks, 188 Mich. 645. For applications of this maxim, see Crimes § 15; Evidence §§ 47, 48; Mistake.

¶ 43. In pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis. [When the parties are equally in the wrong, the condition of the possessor is better.]—Bank of Michigan v. Niles, 1 D. 401.

¶ 44. In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis et possidentis. [Where both parties are equally in fault, the condition of the defendant is preferable.] Thurston v. Prentiss, 1 Mich. 193; Edwards v. Michigan Tontine Inv. Co., 132 Mich. 1. In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis, applied see Contracts § 89 et seq.; Fraud § 85. In pari delicto, rule of equity as to persons in equal wrong, see Equity § 5.

¶ 45. In traditionibus chartarum, non quod dictum, sed quod factum est, inspicitur. [See "In traditionibus scriptorum chartarum, non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum factum est, inspicitur"—In the delivery of writings (deeds), not what is said, but what is done, is to be considered.]—Dawson v. Hall, 2 Mich. 390.

¶ 46. It is equitable that one should reap what he has sown, see Equity ¶ 39, and see ante "He who sows shall reap."

¶ 47. "Laches should be used as a shield and not as a sword," see Equity ¶ 206.

¶ 48. The law never requires impossibilities. [See "Lex non cogit ad impossibilia"—The law requires nothing impossible.]—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Child, 70 Mich. 163; Giddings v. Secretary of State, 93 Mich. 1, and see also Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 428.

¶ 49. Modus et conventio vincunt legem. [The form of agreement and the convention of the parties overrule the law.]—Mandelbaum v. McDonell, 29 Mich. 78.

¶ 50. Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem. est audiendus. [No one alleging his own turpitude is to be heard as a witness.]—Orr v. Lacey, 2 D. 230.

¶ 54. Nemo est hæres viventis. [No one is an heir to the living.]—Lewis v. Nelson, 4 Mich. 630; Ready v. Kearsley, 14 Mich. 215; Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 Mich. 236.

¶ 56. No one shall be twice vexed with the same cause. [Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa.]—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217; Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49; Dutton v. Shaw, 35 Mich. 431.

¶ 59. Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. [All things are presumed against a wrongdoer.]—Bethel v. Linn, 63 Mich. 464; Hance v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 70 Mich. 227. See also maxim following this.

¶ 60. Omnia præsumuntur in odium spoliatoris.—In re Estate of Lambie, 97 Mich. 54; Walterhouse v. Walterhouse, 130 Mich. 89. Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorum, applied, see Evidence § 64. See also maxim preceding.

¶ 61. Omnia præsumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta; omnia rite esse acta præsumuntur. [All things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done.] See Evidence § 34 et seq.; Indictment § 136.

¶ 62. Omnis definitio in jure periculosa est; parum est enim ut non subverti posset. [Every definition in law is perilous, for it is within an ace of being subverted.]—Hall v. City of Ionia, 38 Mich. 493.

¶ 65. Quando res non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. [When a thing is of no force as I do it, it shall have as much as it can have.]—Thayer v. McGee, 20 Mich. 195.

¶ 66. Qui facit per alium, facit per se. [He who acts by or through another acts himself; i. e., the acts of an agent are the acts of the principal.]—Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351; Ætna Live Stock Fire & Tornado Ins. Co. v. Olmstead, 21 Mich. 246. Qui facit alium facit per se, applied. See Agency, II.

¶ 67. Qui hæret in litera, hæret in cortice. [He who adheres to the letter adheres to the bark.]—Smith v. Barstow, 2 D. 155.

¶ 68. Qui per alium facit, seipsum facere videtur. [He who does anything through another is considered as doing it himself.]—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199. See ante "Qui facit," etc.

¶ 69. Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. [Anyone may renounce a law introduced for his own benefit.]—People v. Johr, 22 Mich. 461.

¶ 71. Respondeat superior. [Let the principal answer.]—De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368; Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 519; City of Detroit v. Corey, 9 Mich. 165; Bath v. Caton, 37 Mich. 199; Boyd v. Labor liens on logs and forest products, see Forestry, III.
Liens of laborers on railroads, see Railroads, VI.
General provisions as to mechanics' liens, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14796-14826.

¶ 1. The doctrine upon which mechanics' liens are founded is the consideration of natural justice, that the party who has enhanced the value of property by incorporating therein his labor or materials shall have a preferred claim on such property for the value of the labor or materials.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 2. The Mechanics' Lien Law protects those who are entitled to protection, but it is not intended to protect materialmen and contractors in perpetrating wrongs against the owner of the property.—Frohlich v. Klein, 160 Mich. 142.

¶ 3. From the mere facts that a debtor owes a bill, and should pay it, it does not follow that his property is subject to a lien; and a lien will not be established unless the creditor has complied with the statute.—Battle Creek Lumber Co. v. Poland, 150 Mich. 690.

§ 2. Construction and interpretation of lien laws.

Constitutionality of lien statute as affecting decree declaring lien, see post § 60.
Due process of law in the Mechanics' Lien Law, see Constitutional Law § 149.
Validity of law as impairing homestead rights, see Constitutional Law § 290.
Provisions as to the manner in which the statute to be construed, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14822.
Provisions as to construction of terms "owner," "part-owner," "lessee," "materialman" and "laborer," see Comp. L. 1915, § 14824.

¶ 4. As the statute looks to somewhat summary proceedings in relation to real property, all matters of substance, and proceedings essential to the security of rights and titles, should be strictly adhered to.—Willard v. Magoon, 30 Mich. 273.

¶ 5. The statute providing for these liens is in derogation of the common law, must be strictly pursued, and cannot be extended beyond its terms.—Waggar v. Briscoe, 38 Mich. 587.

¶ 6. As the statute providing for the establishment and enforcement of liens of mechanics, etc., is in derogation of the common law, it is to be construed strictly; the rights given by it cannot be extended; and those who claim benefits under it must bring themselves within its provisions.—Peninsular General Electric Co. v. Norris, 100 Mich. 496; Hannah & Lay Merc. Co. v. Mosser, 105 Mich. 18; Sterner v. Haas, 108 Mich. 488.

¶ 7. Mechanics' liens are in derogation of the common law, depending for their existence wholly upon the statute, and therefore, upon the question whether a lien attaches at all, a strict construction of the statute is proper; but, after the lien has once attached, a liberal construction should be put upon the statute, for the purpose of fulfilling its objects.—Smalley v. Northwestern Terra-Cotta Co., 113 Mich. 141; Lacy v. Platt Power & Heat Co., 157 Mich. 544.

¶ 8. The statute providing for a mechanic's lien, Comp. L. 1897, § 10710 et seq., How. 2nd Ed., § 13766 et seq., being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed to the point where the lien attaches, but thereafter, because of its remedial nature, a liberal construction must be indulged in.—Burman v. Ewald, 192 Mich. 293.

¶ 9. The Mechanics' Lien Law was enacted for the benefit and protection of laborers and material men and should be construed liberally.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190

¶ 10. A material man's lien is in derogation of the common law and the essential requirements of the statute must be strictly observed.—Hall v. Erkfitz, 125 Mich. 332.

¶ 11. In asserting a mechanic's lien the statute must be followed in all essentials.—Kleinert v. Knoop, 147 Mich. 387.

¶ 12. Mechanics' liens are pure creatures of the statute, and courts will not extend them to cover cases not included in the statute.—Bauer v. Long, 147 Mich. 351.

¶ 13. Mechanics' liens are in derogation of the common law, depending for their existence wholly upon statutes, and therefore upon the question whether a lien attaches at all, a strict construction is proper.—Goodfrey Lumber Co. v. Kline, 167 Mich. 629.

¶ 14. Mechanic's lien statutes in derogation of the common law are strictly construed.—Wildey v. Gillett, 171 Mich. 153.

¶ 15. Lien statutes are innovations upon the common law over the rights of property not to be extended in operation and effect beyond their plain provisions, and provisions by which the lien attaches must be strictly construed.—J. W. McCausey & Co. v. Gittleman, 201 Mich. 8.

¶ 16. The exception to the repealing clause of Laws 1887, Act No. 270, relative to mechanics' liens, saved only existing liens, for which notice had been filed, or proceedings for their enforcement taken before the act took effect.—John Hanes & Co. v. Wadey, 7 Mich. 178.

Partial or defective performances as affecting rights to lien, see post § 8.
Parties to foreclosure of lien, see post § 4

¶ 17. One who furnishes materials for the completion of a partly finished building to one who has no legal title is not a contractor for the erection of a "new building" within Mechanics' Lien Law, § 3 (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 179).—Fuller v. Detroit Loan & Building Ass'n, 119 Mich. 71.

¶ 18. A party who deeded his mortgaged property to the mortgagee association, and obtained back a land contract representing the amount of the mortgage and a certain sum in addition, which latter was to be used in the completion of a building on the premises, was not the agent of the association, but contracted on his own behalf, and therefor one who furnished labor and material to the contract holder, was not a sub-contractor within section 1 of the Mechanics' Lien Law (Pub. Acts 1893, Act No. 199).—Fuller v. Detroit Loan & Building Ass'n, 119 Mich. 71.

See also post ¶ 185.

Waiver of lien, see post § 35.

Acceptance of note for amount due as waiver of lien, see post ¶¶ 180, 181.

¶ 19. A builder's lien would not attach—under the statute prior to the amendment of 1869—if the contract provided for securing the debt otherwise, as by mortgage upon the premises.—Barrows v. Baughman, 9 Mich. 213.

¶ 20. The seller's retention of title in an elevator installed in a building until it shall be paid for will not prevent him from enforcing a mechanic's lien for the price.—Warner Elevator Mfg. Co. v. Capitol Inv. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 127 Mich. 323.

¶ 21. That an electric company retains, until payment, title to an electric lighting plant which it places in a building, does not deprive it of its statutory lien or prevent its enforcing such lien.—Peninsular General Electric Co. v. Norris, 100 Mich. 496.

§ 5. Common law or possessory liens.

General law of liens, see Liens.

¶ 22. A builder under a contract cannot, as against the owner of the building, retain possession of it after the time has expired for the performance of the contract, and, after he has ceased work, to enforce payment of the contract price.—Beller v. Stange, 27 Mich. 312.

II. SERVICES, MATERIALS AND CLAIMS FOR WHICH LIEN MAY BE HAD.

Estoppel by agreement to assert that less or more is due, see also Estoppel ¶ 204.

¶ 23. Whether dredging out a slip and distributing the dirt for the construction of a wharf is work upon which a mechanic's lien could be based, quære.—Clark v. Raymond, 27 Mich. 456.

¶ 24. Where a subcontractor agreeing to construct caissons for an office building is compelled to pump water on account of the acts of independent contractors, he is entitled to recover for such work in a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien.—Vaughan v. Ford, 162 Mich. 37.

§ 7. Delivery and application of material or services to building or land.

See also post ¶ 39.

¶ 25. It is not the delivery to the contractor which gives the seller of materials to be used in the construction of a building the right to file a lien, but the delivery to the owner.—North v. Globe Fence Co., 144 Mich. 557.

¶ 26. In order to establish a mechanic's lien, the material furnished must be shown to have been ordered and used in the building alleged to be subject to the lien.—Battle Creek Lumber Co. v. Poland, 150 Mich. 690.

¶ 27. There can be no enforcement of a mechanic's lien against a building for bricks not delivered to the owner and not used in the construction of the building.—North v. Globe Fence Co., 144 Mich. 557.

¶ 28. In computing the cost of a building in order to determine the proportion of the contract price due a lienholder, payments made by the owner for labor and material actually used in construction, though made without requiring the statement mentioned in Comp. L. 1897, § 10713, are proper items.—Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Cole, 151 Mich. 280.

§ 8. Claims for defective or partial performance.

Abandonment or nonperformance by contractor as affecting amount due subcontractors and materialmen, see also post § 33.

Cross-bill for damages for failure to perform the contract, see post § 48.
Delay in performance as waiving right to lien, see post ¶ 187.
Right to offsets for defective performance, see also post §§ 49, 61.
Allowance of offsets in the decree, see post § 61.
Sufficiency of evidence as to performance, see post ¶ 269.

¶ 29. A subcontractor cannot recover on a mechanic's lien for materials furnished which are not in accord with the plans and specifications of the contract.—Frohlich v. Klein, 160 Mich. 142.

¶ 30. Where a subcontractor acts in good faith and is unable to finish his subcontract because of the abandonment of the contract by the contractor, he is nevertheless entitled to a lien for the work done and materials furnished.—Zilz v. Wilcox, 190 Mich. 486.

III. ESTATES AND PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LIEN.

Right to enforce lien on exempt property, see Exemptions § 46.
Provisions as to property to which lien attaches, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14796.
Provisions as to lien upon buildings where the contracting party has no title to the land, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14798.
Liens for labor done or materials furnished to attach to building or other improvement for which they are furnished, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14804.
All the interest of owner, part owner or lessee, either legal or equitable, subject to lien, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14824.

¶ 31. A mechanic's lien attaches to an entire interest of the debtor in premises considered only as real estate, and not to chattels separated from it.—Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 Mich. 587.

¶ 32. Where a building is erected upon two lots treated as one parcel, a lien for lumber furnished therefor and used on both lots attaches to both.—Lamont v. LeFevre, 96 Mich. 175.

¶ 33. Where, under the Mechanic's Lien Statute, Act No. 17, Pub. Acts 1903, amending Comp. L. 1897, § 10710, a building is erected on a platted city block, the lien may attach not only to the lots on which the building stands, but also on other contiguous territory in the block necessary to the convenient enjoyment and use of the buildings.—Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co., 154 Mich. 448.

¶ 34. A factory was built upon certain lots in a block in a platted strip of ground. The purpose of the owners was to manufacture bricks from the sand lying on other contiguous lots owned by them, and then to sell the lots. A bill was brought under the Mechanic's Lien Statute, Act No. 17, Pub. Acts 1903, amending Comp. L. 1897, § 10710, to enforce a mechanic's and material man's lien. Held, the lien attached only to the lots upon which the building rested or covered in part, and not to the other contiguous lots.—Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co., 154 Mich. 448.

Priorities as between mechanics' liens and homesteads, see post § 15.
Contract or consent of spouse to lien on homestead, see post § 15.
Priorities as between mechanics' liens and homesteads, see post § 32.
Sufficiency of evidence to show property exempt as homestead, see post ¶ 268.
General law as to homesteads, see Homesteads.
Provisions as to lien on homestead, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14797.

¶ 35. The susceptibility to mechanics' lien claims of a lot on which improvements are to be made depends upon the fact of whether the lot is or is not a homestead, under the statute (Laws 1887, § 1) whereby the owner is not required to notify the contractor or material man of his claim of homestead.—Mills v. Hobbs, 76 Mich. 122.

IV. THE CONTRACT AND CONSENT OR PRIVITY OF OWNER.

Necessity that materials be delivered to owner, see ante § 7.
Provisions in contract as to liens, see post § 17.
Notice of claim to owner, see post § 18.
Showing as to contract or consent in affidavit or statement of lien, see post § 23.
Averments as to ownership of the property, see post § 46.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to the contract and consent, see post § 56.
Necessity that decree adjudge the existence of contract relations between the parties, see post § 60.
Adjudicating contract relation before establishing lien, see post ¶ 227.
General law of contracts, see Contracts.

¶ 36. A mechanic's lien for building materials can arise only on a contract made by the owner, part owner or lessee of the land to be affected; and cannot attach to anything besides his actual interest.—Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 Mich. 587.

¶ 37. One cannot at the time of contracting for building material, and by that act alone, impose a mechanic's lien against land upon which the building is to be put up, if he had then no legal or equitable title to it. —Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 Mich. 587.

¶ 38. The lien (under code of 1833, p. 406) of a mechanic or materialman, for labor or materials furnished in the construction of a building, attached only upon the interest of the person for whom it was erected; and did not encumber any pre-existing right or title of any other person. —Scales v. Griffin, 2 D. 54.

¶ 39. The contract must relate to and be performed upon the lands against which the lien is sought to be enforced. No lien arises under the statute in favor of parties who merely sell machinery or materials which may or may not go into a building, as the purchaser may determine.—Stout v. Sawyer, 37 Mich. 313; Coleman v. Stearns Mfg. Co., 38 Mich. 30.

¶ 40. The contract relation prescribed by the statute is a necessary prerequisite to the lien, and it must distinctly exist before, or at all events at the time when, the lien is sought to be instituted.—Willard v. Magoon, 30 Mich. 273.

¶ 41. A mechanic's lien cannot attach to a cistern built by A. for B. in C.'s ground under permission granted to B. by C.—Eaton v. City of Monroe, 63 Mich. 525.

¶ 42. A wholesaler who sells building material to a retail dealer in the usual course of trade, for future delivery without any knowledge or understanding that it is to enter into any particular building, is not entitled to a lien therefor on the building in which it is afterwards used, and for which it was in fact ordered by the dealer under contract with the owner.—Van Cleve Glass Co. v. Erratt, 110 Mich. 689.

¶ 44. Where defendant, the owner of a hotel, leases it for a term of five years and the lessee and sub-lessee make certain changes and repairs in the interior and defendant has nothing to do with the work except that he allows the sub-lessee $200 credit on the rent, the defendant not being a party to the contract is not liable in a mechanic's lien action.—Merrill v. Brant, 175 Mich. 182.

¶ 45. A mechanic's lien cannot be acquired on property under a contract entered into by one not authorized to act for the owner, and to which the latter was not a party. —John Wallace Sons Co. v. Wilkinson, 181 Mich. 693.

¶ 46. A mechanic's lien in favor of the vendor of materials cannot be predicated merely on the purchaser's statement that he has a house and is building an addition to it and wants the materials for that purpose.—People v. McAllister, 49 Mich. 12.

¶ 47. A promise by the owner to pay a subcontractor a balance due him does not establish a lien on the property in his favor which otherwise did not exist.—Delray Lumber Co. v. Keohane, 182 Mich. 17.

¶ 48. A mechanic's lien is not prevented because of the fact that the contract to erect a building refers merely to "ground situated," in a certain village, it appearing that the building was erected upon the only land owned by the persons contracting, and it was not necessary for a plaintiff seeking to enforce the lien to ask a reformation of the contract by inserting the proper description of the land therein.—Jossman v. Rice, 121 Mich. 270.

¶ 49. A material man in delivering material to the owner of a factory to be built on four lots, asked what was the security for his pay. The owner told him that the ninety or ninety-two surrounding lots owned by them ought to be enough to protect him. Held, this conversation did not amount to an extension, by contract, of the statutory lien to the contiguous lots.—Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co., 154 Mich. 448.

See also post ¶ 143.

To establish lien on homestead, see post § 15.

Evidence to show contract or consent of wife, see post § 56.

Dismissal for failure to show contract with or consent of wife, see post § 63.

Contract rights and liabilities of wife toward third persons, see Husband and Wife § 73.

Agency of husband for wife in general, see Husband and Wife § 96.

Conveyances of and charges on separate property, see Husband and Wife § 130.

¶ 50. Where husband and wife had been living in a building owned by her which was destroyed by fire, and he bought articles for repairing the building in his own name and on his own credit, it was held that no privity of contract existed between the wife and the vendors so as to authorize a lien against her property.—Willard v. Magoon, 30 Mich. 273.

¶ 51. Prior to the amendment of Comp. L. 1871, § 6789, by Laws 1879, Act No. 258 (How. St., § 8377), a wife's land was not bound for improvements made upon it on the credit of her husband, even though with her knowledge and consent.—Willard v. Magoon, 30 Mich. 273; Newcomb v. Andrews, 41 Mich. 518; Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389.

¶ 52. In a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, the fact that one claimant relied on the husband's representations and filed his claim against the husband and gave the husband the required notice will not defeat the lien against the property which is owned by the wife where both husband and wife attempted to defraud contractors by misrepresenting the true facts and where the husband is really the agent of the wife as undisclosed principal.—Frohlich v. Carroll, 127 Mich. 561.

Joint property rights of husband and wife, see Husband and Wife, II.

Provisions as to lien on property of husband and wife, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14797.

¶ 53. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10710, 10711, providing for mechanic's liens do not provide for a lien upon land owned by the husband and wife as tenants by the entirety where the contract was signed only by the husband.—Bauer v. Long, 147 Mich. 351.

¶ 55. It is only when land is owned by husband and wife by entireties, or when the land is held and occupied as a homestead, that a contract for a building thereon is required to be in writing and signed by both husband and wife, in order that a lien may attach to either land or building; and in every other case the contract for the improvement may be written or unwritten, expressed or implied.—Sheldon, Kamm & Co. v. Bremer, 166 Mich. 578.

¶ 57. Defendant contracted orally with complainant for material for a house to be built on lots not at the time owned by defendant. His wife did not join in the contract. Shortly thereafter the lots were conveyed by defendant and his wife so as to make them owners by entireties. Held, that under Comp L. 1897, § 10712, no lien attached to the land for the materials furnished.—Restrick Lumber Co. v. Wyrembolski, 164 Mich. 71.

¶ 58. Defendant contracted orally with complainant for material for a house to be built on lots not at the time owned by defendant. His wife did not join in the contract. Shortly thereafter the lots were conveyed to defendant and his wife so as to make them owners by entireties. After this, to secure a loan, defendant and his wife deeded the land away absolutely and took back a contract of purchase. Held, under Comp. L. 1897, § 10712, no lien attached to the land for the materials furnished.—Restrick Lumber Co. v. Wyrembolski, 164 Mich. 71.

¶ 59. A wife was the owner of land at the time her husband, who owned no interest in the land, made a contract for the erection of a building thereon. The wife did not join in the contract. Shortly thereafter said husband and wife became the owners of the land by entireties. Complainant subcontractor began to furnish materials after the title to the land was held by the husband and wife by entireties. Held, he was entitled to no lien for the materials furnished. (Hooker, J., dissenting.)—Sheldon, Kamm & Co. v. Bremer, 166 Mich. 578.

General law as to homesteads, see Homesteads.

¶ 60. A mechanic's lien will not bind the homestead unless it identifies the premises by written description.—Hammond v. Wells, 45 Mich. 11.

¶ 61. A lien will not attach to a debtor's homestead for building a house thereon under a written contract for furnishing material and building a dwelling-house, which does not in any way describe or specify what land the building is to be erected upon.—Hammond v. Wells, 45 Mich. 11.

¶ 62. A lien by contract to a builder for erecting a dwelling cannot be established on a homestead worth no more than $1,500 and held by a man and his wife, if the wife does not sign the instrument declaring the lien.—Girzi v. Carey, 53 Mich. 447.

¶ 63. A married woman who buys an unimproved and vacant lot, intending, since she has no land besides, that she and her husband shall occupy it as a homestead; and who during the following year orally contracts for the erection of a house thereon, holds the property free from liability for mechanics' liens, since present intention to occupy land as a homestead, with present action to carry such intention into effect, constitutes a legal homestead, the lien-law of 1887 requiring a written contract to affect a homestead with a lien for improvements. —Mills v. Hobbs, 76 Mich. 122.

¶ 64. The Mechanics' Lien Law, Laws 1891, Act No. 179, does not apply to a written contract describing premises occupied as a homestead, but containing nothing to indicate an intention to create thereby a lien upon the homestead.—Burtch v. McGibbon, 98 Mich. 139.

¶ 65. An oral agreement by the owner of premises occupied as a homestead to pay for materials furnished a contractor, to be used in repairing and making additions to the dwelling house thereon, will not charge the homestead with a lien under the Mechanics' Lien Law of 1891.—Burtch v. McGibbon, 98 Mich. 139.

¶ 66. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10711, exempting homesteads from mechanics' liens unless for improvements made under written contract signed by both husband and wife, premises claimed as homestead are exempt only to the extent of $1,500, any excess over such amount being liable though the wife did not sign the contract.—McAllister v. Des Rochers, 132 Mich. 381.

¶ 67. Where a father promised to give his married son a lot if he would build a house thereon, and the son thereupon contracted for the erection of a house for the purpose of making a permanent home for himself and family, and after completion he occupied the house with his family as a home, owning no other house, lot, or premises, the house is devoted to homestead purposes, and the lot is not subject to a mechanic's lien incurred in the building where son's wife had not signed the contract, although she was fully cognizant of its execution and that it was being performed by the complainant but she had contributed no money to pay for it.—Holliday v. Matthewson, 146 Mich. 336.

¶ 68. Even though the land on which a house had been erected be a homestead and as such exempt from a mechanic's lien because the wife had failed to sign the contract under which a house had been erected thereon, the lien may attach to the house separately, and it may be sold and removed from the land, by virtue of Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10710, 10712, 10718, providing for a lien on new buildings.—Holliday v. Matthewson, 146 Mich. 336.

Services, materials and claims for which lien allowed, see also ante § 6.
Evidence as to extras and deductions, see post § 58.
Extent and amount of lien, see also post § 33.
Including claims for extras in affidavit or statement of lien, see post § 24.
Evidence as to extras and additional work, see post § 58.

¶ 72. A mechanic's lien suit declaring on performance of a contract in writing according to its terms will not permit a recovery for "extras" which are beyond those terms, and where the contract required all charges for extra work to be "agreed to in writing" which was not done; although the proof is such that the owner's demand for the extras coupled with a threat to abandon the contract if they were not furnished would have supported recovery had the plaintiff declared on a breach of the contract consisting in the contractor's not being allowed to perform according to its terms.—Gier v. Daiber, 148 Mich. 190.

¶ 73. Minor changes made by an owner in good faith, in completing a house after abandonment of the contract by the contractor will not operate as a waiver of the contract so as to require that it be disregarded in determining the amounts due subcontractors under the provisions of the lien law.—Delray Lumber Co. v. Keohane, 132 Mich. 17.

§ 17. Stipulation or provision as to liens.

¶ 74. A provision of an owner's contract with a contractor to the effect that the building must be delivered free of all mechanic's liens or any other claims chargeable to the contractor, does not prevent lien claimants from obtaining a lien as the contract was made in reference to the lien statute, expressly conferring the right to assert liens, and such right cannot be taken away from subcontractors, material men, or laborers, by a stipulation in the contract.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 75. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10710-10745, a direct lien in behalf of the persons entitled thereto, and not one by subrogation to the rights of the contractors, is provided, and they are therefore not bound by the stipulations of the original contract as to liens or the amounts to be paid thereon, except as to the amount of the contract price.—Vaughan v. Ford, 162 Mich. 37.

V. NOTICES, STATEMENTS OR OTHER ACTS TO INSTITUTE AND PERFECT.

§ 18. In general; notice to owner.

Necessity that claimant comply with statute, see also ante § 1.
Construction and interpretation of lien laws, see ante § 2.
Burden of proof as to compliance with statute, see post § 54.
Evidence as to notice, see post § 57.
Retrospective operation of notice, see post ¶ 154.
Filing lien claim with recorder of deeds, see post § 21 et seq.
Necessity of consent or privity of owner, see ante IV.
Object and effect of notice of lis pendens, see Lis Pendens § 3.
Necessity of statement of amount due, or of satisfaction of outstanding liens in order to sue on building contract, see Building Contracts, IX.
Provisions as to notice to owner, lessee, etc., see Comp. L. 1915, § 14796.

¶ 76. No notice of a lien for materials furnished is required where the contract to furnish them was made with the owner of the premises (Pub. Acts 1885, No. 216, § 3).—Lamont v. LeFevre, 96 Mich. 175.

¶ 77. Under the mechanics' lien law as it was in 1891 before the law of 1891 took effect and when Laws 1885, Act No. 216, was in force, no notice by a principal contractor was necessary; and therefore objections to a notice given are of no force.—McMonegal v. Wilson, 103 Mich. 264.

¶ 78. Where a lien for materials furnished in 1887 had, under the Mechanics' Lien Law of 1885, attached without notice or enforcement proceedings, it was not avoided by the act of 1889 (How. St., § 8398c) requiring filing of notice within sixty days; but the filing in 1890 of a statement according to the law of 1885 was sufficient.—Kirkwood v. Hoxie, 95 Mich. 62.

¶ 79. The proviso attached to Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199, § 1, that notice shall be served upon the owner by persons furnishing material or labor, does not introduce a necessary condition precedent to the attaching of a lien, but is designed for the protection of the sub-contractor or laborer, enabling him, in case the contractor's sworn statement does not embody his claim, to place on the owner the risk of payments made to the original contractor.—Smalley v. Ashland Brown-Stone Co., 114 Mich. 104.

¶ 80. A plumber and gas-fitter, who furnishes the necessary materials and labor for plumbing, roofing, steam heating, and electric wiring a building, is a contractor, within the meaning of the statute (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 4) requiring notice to the owner and not a material man, although an aggregate price for the work and material furnished was not agreed upon.—Sterner v. Haas, 108 Mich. 488.

Effect of making payments to contractor in absence of required statement, see post § 37.
Evidence as to statement of claims, see post § 57.
Provisions as to statement of names of and amounts due subcontractors, laborers and materialmen, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14799.

¶ 82. Mechanics' Lien Law, § 4 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179) expressly requires a contractor to furnish to the owner, before suing to enforce a lien, a sworn statement giving the names of all laborers and materialmen under his contract.—Sterner v. Haas, 108 Mich. 488; Martin v. Warren, 109 Mich. 584; Wiltsie v. Harvey, 114 Mich. 131; Dittmer v. Bath, 117 Mich. 571.

¶ 83. A failure to comply with the requirement of Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 4, that a contractor shall give the owner a statement of names of laborers and materialmen with the amounts due them is not excused by the fact that all material and labor has been paid for, and that such statement has never been requested by the owner. If a waiver can ever aid the contractor, as against this express provision,—a point not determined,—it can only be under circumstances amounting to an estoppel.—Sterner v. Haas, 108 Mich. 488.

¶ 84. A contractor is not relieved from furnishing to the owner a sworn statement of labor and material claims required by provisions of Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 4, by the fact that the sixty days after full completion of the work limited for the filing of liens by subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen, have expired at the time he files his bill.—Martin v. Warren, 109 Mich. 584.

¶ 85. An adverse lienor is entitled to assert the invalidity of a mechanics' lien because of a failure to serve upon the owner the statutory statements, although a bill to enforce such lien has been taken as confessed by the owner.—Wiltsie v. Harvey, 114 Mich. 131.

¶ 86. The provision of Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 4, that the contractor shall have no right of action or lien against the owner on account of his contract until he shall have furnished the statutory statement as to the amounts due to subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen, extends to actions upon the contract, where no lien has been effected, as well as to those brought to enforce a lien.—Barnard v. McLeod, 114 Mich. 73.

¶ 87. The failure of a subcontractor to serve upon the owner of the premises a detailed statement of his claim for material within ten days after the same was furnished, as provided by Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 1, would not relieve the owner from liability therefor, where he paid to the contractor the full contract price without requiring of him the sworn statement as to the claims of subcontractors, laborers, and material men, provided for by section 4.—Blitz v. Fields, 115 Mich. 675.

¶ 89. A contractor (as distinguished from a materialman) who has failed to comply with section 4 of the Mechanics' Lien Law (Comp. L. 1897, § 10713) requiring service of notice on the owner stating the names of subcontractors, laborers or material men, is not entitled to a mechanic's lien, although no parties other than the contractor complainant and the defendant are interested, labor having however been expended on the premises.—Kerr-Murray Mfg. Co. v. Kalamazoo Heat, Light & Power Co., 124 Mich. 111.

¶ 90. A delay in serving upon the owner a sworn statement of the number and names of every subcontractor or laborer and of every person furnishing materials, with the amount due or to become due for work done or material furnished as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 10713, until after the time within which he might file his lien in the office of the register of deeds, under section 10714, is not fatal to the lien, where both were done within the statutory period, it being unimportant that the statement was filed after the claim was filed, inasmuch as no lien attached by the filing of the claim and it did not become effective until the statement was served.—Holliday v. Matthewson, 146 Mich. 336.

Provisions as to furnishing upon demand statement of work and materials, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14803.

¶ 92. Failure to comply with Lien Law § 8 (Comp. L. 1897, § 10717), which requires a lienor to furnish the owner within five days, after demand therefor, a written statement of his claim under penalty of forfeiture of his lien, results in forfeiture of the lien though the owner is not prejudiced by such failure.—Frohlich v. Beecher, 139 Mich. 278.

¶ 93. Comp. L. 1897, § 10717, relating to the furnishing of an itemized statement of a claim of lien has no application to proceedings after a bill of complaint to enforce the lien has been filed, and subpoena has issued, as provided in section 10719, and failure to furnish such a statement on demand made after the institution of suit and issuance of subpoena does not forfeit the lien.—Rohde v. Weinberg, 156 Mich. 318.

§ 21. Filing affidavit or statement of lien or demand.

Assignability of lien claims prior to filing of statement, see post § 34.
Waiver and loss of lien, see also post § 35.
Evidence as to filing of statement of claim, see post § 57.
Priorities as affected by filing of statutory claim to lien, see post VI.
Provisions as to filing statement with register of deeds, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14800.

¶ 94. Comp. L. 1871, § 6790 (How. St., § 8378) requires one who seeks to enforce a mechanic's lien for material furnished to file an affidavit of the amount due within thirty days after furnishing the material, and also proof of service of notice of the lien. If he does not, it is provided that the lien shall cease as to all persons except the owner of the premises. It is further provided by Pub. L. 1879, Act No. 258, that the lien shall not continue more than sixty days after the filing of the affidavit of amount due, unless proceedings to enforce the lien have been begun. Held, that if no affidavit is filed at all, the lien will be lost after ninety days have passed since the material was supplied.—Comstock v. McEvoy, 52 Mich. 324.

¶ 95. The word "due," as used in Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 5, requiring a subcontractor who wishes to avail himself of the statute to file with the register of deeds a true statement of the demand due him, may be construed, in view of other provisions of the act for the enforcement of claims not presently due and payable, as synonymous with "owing," and, so construed, justifies the statement of a claim, evidenced by notes not due when the statement is filed, as an amount "justly and truly due."—Smalley v. Ashland Brown-Stone Co., 114 Mich. 104.

¶ 96. The sworn statement required by § 5 of the Mechanics' Lien Act (§ 10714, Comp. L. 1897, § 13770, How. St., 2nd Ed.), need not be given by a contractor who executes a bond under the provisions of a building contract waiving such requirement if security be given.—Maurer v. School Dist. No. 1, 186 Mich. 223.

Time to file statement of amounts due subcontractors and material men, see ante § 19.

Time to serve copy of claim or statement, see post § 28.

Evidence as to time of filing claim, see post § 57.

¶ 97. A mill built by complainant, upon trial, proved unsatisfactory to the owners, and a memorandum was furnished of the alterations required to perfect the work. A settlement was then had wherein a deduction was made from the contract price for the payment of a millwright, who was to be engaged by the owners to place additional machinery and make specified alterations. At the same time complainant gave a paper reciting the receipt of certain notes in full settlement for all claims accruing through the furnishing of machinery and labor for the mill, and agreeing, in consideration of such settlement, to furnish a stand of 9x24 rolls in exchange for the stand of 9x18 rolls originally furnished. Thereafter the order was changed to 9x30 rolls, the owners to pay the difference in price, and the rolls were supplied accordingly. Held, that the furnishing of the last rolls, and the work done by the millwright in setting them up, were pursuant to a new contract, an the time for filing a claim of lien under th original contract was not thereby extende —Noye Mfg. Co. v. Thread Flouring Mil Co., 110 Mich. 161.

¶ 98. The lapse of a day between th date and the filing of an affidavit and clai of lien, under Mechanics' Lien Law, § will not invalidate the lien or the notice.- Fairbairn v. Moody, 116 Mich. 61.

¶ 99. The Mechanics' Lien Law, § 5 (Pu Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pu Acts 1893, No. 199), providing that a ver fied statement of lien shall be filed withi sixty days from the date on which the la of the materials shall have been furnishe refers to the date when the last of the m terials shall have been furnished to t owner, or delivered at the building, and n when the material was delivered to a co tractor at his yard, as where stone was d livered to a contractor's yard to be dresse and afterwards delivered at the owner building.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 19

¶ 100. A lien claimant who furnishe brick for a building under a contract, t brick being delivered from time to time, required in the progress of the work, entitled to a lien where his statement claim was filed within sixty days after t time of the furnishing of the last materia the contract being continuous.—Smalley Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 101. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10714, upo a contract for delivery of a specified amou of material, delivery of additional items t the same party under separate contrac may be included in the whole claim and lien need not be filed within sixty days aft furnishing each item.—Union Trust Co. Casserly, 127 Mich. 183.

¶ 102. Where materials for the constru tion of a building were furnished on a ce tain date to the contractor, but were nev delivered at the building and therefore n used in the construction thereof, and th were sold to a third person in the empl of the owners of the building, the date furnishing this particular material cann be considered the last date of furnishi from which the time for filing a mechanic lien begins to run.—North v. Globe Fen Co., 144 Mich. 557.

Service of copy of claim or statement, s post § 28.

Sufficiency of statement to identify proper upon which lien claimed, see also po § 57.

General law as to affidavits, see Affidavit

¶ 103. The affidavit of a claimant und the Mechanic's Lien Law (Laws of 1885, A

No. 216) purports to be by a principal contractor and not a material man, where it averred that the claimant furnished certain labor and material in and for building a house situated on a designated lot, in pursuance of a contract made with the owner of the lot, naming him; that there was due to the claimant therefor, from said owner, over and above all legal set-offs, the sum of $200, balance due on such contract, and the sum of $395, making the total sum of $595, for the value of extras done on said house under such contract, and damages suffered by deponent by reason of the failure of the owner to comply with said contract. —McMonegal v. Wilson, 103 Mich. 264.

¶ 104. Where the land against which a lien is sought to be enforced is imperfectly described in the statement or claim of lien, but the building erected thereon is accurately described, the lien will be held good as against the building alone, under Laws 1893, Act No. 199, § 9, subd. 4, which provides for a lien against the building alone.—Hannah & Lay Merc. Co. v. Mosser, 105 Mich. 18.

¶ 105. An erroneous statement in an affidavit for a mechanic's lien as to the time when the first item and the last item were furnished is not prejudicial where there is no claim that the last item was furnished more than 60 days prior to filing notice of lien.—Union Trust Co. v. Casserly, 127 Mich. 183.

¶ 107. Where the affidavit for a mechanic's lien conforms to the statute, and substantially to the form given therein it will be considered sufficient; hence an affidavit that does not state that the material was furnished in pursuance of a contract with the principal contractor or any other person but does set out that the material was furnished for altering and improving the premises, and that the person named as owner was informed and advised that the materials furnished to the contractor were to be supplied by the affiants, is sufficient. —Kleinert v. Knoop, 147 Mich. 387.

¶ 108. A notice of a claim of lien for materials furnished for the building of a house stated that the furnishing of such materials was begun "on or about" the twenty-sixth day of October, 1905, and that the last of such materials were furnished "on or about" the third day of March, 1906. The complaint alleged that claimant served such notice upon the thirtieth day of April, 1906. Held, under section 10714, Comp. L. 1897, that the date of furnishing materials stated in such notice was not sufficiently definite to entitle claimant to a lien.—Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Kline, 167 Mich. 629.

¶ 109. A statement of a mechanic's lien which gives the initial of the Christian name of the owner of the property instead of the full Christian name is sufficient where there is no dispute as to the identity of such person.—Hicks v. Finbarg, 189 Mich. 332.

¶ 110. A contractor's statement of the amount due him is sufficient under Comp. L. 1897, § 10714, How. 2nd Ed., § 13770, although it does not contain the names of former employees or the names of persons who have furnished materials unless some amount is due them.—Halpin v. Garman, 192 Mich. 71.

¶ 111. A claim for a mechanic's lien is fatally defective where it fails to state the name of the owner, part owner and lessee, if known, and resort may not be had to extrinsic evidence.—John F. Noud & Co. v. Stedman, 193 Mich. 459.

¶ 112. A claim for a mechanic's lien which states "that he entered upon the performance of his contract on or about the 19th day of December, 1911, and the last thereon on the 17th day of December, 1912," sufficiently sets forth when labor and materials were furnished, as the last date is more important, and, where it is stated definitely, a claim should not be declared fatally defective because the first date is stated too generally.—John F. Noud & Co. v. Stedman, 193 Mich. 459.

Services, materials and claims for which lien allowed, see ante § 6.
Extent and amount of lien in general, see post § 33.
Amount of recovery in proceedings to enforce lien, see post § 61.

¶ 113. By filing a claim of lien for over $900 when it should have been for about $700, knowing that deductions in amounts shown by the contract should be made,—the only excuse being that claimant's attorney who had the contract is away, and no effort being made to get the duplicate thereof,—one loses his lien.—Gibbs v. Hanchette, 90 Mich. 657.

¶ 114. Where, through an honest mistake, the statement of lien mentions but one contract instead of two and by that error claims too much, or where there is a failure of proof as to a part of the amount claimed, the lien is not lost.—Lamont v. LeFevre, 96 Mich. 175.

¶ 115. Inasmuch as the statute requires parties to file "just and true statements of the demand, over and above all legal set-offs," a statement which is largely excessive must be treated as insufficient; and the inclusion of speculative items is not allowed.—Brennan v. Miller, 97 Mich. 182.

¶ 116. Including in a claim for lien of damages, also one for extras larger than can be justified, but without fraudulent intent will not invalidate the lien.—McMonegal v. Wilson, 103 Mich. 264.

¶ 117. A material-man, who had sold to a contractor $60 worth of material to be used for purposes other than those of the contract, credited generally on the contractor's account a $75 payment made by him the same day that he received a large sum from the owner. The material-man afterwards sold to the contractor other material to be used outside of the contract. After the contractor had absconded, the material man, in making up his lien account, at first credited the full $75 thereon, but afterwards changed the credit so as to discharge all of the items for material used outside of the contract, leaving but said $15 credited to the contractor in the statement or claim of lien, and in this form swore to the account as correct in all particulars. Held, an attempted fraud upon the owner which destroyed the lien.—Hannah & Lay Merc. Co. v. Mosser, 105 Mich. 18.

¶ 118. A claimant under the Mechanics' Lien Law is not deprived of the benefit of the statute because he included in his statement of lien items for which he had no right to charge, where such action was the result of an honest mistake on his part.—Scheibner v. Cohnen, 108 Mich. 165.

¶ 119. The lien of a mechanic will not be invalidated by reason of his claiming too great a sum in his statement of claim, unless the misstatement is intentional.—McMonegal v. Wilson, 103 Mich. 264; Fairbairn v. Moody, 116 Mich. 61.

¶ 120. A claim of lien, for material such as stone supplied to an owner may be reduced by the court, by deducting the value of stone not used in the building, as the Mechanic's Lien Law (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179 as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), provides for a lien for materials or labor because of the fact that the value of the property to which they had been applied has been increased.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 121. A claim for mechanic's lien amounting to $1,938, and allowed in the sum of $760, does not show bad faith where it includes $716 worth of material on hand at the time the building was stopped, through oversight a credit of $75 was not made, and the circuit judge disallowed certain items of extras and differed from the complainant's estimate of the cost of completion of the building.—Hulburt v. Just, 126 Mich 337.

¶ 122. An over-statement by a few dolla in the affidavit of the amount due to a m terial man is held honest error rather tha fraud defeating a right of lien.—Union Tru Co. v. Casserly, 127 Mich. 183.

¶ 123. A clerical error in the amount, the inclusion, through error, of an ite which did not properly belong, in a stat ment of a claim for a mechanic's lien, not such evidence of bad faith or such car lessness as to avoid the lien.—McAllister DesRochers, 132 Mich. 381.

¶ 124. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10714, r quiring a verified statement to be filed co taining a true and just account of the d mands over and above legal set-offs, the a davit must be made by one who knows t facts, and the law excuses only an hone mistake in stating the amount due.—J. Greilick Co. v. Taylor, 143 Mich. 704.

¶ 125. Where a material man furnish materials to a contractor for a certain buil ing, and at the same time the contract was erecting other buildings for which furnished materials, and the material m did not keep a separate account of the m terials furnished for each job, but his boo showed a general account, and no applic tion of the moneys paid until the contract became unable to pay, whereupon he ma an arbitrary estimate upon the particul building, which in fact proved too large 25 per cent and filed a sworn statement the lien, he in fact acquired no lien und Comp. L. 1897, § 10714, which requires a v ified statement to be filed which contains just and true account of the demands ov and above all legal set-offs.—J. E. Greili Co. v. Taylor, 143 Mich. 704.

¶ 128. A variance between the amount a mechanic's lien filed and the amount fou to be due will not operate to defeat t lien where the variance in such amounts small and there is no indication of bad fai —Grace Harbor Lumber Co. v. Ortman, 1 Mich. 429.

¶ 129. A contractor may include in t statement of account for a mechanic's li required under Comp. L. 1897, § 10714, Hc 2nd Ed., § 13770, the amounts due from h to subcontractors, where he is unaware the fact that they have been paid by t owner of the building.—Halpin v. Garman, 192 Mich. 71.

¶ 130. Where a contractor includes in his statement of claim for a mechanic's lien an amount of money loaned to the owner by indorsing notes of the owner so that the latter can obtain funds for the continuance of the building, and the owner is duly credited with every dollar paid to the claimant, the contention that the statement of claim is not a just and true statement of account of amount due the contractor, as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 10714, How. 2nd Ed., § 13770, is without merit.—Fox v. Benham Mfg. Co., 197 Mich. 637.

§ 25. ——Verification of statement or claim.

Tardy objection for verification and signature by agent, see Equity ¶ 476.

¶ 131. Failure to verify a notice of lien filed under the Mechanics' Lien Law of 1887 avoids subsequent proceedings to enforce the lien.—Lindsay v. Huth, 74 Mich. 712.

¶ 132. The statement of claim required to be filed with the register of deeds was verified by two affidavits, one preceding and the other following an account of the items of said claim. The first affidavit was sufficient in form, and was properly verified. The second affidavit was sworn to before an attorney-at-law, who was a member of the firm acting as claimant's solicitors in the attempted enforcement of the lien. Held, that this fact did not invalidate the first affidavit, even if the second affidavit should be treated as void because sworn to before said attorney.—McMonegal v. Wilson, 103 Mich. 264.

¶ 133. A claim of lien signed and verified by one member of a firm, in which he states that he is such member, giving the names of the remaining members; that he makes the affidavit for and on their behalf; that the firm furnished the material for which the lien is claimed in pursuance of a contract with the contractors; and that there is justly due said firm therefor a specified sum, for which said firm claims a lien,—properly shows the affiant's interest in and authority to make and verify said claim of lien.—Yeomans v. Parker, 105 Mich. 323. (The above is from the syllabus and states facts not appearing in the opinion.)

¶ 134. A statement of a mechanic's lien in favor of a copartnership is void where it was sworn to by one partner before another who was a notary, since a notary has no authority to administer an oath where the affiant is his copartner and the oath is in a matter in which the firm is interested.—Smalley v. Bodinus, 120 Mich. 363.

§ 26. ——Amendment of statement or claim.

¶ 135. Comp. L. 1897, § 10736, authorizing amendments to process, pleadings, and proceedings in actions to enforce mechanics' liens, does not authorize the amendment of a statement of lien by substituting the correct name of the contractor to whom plaintiff furnished materials, but relates only to the process, pleadings, or proceedings in actions to enforce the lien.—Lacy v. Piatt Power & Heat Co., 157 Mich. 544.

¶ 136. Where a second statement of lien relating to the same debt is filed by a building contractor within the statutory time because it is supposed the first statement has omitted an essential matter, and the claim is the same claim mentioned in the first statement, it is not error not to compel the contractor to elect under which of the statements he will claim.—Fox v. Benham Mfg. Co., 197 Mich. 637.

§ 28. Service of copy of claim or statement.

Service of statement of names of and amounts due subcontractors, laborers and material men, see ante § 19.

Waiver of service of statement, see also post ¶ 162.

Service of process generally, see Process.

Averments as to service of notice of lien, see post § 46.

Admission of personal service of lien statement by failure to answer, see Equity ¶ 608.

Provisions as to service of copy of statement on owner, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14801.

¶ 137. An affidavit attached to a claim of lien filed in the office of the register of deeds, in which the affiant states that he served a true copy of the foregoing statement or claim of lien by "delivering the same to him personally," is prima facie proof that such service was made upon the owner of the land upon which the lien is sought to be enforced, who is named as such in such claim or statement, when offered in evidence in connection with the claim to which it is attached.—Bourget v. Donaldson, 83 Mich. 478.

¶ 138. Where a land-owner, prior to the expiration of the time limited by Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 6, for the service upon him by posting of a copy of a claim of lien, and prior to the expiration of the time within which the claimant could file a new lien, signs an acceptance of service of a copy of such claim in lieu of such posting or other notice, he is estopped from objecting that the statutory service was not made.—Mouat v. Fisher, 104 Mich. 262.

¶ 139. A failure to serve personally, within the county in which the premises are, which are sought to be charged with a lien under the Mechanics' Lien Law of 1891, as amended in 1893 (Laws 1891, Act No. 179, as amended by Laws 1893, Act No. 199, § 6), upon the owner, part owner, or lessee of said premises, or, in case of his absence from said county, then upon his agent having charge of said premises within said county, a copy of the statement or claim of lien, or, in case neither of said persons can be found within said county, the nonservice of said copy by posting it in some conspicuous place on said premises, is fatal to said lien. Service by mail, or personal service outside of the county, is insufficient under the statute. —Hannah & Lay Merc. Co. v. Mosser, 105 Mich. 18.

¶ 140. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 6, providing for the service of a copy of the statement of lien upon the "owner" of the premises, does not apply to a mortgagee whose security is in the form of an absolute conveyance.—Kay v. Towsley, 113 Mich. 281.

¶ 141. Under Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 6, requiring lien claimants, except those dealing directly with the owner, to serve upon the owner a copy of their claim, but authorizing substituted service, where the owner cannot be found, on the agent "having charge of such premises within the county wherein the property is situated," mere proof of service upon an agent and bookkeeper in charge of the owner's office is insufficient.—Wiltsie v. Harvey, 114 Mich. 131.

¶ 142. Service of a copy of a claim of lien upon the owner on the day of its date, being the day before it is filed, is a substantial compliance with the provision of the statute requiring such service to be made within ten days "after" filing.—Fairbairn v. Moody, 116 Mich. 61.

¶ 144. Comp. L. 1897, § 10714, requiring a claim for mechanic's lien to contain the name of the owner, etc., if known, and § 10715 requiring a copy to be served on the owner, etc., and proofs of such service to be filed before proceeding to enforce the lien, refers to the owner at the time the claim for lien is made.—Waters v. Johnson, 134 Mich. 436.

¶ 146. For the purpose of determining whether a mechanic's lien attaches, Comp. L. 1897, § 10715, How. 2nd Ed., § 13771, relating to service of statement a claim on owner must be given strict construction, and personal service is imperative where possible. —Zilz v. Wilcox, 190 Mich. 486.

¶ 147. The provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 10715, How. 2nd Ed., § 13771, as to service of copy of statement or claim on the owner are not complied with so as to entitle a subcontractor to a lien, where the service was had by posting, when personal service could have been had on an agent of the owner.—Zilz v. Wilcox, 190 Mich. 486.

¶ 148. Service of a statement of claim for a mechanic's lien may be made upon the bankrupt owner in whose name the title stands of record, although a trustee in bankruptcy has been appointed.—Fox v. Benham Mfg. Co., 197 Mich. 637.

Provisions as to proof of service of statement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14801.

¶ 149. Failure of a claimant to file with the register of deeds, before commencing suit to enforce his lien, proof of service upon the owner of a copy of the statement of lien, will not invalidate the proceedings as to such owner, where all of the statutory steps to establish the lien have been regularly taken, and the owner's rights have been fully protected. The provision for such filing before suing is not mandatory.—Smalley v. Northwestern Terra-Cotta Co., 113 Mich. 141.

¶ 150. Proof of personal service of a copy of a subcontractor's statement or claim upon the owner on December 29th in a certain city is not impeached where the owner testified that he was in such city for a few days after Christmas and that he went away on December 29th.—Zilz v. Wilcox, 190 Mich. 486.

VI. PRIORITIES AND EXTENT; ASSIGNMENTS AND TRANSFERS.

§ 30. Priorities.

Doctrine upon which mechanics' liens are founded, see ante § 1.

Right to lien where the debt otherwise secured, see ante § 4.

Necessity of filing statement of lien claim, see ante § 21.

Estates and property subject to lien, see ante III.

Acts estopping subcontractor from asserting lien till other lienors are paid, see post ¶ 186.

Priority of garnishment over lien claim to which wife gave subsequent assent, see Garnishment ¶ 344.

Provisions as to priorities of mechanics' liens, see Comp. L. 1915, § 1484.

¶ 152. A mechanic's lien is terminable on redemption, and therefore gives no fixed right of possession for any particular period and does not concern third persons if not asserted by the parties.—Bodine v. Simmons, 38 Mich. 682.

¶ 154. A builder's lien will not attach to any interest in real estate which defendant did not have when materials began to be furnished (How. St. § 8377); nor will filing notice of the lien operate retrospectively; the lien will not, as against bona fide purchasers, attach to property that has been transferred to them before the filing of notice.—Sisson v. Holcomb, 58 Mich. 634.

¶ 155. Work on a bridge was sublet, it being agreed between the contractor and the subcontractor that fifteen per cent of the estimates should be withheld until completion of the work. The subcontractor borrowed money, giving as security a first charge on the drawback, and of this the contractor was notified. Held, that the contractor could pay for the labor and material necessary to protect and complete the work, even though the reserve should thereby be consumed; the contractor's lien on the reserve being prior to the lender's.—Fisken v. Milwaukee Bridge & Iron Works, 86 Mich. 199, rehearing denied 87 Mich. 591.

¶ 155a. The recording laws do not in terms apply to mechanics' liens and such liens have priority to the extent of the owner's interest only.—Peninsular General Elec. Co. v. Norris, 100 Mich. 496.

¶ 156. While the actual interest of a lessee in leased buildings is subject to a lien for an electric lighting plant placed in such buildings under contract with the vendor, yet such lien has not priority over the lien which the lessor, by virtue of his lease, has on the lessee's interest for money due the lessor, even though such lease was not recorded until after the accruing of such mechanic's lien.—Peninsular General Electric Co. v. Norris, 100 Mich. 496.

¶ 158. Where the owner of logs desiring to have same cut by a band-saw agreed with the owner of a mill to procure such a saw, title to remain in the former until the payment of the purchase price, the lien so created for the unpaid purchase price takes priority over liens of mechanics arising out of work performed in installing the saw in the mill.—Presque Isle Sash & Door Co. v. Reichel, 179 Mich. 466.

¶ 159. Where, at the time of filing a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien, the record title to the land appears to be in defendant, the lien cannot be defeated by the recording of a deed of the land to defendant's wife, which purports to have been executed prior to the filing of the bill.—Mouat v. Fisher, 104 Mich. 262.

See also post ¶ 254.

Decree making mortgage prior lien, see post § 60.

Lien and priorities of chattel mortgages generally, see Chattel Mortgages, III.

Mortgage liens in general, see Mortgages.

¶ 161. Under Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 9, subd. 3, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199 (Mechanics' Lien Law) providing that such liens shall be preferred to all other titles, liens, or encumbrances which may attach to or upon the building or land subsequent to the commencement of such building, a mechanic's lien takes precedence of a mortgage executed after the actual commencement of the building, although no part of the labor or materials for which the lien is claimed was performed or furnished until after the execution and recording of the mortgage.—Kay v. Towsley, 113 Mich. 281.

¶ 162. A builder's lien is not entitled, by virtue of the land-owner's waiving service of the sworn statement required by Mechanics' Lien Law § 4 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179) to priority over a mortgage executed before the completion of the building, where no notice was served before commencement of suit to enforce the lien. The result is that, under section 9 of the same act as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199, the lien terminates at the end of six months and is therefore at an end as against a mortgagee junior in time.—Dittmer v. Bath, 117 Mich. 571.

¶ 163. Under Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 9, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199, providing that mechanics' liens shall be preferred to all other titles, encumbrances, etc., which may attach upon buildings, etc., or to or upon the lands, subsequent to the commencement of such buildings, etc., a mortgage executed after the actual commencement of a building is subject to a mechanic's lien, though no part of the labor performed or material furnished was done or performed until after the execution and recording of the mortgage.—Kerr-Murray Mfg. Co. v. Kalamazoo Heat, Light & Power Co., 124 Mich. 111.

¶ 164. A lienor failed to file the statutory notice of his claim until after the owner had mortgaged the premises to another party. He had supplied laborers and material, and had paid the laborers, and settled for the material weekly. Before the giving of the mortgage he had stated an account with the owner as to the amount due him. Held, he was not to be preferred to the mortgagee.—Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co., 154 Mich. 448.

¶ 165. The owners of a building are not injured by having a mortgage given to the contractor made a prior lien on the premises, although the contractor defaults, and the building is completed at increased expense by the owners, where the owners were secured for the amount of the mortgage by a bond entered into as a part of the same transaction, and the bond was paid by the surety.—Stevens v. Garland, 198 Mich. 24.

¶ 166. The drawing of plans for a building is not the commencement thereof so as to give liens priority over a mortgage given to the contractor under Comp. L. 1897, § 10718, How. 2nd Ed., § 13774, providing that liens "shall be preferred to all other titles, liens or incumbrances which may attach to or upon such building, machinery, structure or improvement, or to or upon the land upon which they are situated, which shall either be given or recorded subsequent to the commencement of said building or buildings, erection, structure or improvement."—Stevens v. Garland, 198 Mich. 24.

¶ 167. Under Comp. L. 1915, § 14804, subd. 4, providing that liens for labor and material are subject to any prior recorded title, claim, lien, incumbrance or mortgage to or upon the land upon which the building or improvement belongs or is put, an assigned mortgage originally given by the owner to the contractor upon the premises where a building was to be erected and recorded before a building permit is issued or excavation begun for the building is a prior lien to the liens of those furnishing labor and materials for the construction of the building where there is nothing in the mortgage or the note that it was given for or had any connection with a building contract.—J. W. McCausey & Co. v. Gittleman, 201 Mich. 8.

Right to lien on homestead, see ante §§ 10, 15.

Nature and extent of homestead right, see Homesteads.

¶ 168. Where parties purchase premises for a homestead before contracting for building materials, and move upon them, before statement of mechanic's lien is filed, with the intention of living there, they thereby constitute them a homestead.—Lamont v. LeFevre, 96 Mich. 175.

¶ 169. Lien claimants are entitled to a mechanic's lien free from homestead rights on two houses erected on land adjoining the lot and house occupied by the owner as a homestead.—Frohlich v. Carroll, 127 Mich. 561.

§ 33. Extent and amount of lien.

Property to which lien attaches, see ante § 9.

Lien for extras, additional work and alterations, see also ante § 16.

Sufficiency of affidavit or statement of lien as to amount, see ante § 24.

Evidence as to the amount of claim, see post § 58.

Amount and limit of liability to subcontractors, laborers and material men, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14796.

¶ 170. Where the claims of subcontractors, material men, and laborers exceed the contract price, the amount for which a lien may be enforced by one who has received payments upon his claim, and who has estopped himself from claiming a portion of the balance, is limited to the amount in which his pro rata share of the whole exceeds the aggregate of the payments made and the sum he is estopped from claiming.—Fairbairn v. Moody, 116 Mich. 61.

¶ 171. Lien claimants are entitled to interest upon their claims from the time they fall due.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 172. Where a contractor has abandoned the construction of a house and it is completed by the owner with some minor changes, the subcontractors and material men are entitled to a lien for such portion of the amount of their claim accrued prior to the abandonment as the contract price is of the actual cost of constructing the house.—Delray Lumber Co. v. Keohane, 132 Mich. 17.

¶ 173. A claim for loss of rent caused by the failure of the contractor to perform will not be allowed where the owner had waived his right to insist upon the completion of the contract.—Kotcher v. Perrin, 149 Mich. 690.

¶ 174. A contractor constructing a house abandoned the job and left twelve unpaid creditors. Nine only of these filed liens

Some were already paid. Held, in foreclosing the liens, that the claims of all creditors for labor and materials should be included, in arriving at the cost of the house, and in determining the percentage each lienor was entitled to.—Frohlich v. Ashton, 159 Mich. 265.

¶ 175. Under a building contractor's agreement with defendant owner it was specified that if during the progress of the work defendant should wish to make any alterations or additions, the contractor should carry out such alterations and additions upon a basis of compensation to be agreed upon by himself and the owner. Held, the evidence having failed to show that the contractor had been guilty of fraud in obtaining an agreement for such extra compensation, a complainant who furnished materials to the contractor was entitled to a mechanic's lien on the extra work.—Busse v. Douglas, 165 Mich. 95.

¶ 176. A subcontractor agreed to construct the caissons for an office building at an excavation of 120 feet. An explosion of gas necessitated a change of plans, and the architect represented that under a new plan the amount of concrete required would be approximately the same, whereupon the subcontractor went ahead on the original terms. In a total of 170,837 cubic feet, the subcontractor supplied 1,049 cubic feet more than called for under the original plan. Held, in a suit to enforce his lien, that he was entitled to extra compensation for this excess. —Vaughan v. Ford, 162 Mich. 37.

¶ 177. Where a contractor abandons his agreement and the building is finished by the owner, the cost of the building should be reckoned by leaving out bills for labor and materials which are unpaid and for which no liens were filed, in fixing upon the proper division of the fund among the lienors.—Frohlich v. Ashton, 164 Mich. 132.

Validity of assignment of liens to combine in one action, see Champerty ¶ 8.

¶ 178. An assignment by a contractor to a third person of the moneys to become due upon the contract, with notice to the landowner of such assignment, will not deprive a subcontractor of his lien upon the premises under the mechanics' lien law, but such lien will be limited in amount to the sum actually due and owing to the contractor from such owner at the time of filing and serving the notice of lien.—Bourget v. Donaldson, 83 Mich. 478.

¶ 179. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10734, providing that "all liens or claims for liens which may arise under the terms of this act shall be assignable," a claim for labor or materials may be assigned though no statement of such claim has been made and filed.—McAllister v. DesRochers, 132 Mich. 381.

VII. WAIVER, DISCHARGE AND PAYMENTS.

§ 35. Waiver and estoppel.

See also ante ¶ 83.
Effect of other remedy or security, see ante § 4.
Burden of proof as to waiver, see post § 54.
Sufficiency of evidence to show waiver, see post ¶ 289.
Necessity of giving notice of claim to owner, see ante § 18.
Waiver of service of sworn statement of lien, see also ante ¶ 162.
Effect of failure to make statement of names and amounts due subcontractors and materialmen, see also ante § 20.
Effect of failure to file claim with register of deeds, see also ante § 21 et seq.
Effect of making excessive or erroneous claim for lien, see ante § 24.
General law of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 180. One waives his lien for materials furnished by taking for the amount due and for other indebtedness a note not payable until after the date before which a claim of lien must be filed. And no lien for the account included in the note can thereafter attach even though subsequently to the execution of the note complainant continued to furnish materials.—Blakeley v. Moshier, 94 Mich. 299.

¶ 181. Refusal to accept payment for materials furnished after taking a note which waived it as to prior materials waives right to a lien for the later ones.—Blakeley v. Moshier, 94 Mich. 299.

¶ 182. Where a lien for materials had become vested under the Mechanics' Lien Law of 1885, taking a personal judgment against the land-owner (which it was abortively agreed between the parties should be a lien) under the void act of 1887, did not waive such lien, it being apparent that waiver was not intended.—Kirkwood v. Hoxie, 95 Mich. 62.

¶ 183. The vendor's right to enforce a lien upon machinery furnished to the lessees of a mill is not lost by the action of his attorney in taking from the vendees a bill of sale of the machinery, where the attorney's authority to accept a bill of sale was conditioned upon his securing the right to remove the property, and the consent of the mill-owner to such removal was not obtained. —Marinette Iron Works Co. v. Cody, 108 Mich. 381.

¶ 184. The fact that a book account against a contractor contains other items of charge does not show exclusively that the material man intended to waive his right of lien against the owner of the building.—Union Trust Co. v. Casserly, 127 Mich. 183.

¶ 185. Before one entitled to a lien under the statute should be declared to have waived it, it ought to clearly and unequivocally appear that he has expressly waived it in compliance with Comp. L. 1897, § 10734, How. 2nd Ed., § 13790, providing that the taking of other security for the debt than the real estate shall not defeat or waive a lien under the act in the absence of express agreement that such taking of other security shall be a waiver.—Marquette Lumber Co. v. Albee, 196 Mich. 127.

¶ 186. Where a subcontractor guarantees the performance of the contractor's building contract, he is estopped from participating in the fund until the other lienors have been paid.—Frohlich v. Ashton, 164 Mich. 132.

¶ 187. A contractor does not waive his right to a lien upon the property because the contract progresses slowly, owing to the owner's lack of funds, and the work extends over a long time and is intermittent, where he acts in good faith and diligently pursues the remedy allowed by statute.—Fox v. Benham Mfg. Co., 197 Mich. 637.

¶ 188. A sub-contractor is estopped to assert a mechanic's lien as to payments that have been made by the owner to the contractor in reliance upon the sub-contractor's expressed desire that they be so made.—Fairbairn v. Moody, 116 Mich. 61.

¶ 189. Where a statement of lien is made, and proceedings commenced thereunder, but discontinued, and a second statement of lien is made, the first proceedings do not constitute an estoppel against the second, where the lienor has continued to work between the last day's labor as fixed by the first statement, and the last day as fixed by the second.—Dowd v. Dowd, 126 Mich. 649.

Necessity of averring demand for payment, see post § 46.
Evidence as to payments, see post § 58.
Acceptance of note for amount due as waiver of lien, see ante ¶ 180.
Right to lien as affected by discharge in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy § 10.
Accord and satisfaction between owner and lienor, see Accord and Satisfaction ¶ 16.

¶ 190. Where, upon a contractor's order in favor of a sub-contractor, a land-owner for whom a building is erecting writes, "Accepted as per above order, when A. H. Butts and William Wilson lien or garnishee is satisfied," such acceptance is subject to whatever sums the owner is required to pay to extinguish the liens of the persons named.—Tyler v. Stack, 103 Mich. 268.

¶ 191. In computing the amount due on a contractor's order in favor of a sub-contractor which the owner accepts upon condition that certain specified liens are satisfied the entire sum the owner is obliged to pay to satisfy such liens should be deducted from the face of the order, although, by reason of the insufficiency of the amount due the contractor to satisfy all liens upon the premises, the parties named in the order have been obliged to pro rate with subsequent claimants of liens.—Tyler v. Stack, 103 Mich. 268.

¶ 192. Complainant company decorated the walls of defendant's store and supplied and attached certain fixtures. It also furnished certain personalty in the way of movable furniture. Payment was made on the whole account in amount sufficient to cover the personalty. Held, complainant was entitled in a suit under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10710-10736, to establish a mechanic's lien for the sum owing for the decorations and fixtures.—Albert Gall Co. v. Dowagiac Gas Co., 160 Mich. 255.

Payments made to contractor upon request of subcontractor as affecting latter's lien, see ante ¶ 188.
Risk of payments to orignal contractor as affected by notice to owner, see also ante § 18.
Statements to owner of amounts due subcontractors, laborers and material men, see ante § 19.
Evidence as to payments made to principal contractor, see post § 58.
Provisions as to payments to original contractor, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14796.
Retention from money due original contractor amounts sufficient to pay sub-contractors, laborers and material men, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14799.

¶ 193. An owner who makes payments to a contractor without requiring of him the statement as to the amount due or to become due to material men, which, under Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, he may lawfully demand, does so at his own risk; and the fact that he believed at the time that moneys previously advanced by him to material men on the contractor's order had paid such claims in full will not relieve the property from a lien the material man for the balance due, there having been no misrepresentation on the part of the claimants.—Munroe v. Merrell, 113 Mich. 491.

¶ 194. Under Mechanics' Lien Law, § 1, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199, the owner is not protected in payments to the original contractor, though they equal the full contract price, and are distributed for labor and materials, unless the distribution is pro rata among all those entitled to the fund.—Fairbairn v. Moody, 116 Mich. 61.

strued Mechanics' Lien Law, § 1 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), where the owner of a building paid the contractor therefor the full amount of the contract price, including the amount due a sub-contractor which the owner believed had been paid but which the contractor had not paid, the sub-contractor is entitled, in a mechanic's lien suit by him against the owner, to recover only such proportion of the amount due him as the contract price bears to the sum of the contract price and such amount.—Blitz v. Fields, 118 Mich. 85.

¶ 196. Credit for payments made to the principal contractor where the latter was not required to furnish the sworn statement specified in Comp. L. 1897, § 10713, cannot be allowed in his favor as against the lien of a material man where the payments were not distributed pro rata among the subcontractors, laborers, and material men.—J. E. Greilick Co. v. Rogers, 144 Mich. 313.

¶ 197. The owner of a building on which has been placed a mechanic's lien by a material man cannot complain that he has been denied the right to recoup damages where such were based on payments made to the principal contractor for which he could not legally claim credit against the materialman.—J. E. Greilick Co. v. Rogers, 144 Mich. 313.

¶ 198. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199, differs from Pub. Acts 1887, No. 270 (How. St., § 8398a et seq.), previously held unconstitutional, in that the owner is fully protected from any breach of the contract, being entitled to recoup any damages which he may sustain by reason of any failure or omission of the contractor to perform his contract, by limiting the owner's liability to the amount of the contract entered into, and by providing for a safe way for the owner to make payments.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 199. The Mechanics' Lien Law (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), section 1, authorizing an owner to make payments to a contractor if distributed among laborers and material men, was enacted to insure payment to those who contributed to the construction of the building, and it is immaterial that the money paid by a contractor to laborers and material men was not the identical money received by the contractor from the owner.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 200. The Mechanics' Lien Law, § 1 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), expressly provides that contractors may furnish material and labor and have a lien therefor; and in the distribution of payments made by the owner, credit may be given to the contractor as a material man, especially as section 29 defines a material man to include "all persons by whom any materials are furnished in or for the building."—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 201. Under the Mechanics' Lien Law (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), an owner is entitled to be credited with money paid to the contractor and distributed to laborers and material men, but there is no pro rata distribution where all the laborers and some of the subcontractors are paid in full. The distribution of the entire fund is to be made among those who, at the end of the work, have claims for labor and material without regard to the time when they respectively earned their pay by doing their work or furnishing their material.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 203. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10713, How. 2nd Ed., § 13769, requiring a sworn statement of the names of subcontractors, etc., to be secured by the owner before making payment to the contractor, the owner is not protected in payments made to the principal contractor, in the absence of a statement on oath by the contractor showing the names of the subcontractors, etc., and such payments are made at the risk of the owner, and do not discharge liens, unless distributed by the contractor among the subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers, or, if distributed in part only, then to the extent of such distribution.—Stevens v. Garland, 198 Mich. 24.

¶ 205. A tender, sufficient in amount, will discharge a mechanic's lien for the repair of personal property; and, if not accepted, the creditor must thereafter rely upon the personal responsibility of his employer.—Moynahan v. Moore, 9 Mich. 9.

building, is entitled to such a proportion of his claims as the contract price is of the entire cost of the building where the contractor has been paid by the owner contrary to Comp. L. 1897, § 10713.—Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Cole, 151 Mich. 280.

¶ 207. A materialman who receives money from a contractor while a building is under construction which in the absence of instruction he applies to an old account, is not required to reduce his claim by these payments under a lien against the building.—Union Trust Co. v. Casserly, 127 Mich. 183.

¶ 208. The fact that a lien claimant accepts a contractor's note for the price of materials furnished does not estop him from asserting a lien.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 209. Under the Mechanics' Lien Law (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), where there is no pro rata distribution of funds by a contractor, a new computation must be made, in which all laborers and materialmen must be included, and if, on such computation, it is found that certain of them have been paid more than their pro rata share, the owners will be held liable for such over payments, and that amount added to their liability.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 210. A right to a mechanic's lien is not defeated because the claimant has failed to credit a payment of $15.00 on account and has included a small item for material which he never furnished because of defendant's failure to give him dimensions for manufacturing.—Frohlich v. Carroll, 127 Mich. 561.

¶ 211. Under the Mechanics' Lien Law where payments are made after a sworn statement by the contractor and there is a deficiency, the payments must be pro-rated among others not included in the statement who were known to the owner to have furnished materials.—Frohlich v. Carroll, 127 Mich. 561.

¶ 212. Where, after the owner has paid the greater part of the contract price to the principal contractor, without requiring from him sworn statements as to the liens of materialmen, and is afterwards compelled to complete the work in default of the contractor, the materialmen are entitled to receive such proportion of their claims as is measured by the ratio of the contract price to the actual cost of the work, as completed by the owner, the amount which the materialmen have already received from the contractor being deducted from their claims.—Kotcher v. Perrin, 149 Mich. 690.

VIII. FORECLOSURE AND ACTIONS ON DEBT.

A. IN GENERAL.

Amount necessary to jurisdiction in equity, see Equity § 16.

Affirmative personal decree on cross-bill to bill for injunction to prevent interference with completion after contractor's default, see also Equity ¶ 844.

Jurisdiction of justice of peace to enforce contractor's bond, see also Justice of the Peace ¶ 56.

§ 39. Actions on the debt.

¶ 213. An action at law by subcontractors to enforce the amount of a claim for work and labor will be postponed until the determination of a mechanic's lien suit in which a personal decree is sought, where, in the lawsuit, complainants had begun garnishment proceedings, and defendant had given a bond in double the amount claimed by complainants to release such garnishment proceedings, and to pay any judgment recovered by them.—Vaughan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 153 Mich. 478.

¶ 214. An action by the assignee of one who had contracted to erect several houses, to recover for one house built and accepted under the contract, and for work and material done and furnished for the others up to the time the owner prevented further performance of the contract, is an action upon the contract, within the scope of the lien law.—Barnard v. McLeod, 114 Mich. 73.

Postponement of action on the debt till termination of foreclosure proceedings, see ante § 39.

Discontinuance of proceedings as barring subsequent proceedings, see also ante ¶ 189.

Necessity and sufficiency of filed affidavit or statement of lien, see ante § 21 et seq.

Provisions as to enforcement of the lien, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14805 et seq.

¶ 215. Though a purely statutory lien must conform exactly to the statutory conditions, yet when it once attaches and is put in process of foreclosure, the proceedings, while in part definitely fixed, are largely left to the general course of practice, and no strained construction should be used to defeat them.—Sheridan v. Cameron, 65 Mich. 680.

¶ 216. Proceedings for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens upon a homestead for labor and materials furnished under a contract not signed by the wife must be taken under Comp. L. 1897, § 10369, which provides for the appraisal of the premises so as to ascertain the amount liable after the exemption of the homestead right of $1,500

¶ 217. The filing of a bill or petition, not the service of process, is the beginning of suit in the meaning of the mechanic's lien statute which requires proceedings to be begun within sixty days.—Sheridan v. Cameron, 65 Mich. 680.

¶ 218. The six months, within which proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien must be commenced in order to continue the same (Laws 1891, Act No. 179, § 9) must be computed from the filing in the office of the register of deeds of the statement or claim of lien to the date of the filing of the bill to enforce said lien, or the cross-bill for affirmative relief provided for by section 10 of the same law.—Hannah & Lay Merc. Co. v. Mosser, 105 Mich. 18.

¶ 219. Under the Mechanics' Lien Act (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10718, 10719) providing that liens shall continue for a year after a statement or account is filed, unless proceedings are begun to enforce the same, the rights of a complainant in a mechanic's lien suit cannot be affected by the failure to make the principal contractor a party until after the expiration of the year as the filing of his bill within the year was a commencement of the proceedings.—Casserly v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 157.

¶ 220. The question as to whether the statutory period for bringing in a new defendant in a mechanic's lien proceeding has expired can only be raised by such new defendant.—Casserly v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 157.

Burden of proof as to compliance with conditions precedent, see post § 54.

¶ 221. Where a building contract provides that the price for extras shall be settled by arbitrators unless agreed upon, the parties will be held to have provided their own forum to determine the value of such extras, and, until such value has been fixed by arbitration or agreement, the same is not due, and a bill will not lie to enforce a lien therefor.—Boots v. Steinberg, 100 Mich. 134.

¶ 222. A bill will not lie to enforce a mechanic's lien for the balance claimed to be due on a building contract, which provides that the work shall be done to the satisfaction of the owner or his superintendent as it progresses, and that it shall not be fully paid for until completed to the satisfaction of the owner, where it appears that the claim of the owner that the work has not been completed to his satisfaction has a substantial basis, and is not captiously made.—Boots v. Steinberg, 100 Mich. 134.

¶ 223. Where an adjoining owner has sued the contractor erecting a building, on an indemnity contract, the masonry subcontractor may bring his bill to enforce a mechanic's lien under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10710-10745, without awaiting the outcome of the suit.—Vaughan v. Ford, 162 Mich. 37.

General law as to venue, see Venue.

¶ 224. A bill to enforce a mechanic's lien under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10714, 10719, must be brought in the county where the real estate is located.—Prather Engineering Co. v. Detroit, F. & S. Ry., 152 Mich. 582.

B. PARTIES AND PLEADING.

Want of verification as affecting jurisdiction, see Courts § 39.

Persons entitled to lien, see ante § 3.
Parties to cross-bill to assert lien, see post § 48.
Objections as to parties, see post § 51.
Sureties on bond as parties defendant, see also post ¶ 303.
General law as to parties, see Parties.
Provisions as to parties in proceedings to enforce lien, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14805.

¶ 225. The receiver of the person who owns the property is a necessary party to a bill filed by a contractor to enforce a mechanic's lien.—Burk v. Muskegon Machine & Foundry Co., 98 Mich. 614.

¶ 226. One McConn made a contract to build a house for defendant's husband, and plaintiff furnished materials. Plaintiff sued the defendant owner of the house to enforce a mechanic's lien without making McConn a party, and a decree was entered in his favor. Held, the omission of the contractor as a party was a fatal defect, calling for reversal and a remanding, with permission to amend the bill.—Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Kline, 160 Mich. 565.

Amendments as to parties generally, see Parties.

¶ 227. In proceedings by subcontractors to enforce a mechanic's lien, the original contractors must be brought in as parties, since the contract relation and state of accounts between the defendant and the original contractors, and between the original and subcontractors, must be adjudicated before the lien can be established, and the rights and liabilities of the parties be ascertained.—Kerns v. Flynn, 51 Mich. 573.

¶ 228. It will be assumed that where a copartnership is claimant to a mechanic's lien that the name of the firm affords the necessary information to the owners, and a petition by a firm to intervene, under Comp. L. 1897, § 10719, which describes the claimant as "F. Bros." is not fatally defective but may be amended by adding the names of the members composing the firm.—Kleinert v. Knoop, 147 Mich. 387.

¶ 229. Where a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien is filed within the statutory period, an amendment bringing in a proper party may be made after the period has expired.—Prather Engineering Co. v. Detroit, F. & S. Ry., 152 Mich. 582.

¶ 230. Where a court of equity has jurisdiction of a property owner, a contractor, subcontractor and material men in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, it has power to bring in the sureties on the contractor's bond, and to determine the rights of all the parties in one proceeding.—C. H. Little Co. v. L. P. Hazen Co., 185 Mich. 316.

¶ 231. Laws 1891, Act No. 179, § 10, which provides that proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien shall be by bill in chancery, under oath, and that amendments may be made to such bill at any time before final order, does not divest the court of power to impose terms upon allowing a bill to be amended, on the day set for hearing, so as to introduce as co-defendant defendant's wife who is the owner of the land upon which stands the building whereupon the labor was performed. Terms held not an abuse of discretion.—Rugg v. Bassett, 101 Mich. 441.

Sufficiency of affidavit or statement of lien, see ante § 23.
Issues and variance, see post § 50.
Sworn bill or petition as evidence, see post ¶ 278.
General law as to equity pleading, see Equity, VII.
General law of pleading, see Pleading.
Necessity of averring leave to sue when suit is against receiver, see Receivers, IV, C.

¶ 233. Under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6789-94 (see How. St., §§ 8377-82), for the enforcement of mechanics' liens upon real property, a declaration that the contract was made with a particular party, and subsequently fully performed, would not comprehend the substance of the facts involved in the idea of a lien under said law, under which no lien will attach unless the contract be with the owner, part owner, or lessee. Simple performance of the contract is insufficient. It is a fatal defect not to show the interest of the contracting party in the land, and the defect will not be cured by an admission of ownership on the part of the respondent. Every fact essential to jurisdiction must appear on the record.—Clark v. Raymond, 27 Mich. 456.

¶ 234. In setting up the respondent's title to certain lands, in a petition for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien against the lands for materials supplied, it should be made to appear that the respondent had some interest in the lands at the time the materials were supplied or when the certificate of the lien was filed, and it is not sufficient to set forth only the state of the title at the point of time when the petition was filed.—Willard v. Magoon, 30 Mich. 273.

¶ 235. Where a bill to foreclose a mechanic's lien charges that notice of the filing of the statement of lien was given to the owner and to the receiver of its estate, the bill will not be held bad on general demurrer for failing to aver that payment of the claim was demanded before the bill was filed.—Steel Brick Siding Co. v. Muskegon Machine & Foundry Co., 98 Mich. 616.

¶ 236. The provision of Chancery Rule 91, permitting, in bills to foreclose mortgages, a general statement that certain defendants "have or claim some interest in the premises as subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers or otherwise," applies to bills to enforce mechanics' liens, such bills being strictly analogous to foreclosure bills.—Steel-Brick Siding Co. v. Muskegon Machine & Foundry Co., 98 Mich. 616.

¶ 237. A bill to enforce a mechanic's lien is bad on general demurrer if it fails to allege that the receiver of the owner's estate—who is a necessary party—is joined as defendant by leave of court.—Burk v. Muskegon Machine, etc., Co., 98 Mich. 614; Steel-Brick Siding Co. v. Muskegon Machine & Foundry Co., 98 Mich. 616.

¶ 238. A bill to enforce a lien under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199, § 1, is fatally defective if it fails to allege either that defendant was the owner of the land against which the lien is sought to be enforced, or that he was possessed of an interest therein.—Knapp Electrical Works v. Mecosta Electric Co., 110 Mich. 547.

¶ 239. It is not required of the pleader in setting up a mechanic's lien that he negative the exceptions contained in the statute subsequent to the provision declaring the lien, relieving the owner from the risk of payments made to the contractor after exacting from him a sworn statement as to the amounts due subcontractors, laborers, and material men, and from liability to such persons in any event in a greater amount than he contracted to pay the original contractor.—Smalley v. Ashland Brown-Stone Co., 114 Mich. 104.

¶ 240. A variance between a notice filed with the registrar of deeds and the bill of complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien is not fatal where it is admitted by the defendant that he owns no other land in the village and that the building is located on the lots attempted to be described in the bill.—Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co. v. Hartzell, 125 Mich. 177.

¶ 241. A bill to enforce a mechanic's lien is sufficient in its statement of the terms of the contract and performance in averring that the labor and materials were furnished under a contract with the owner in improving and repairing the house and barn of the said owner on the land described, and giving the date furnished.—Waters v. Johnson, 134 Mich. 436.

¶ 242. In a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien stating the contract and the materials furnished, the added statement, "And also for certain materials furnished in and for improving and repairing a certain house and barn, situated on the land hereinafter described, in pursuance of a certain contract with Alonzo Curtiss, contractor," may be regarded as surplusage where the contractor is not made a party and the bill fails to state the amount furnished to him.—Waters v. Johnson, 134 Mich. 436.

¶ 244. It is the general rule that the mechanic's lien, under Act No. 17, Pub. Acts 1903, amending Comp. L. 1897, § 10710, attaches to the extent of the statutory limit, and the lien claimant need aver and prove no more than that the quantity of land on which he claims a lien is within that limit. If for any reason the owner seeks to have a smaller quantity of land held subject to the lien, it is for him to present the reason and the facts supporting it. Held, however, that if the claimant seeks an apparent enlargement of the statute quantity of land, he should, by averment and proofs, advance reasons and facts in support of his demand.—Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co., 154 Mich. 448.

¶ 245. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10719, a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien must be sworn; and a demurrer on that ground should be sustained, or, if denied, only upon amendment of the bill as permitted under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10736.—Daschke v. Schellenberg, 125 Mich. 216.

¶ 246. A petition in chancery filed to enforce a mechanic's lien need not contain a prayer for process.—Sheridan v. Cameron, 65 Mich. 680.

§ 47. Answer or other defensive pleading.

Waiver of sworn answer, see post ¶ 266.
Raising in answer objections as to parties, see post § 51.
General law as to answers in equity, see Equity VII.

¶ 247. In proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien upon realty, an answer should be put in by the defendant so that an issue may be properly framed.—Roberts v. Miller, 32 Mich. 289.

¶ 248. An answer to a bill to foreclose a mechanic's lien, which states that the complainant has not performed the acts necessary under the lien statutes, and in particular that Comp. L. 1897, c. 296, has been violated, is sufficient to apprise complainant that defendant may at the trial rely in particular on failure to comply with section 4 of chapter 296.—Wildey v. Gillett, 171 Mich. 153.

Cross-bills generally, see Equity, VII.

¶ 249. An answer in the nature of a cross-bill may be used to assert a mechanic's lien under the provisions and intendment of Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 10, regulating pleadings in mechanics' lien cases.—Smalley v. Northwestern Terra-Cotta Co., 113 Mich. 141; Smalley v. Ashland Brown-Stone Co., 114 Mich. 104.

¶ 250. An answer in the nature of a cross-bill enables a defendant to assert a mechanic's lien; the Mechanics' Lien Law, § 10 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179), contemplates that all parties in interest may be brought into court and have their respective interests adjudicated in one proceeding.—Smalley v. Northwestern Terra-Cotta Co., 113 Mich. 141; Smalley v. Ashland Brown-Stone Co., 114 Mich. 104.

¶ 251. Defendant in a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien may maintain a cross-bill to recover damages resulting from complainant's failure to perform the contract which is the ground of such lien, even though there is no special provision in the lien law (Miller's Comp. L., § 10723) authorizing an answer in the nature of a cross-bill; since when a court of equity has jurisdiction for one purpose, it may retain jurisdiction to settle all disputes relating to the same subject-matter between the parties to the suit.—Koch v. Sumner, 145 Mich. 358.

Of payments made to principal contractor, see also ante § 37.

Allowance of offsets in decree, see post § 61.

General law as to set-off and recoupment, see Set-off.

Provisions as to recoupment of damages for defects or omissions in the performance of the contract, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14796.

¶ 252. A defendant in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien brought by a subcontractor cannot recoup for alleged defects in a building where he claims payment in full to the contractor and has gone into possession apparently satisfied.—Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co. v. Hartzell, 125 Mich. 177.

§ 50. Issues and variance.

¶ 253. On a bill to enforce a builder's lien upon real estate, and to have it declared a prior lien to a certain mortgage taken with notice, the bill did not allege such notice, and it was held that it was not in issue.—Barrows v. Baughman, 9 Mich. 213.

¶ 254. Where a mechanic's lien has once attached a variation between the allegations in the bill and in the proofs is not fatal if the defendant is not misled by any allegation in the bill, as a practical and reasonable construction should be given the statute.—Zilz v. Wilcox, 190 Mich. 486.

General law as to objections to pleading and waiver thereof, see Pleading, XI.

¶ 255. The objection that a petition for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien does not implead necessary parties may be taken in the answer thereto, or at the hearing; and it is not lost by putting in an answer after demurring.—Kerns v. Flynn, 51 Mich. 573.

¶ 256. The objection to a petition for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, which does not implead necessary parties, may be taken in the answer thereto or at the hearing.—Prather Engineering Co. v. Detroit, F. & S. Ry., 152 Mich. 582.

¶ 257. Three claimants filed several bills to enforce mechanic's liens. The solicitors for the owner of the property, at the hearing, and after answers in the nature of cross-bills, filed by other claimants who had been joined as defendants in each suit, had been served on said solicitors, stipulated that all of the cases might be heard together, and that but one decree need be entered. Held, that, in view of said stipulation, which was acted upon, the defendant owner is estopped from claiming that said answers were filed without leave of the court, or that the same were not seasonably served, or that no process issued.—Hannah & Lay Merc. Co. v. Mosser, 105 Mich. 18.

¶ 258. One McConn made a contract to build a house for defendant's husband. Plaintiff furnished materials under this contract, and sued defendant to foreclose a lien without making McConn a party. Defendant objected to this defect of parties, and also urged that the contract sued on was not her own. Held, by the latter contention defendant did not waive her objection of the defect of parties.—Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Kline, 160 Mich. 565.

See also ante ¶ 135.

Amendments of pleading generally, see Pleading, VI.

General law as to amendments in equity, see Equity, VII.

¶ 259. Under Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, §§ 10, 27 (Mechanics' Lien Law), allowing amendments in form or substance, an amendment to an answer in the nature of a cross-bill may be allowed, if it seeks, not to introduce a new cause of action, but to state properly the facts which constitute the cause of action set up in the original answer, even though the statute of limitations would bar a new bill.—Smalley v. Northwestern Terra-Cotta Co., 113 Mich. 141.

¶ 260. A defendant contractor in a mechanic's lien suit, who has joined issue with the complainant subcontractor by denying the complainant's allegations of full performance after delay caused by the defendant contractor and waived by such defendant, and who prayed a personal decree against the owner for the amount of the contract less the claim of complainant, is not entitled thereafter to amend his prayer as against the answering owner (which alleged delay and denied performance), by omitting to ask a personal decree and alleging further that there were other matters unready for settlement or litigation between the two defendants. In such a state of pleadings the owner cannot be forced to an election between recoupment and a separate suit, and the owner rather than the defendant contractor stands as a middleman or stakeholder entitled to have the others litigate their differences.—Kilby Mfg. Co. v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 277.

¶ 261. An objection that a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien is not verified may be met by amendment after the expiration of the period limited to bring the suit.—Prather Engineering Co. v. Detroit, F. & S. Ry., 152 Mich. 582.

C. HEARING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 53. Hearing and trial practice in general.

Hearings in equity generally, see Equity, VIII.

§ 54. Burden of proof and presumptions.

Burden of proof and presumptions generally, see Evidence, II.

¶ 262. The complainants have the burden of proving on the trial their compliance with all that the statute requires for giving them a lien on the defendant's premises.—Roberts v. Miller, 32 Mich. 289.

¶ 263. In a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, the burden is on complainants to establish their demand.—Doetsch v. Wetlaufer, 157 Mich. 202.

¶ 264. The burden is upon the owner of the estate to show the relinquishment of a mechanics' lien once established.—Kirkwood v. Hoxie, 95 Mich. 62.

¶ 265. The burden of proof of a waiver of a lien, in a suit to enforce a material man's lien, is upon the owner of the premises.—Marquette Lumber Co. v. Albee, 196 Mich. 127.

§ 55. Admissibility, weight, and sufficiency of evidence.

Extrinsic evidence to aid filed statement of lien, see also ante § 23.

Matters showing waiver of lien, see also ante § 35.

Sufficiency of evidence on appeal, see Appeal, § 433.

Evidence on garnishment as to existence of liens to controvert disclosure, see Garnishment ¶ 178.

General law as to evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 267. In an action to enforce a lien for labor and materials furnished under a verbal contract, a finding against defendant's claim that the property was exempt as a homestead, will not be disturbed where defendant testified that while the house was being constructed she lived part of the time in a house on a certain street, which she did not own, and boarded part of the time, and that she owned no other property in the city, and plaintiff thereupon introduced a deed executed by defendant after the lien had attached conveying property on the street mentioned, since the unexplained conveyance discredited her testimony as to ownership.—Delray Lumber Co. v. Keohane, 132 Mich. 17.

¶ 268. Testimony, in an action to enforce mechanics' liens against premises occupied as a homestead as to the value in excess of the $1,500 homestead exemption, that the house was substantially completed at the time of filing the liens, and of the value of the lot and the contract price for the building, and that the contract therefor was taken at too low a figure, furnish some evidence of the value of the property.—McAllister v. DesRochers, 132 Mich. 381.

¶ 269. On a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien, it appeared that under a contract to install a hydraulic elevator in defendant's hotel, the elevator company agreed to supply one with a relief attachment, and guaranteed that the water pressure in the city mains would not vary to exceed five pounds to the square inch, when the elevator was stopped. The defendant was to procure a water pressure of eighty pounds from the city main. Held, where the pressure in the city main at no time fell below eighty pounds, and where the pressure at the city works varied fifty pounds whenever the elevator was stopped, that the defendant had performed, and that the elevator company had not.—J. W. Reedy Elevator Mfg. Co. v. Peck, 149 Mich. 657.

Necessity of a contract or consent of owner, see ante § 11.

Dismissal for failure to show contract with or consent of owner, see post § 63.

¶ 270. When work is alleged to have been done under an oral contract, the terms of which are disputed, a mechanic's lien will not be sustained unless the evidence in support of it is clear and decisive enough to satisfy all reasonable and just minds without much hesitation as to the real nature and terms of the arrangement.—Clark v. Raymond, 27 Mich. 456.

¶ 271. In a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien for material used in buildings on the wife's land, evidence is sufficient to show that the husband contracting for the building in his own name was the agent of the wife where she owned the land, knew the buildings were being erected, wanted them built, used her own funds and borrowed more to pay upon the contract, drew checks on her own bank account and still owns the buildings although the husband may have furnished some of the money to pay for the buildings.—Frohlich v. Carroll, 127 Mich. 561.

¶ 272. In a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, testimony by defendant that he mentioned to complainant that he had not received certain of the sash, and that complainant said that he would send them right up, and that defendant then replied that he did not know the dimensions of the desired sash, does not constitute an admission on the part of defendant that he gave the order.—Battle Creek Lumber Co. v. Poland, 150 Mich. 690.

to a building to be erected upon land owned by them as joint tenants, that she sanctioned his acts and was present when the contract was made, shows an improvement made with the knowledge and consent of the wife.—Jossman v. Rice, 121 Mich. 270.

¶ 274. Where a witness for complainant in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, testifies that defendant gave an order to complainant for the material, his testimony is not materially strengthened by an order book showing an entry of an order for the material to be delivered at the house in question, it being self-made evidence of a transaction which might or might not justify the entry; it was at most a contemporaneous act which tended to show that he understood that the material was ordered for the houses.—Battle Creek Lumber Co. v. Poland, 150 Mich. 690.

§ 57. ——As to notice, statement, and filing of claim or lien.

¶ 275. On a bill of complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence held sufficient to establish that, although the description of property in a statement and notice of a mechanic's lien was ambiguous, it clearly identified it as the same land as that described in a mortgage.—Hicks v. Finbarg, 189 Mich. 332.

¶ 276. Allegations in a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien, that the last material was furnished on July 20th and a statement of lien made August 12th and filed with the registrar of deeds on August 13th within sixty days, supported by some proof and not denied by the answer, is sufficient to show a filing within the proper time.—Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co. v. Hartzell, 125 Mich. 177.

¶ 277. In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien in favor of a subcontractor, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the statement of lien was filed within the time limited by statute.—Zilz v. Wilcox, 190 Mich. 486.

¶ 278. The bill or petition though sworn to is not evidence, and therefore a sworn averment of service upon defendant of notice of the filing of the lien with the register of deeds did not cure the want of proof thereof, unless the answer admitted it.—Roberts v. Miller, 32 Mich. 289.

§ 58. ——As to amount of claim or lien, extras, deductions and payments.

See also ante ¶ 175.

Defective or partial performance as affecting right to lien, see also ante § 8.

Payments and satisfaction of lien, see ante § 36.

Sufficiency and proof of payments on contract, see Payment, V.

¶ 279. Where the evidence in the lower court showed the mortgaged premises to be a three-story building, with two stores a twenty-five living rooms, a decree suppc ing a mechanic's lien of $597.31 will sta without more specific proof as to the va of the premises.—Scott v. Keeth, 152 Mi 547.

¶ 281. In a suit to enforce a mechani lien evidence by the defendant of payme made to the principal contractor in exc of the original contract price does not title the defendant to deductions as agai the subcontractor where there is no evide negativing extra material or alterations a no showing that the contractor distribu the alleged over payments pro rata.—H nah & Lay Mercantile Co. v. Hartzell, Mich. 177.

¶ 282. On bill to foreclose a mechani lien for a balance alleged to be due for la and materials furnished in erecting a bs for defendant where defendant prays affir ative relief on the ground of alleged n fulfillment of the contract held, that evidence supports a finding in favor of co plainants.—Chadderdon v. Maxwell, Mich. 709.

¶ 283. On bill for a mechanic's lien labor and materials furnished in the c struction of a house where defendant leges defective construction, but does show what it would cost to make good alleged defects, held, that a decree allowi a lien is warranted by the evidence.—Fr erick v. Willis, 176 Mich. 106.

¶ 286. On a bill to foreclose a mechanic's lien and answer and cross-bill asking for affirmative relief because of alleged defects and because of completion of work by defendant, evidence held sufficient to establish that defendant was entitled to an allowance of $200 for cost of completing work and for defective construction instead of $90, as allowed by the trial court.—Halpin v. Garman, 192 Mich. 71.

¶ 288. On a bill by a contractor to foreclose a mechanic's lien evidence held to show that no unreasonably unsatisfactory work was performed by plaintiff and that plaintiff at no time between the first payment on the contract and a request for the second payment was informed or led to believe by the architect that his work was unsatisfactory.—Kunze v. Jones, 200 Mich. 453.

¶ 289. Evidence held to sustain the finding that complainant had not waived its lien, in a suit to enforce a lien for lumber sold by complainant to certain contractors for a building on defendant's premises, where defendant made payments to the contractors without demanding the sworn statements required by the statute.—Marquette Lumber Co. v. Albee, 196 Mich. 127.

§ 59. Questions of law and fact.

General law as to jury questions, see Trial, VI.

Provisions as to jury questions in mechanic's lien proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14806.

¶ 290. The fact that in the statement of lien plaintiff swore that he furnished the materials and labor in pursuance of a contract with the contractor was proper evidence to be considered by the jury in determining whether the work was done in reliance upon a new undertaking with defendant, but was not conclusive that it was not so done.—McLaughlin v. Austin, 104 Mich. 489.

¶ 291. In an action by a subcontractor against the owner for mason work performed in building a residence, the fact that the subcontractor never served upon the owner the statement required by Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 4, will not justify a directed verdict for the defendant where the defendant pleaded the general issue in justice court without any notice of this defense and where the record shows all bills were paid.—Bollin v. Hooper, 127 Mich. 287.

D. DECREE AND DISPOSAL OF CAUSE, COSTS AND FEES.

Taking bill as confessed as preventing subsequent assertion of invalidity of the lien, see ante ¶ 85.

Sufficiency of evidence to support decree, see ante § 55.

Record for appeal, inclusion of testimony, see Appeal § 99, ¶ 459.

Decrees in equity generally, see Equity, X.

Provisions as to ordering sale of buildings, machinery or other improvements, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14809.

¶ 292. The final decree in proceedings sustaining a mechanic's lien ought expressly to adjudge the existence of contract relations between the parties, and the establishment of the alleged lien upon the property described.—Willard v. Magoon, 30 Mich. 273.

¶ 295. Lienors are not injured by a decree making a mortgage to the contractor in the hands of an assignee a prior lien where the money represented by such mortgage, through the payment of the surety on the contractor's bond guaranteeing the construction of the building according to the plans and specifications, pursuant to an order of court, has been expended by the owner in liquidating the cost of construction of the building, and it is immaterial that the owner failed to secure a sworn statement from the contractor before delivering to him the mortgage, no money being due or to become due to any contractor or material-man at the time said mortgage was delivered.—Stevens v. Garland, 198 Mich. 24.

§ 61. Amount of recovery or offsets.

Partial or defective performance as affecting lien, see also ante § 8.
Sufficiency of affidavit or statement as to amount of lien, see ante § 24.
Amount and extent of lien, see also ante § 33.
Right to interest on claims, see also ante ¶ 171.
Offsetting payments made to principal contractor, see also ante § 37.
Evidence as to amount of claim or lien, see ante § 58.

¶ 297. On a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien, it appeared that the owner was entitled, under the statute, to recoup damages by reason of a failure of the complainant to fully perform his part of the contract; this issue, however, was not presented by the pleadings. Held, that the bill should be dismissed, and that the decree allowing a recovery subject to recoupment of damages for the breach of warranty be set aside.—J. W. Reedy Elevator Mfg. Co. v. Peck, 149 Mich. 657.

¶ 298. In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, where it appears that the contractor failed, leaving the building uncompleted, the owners are entitled to damages for delay by the contractor.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 299. Under How. St., § 8385, providing reasonable proportionate compensation for incomplete performance in case of owner's failure to complete his part of contract, a contractor cannot complain if the value of the work performed is determined by deducting from the contract price the necessary cost of completing the building.—Jewell v. Paron, 94 Mich. 83.

¶ 300. Where the value of the work done on a building when a lien for materials was filed was less than the sum actually paid to the contractor, and where the necessary cost of completion was more than remained unpaid at the contract price, the owner is not liable to a material-man, the rights being no greater than the contractor's.—Jewell v. Paron, 94 Mich. 83.

¶ 301. The claimant-contractor cannot complain of allowances made by the court for defects found on the ground that the cost remedying them was not proved by defendant-owner, where some of them were not in dispute and others were particularly wi in the knowledge of the complainant.—G v. Daiber, 148 Mich. 190.

¶ 302. In proceedings to enforce a s contractor's lien upon a building which contractors had unjustifiably neglected finish, the owner was held entitled to of the actual cost of the completion of work, including the amount necessarily p to the architects for new plans and spe cations in lieu of those withheld by the c tractors, and including also an amount p by the owner to subcontractors who did plastering provided for in the original c tract, and who refused to proceed unless would guarantee the payment to them of contract price for said work.—Yeomans Parker, 105 Mich. 323.

Bonds against liens, see post § 67.

¶ 303. Where the owner of property released mechanics' liens by filing a bond, sureties may be made parties defendant an action in equity to foreclose the li and a judgment fixing the liability of sureties on the bond may be rendered in s action.—Grace Harbor Lumber Co. v. C man, 190 Mich. 429.

¶ 304. A bill to enforce a material-m lien is properly dismissed where the evid shows that the husband made the cont for the erection of the building on the wi property without her consent and that was not a party to the contract and served with notice of the material furnis —Hall v. Erkfitz, 125 Mich. 332.

¶ 305. The court of one county ref leave to make its receiver a party to a chanic's lien suit brought in another cou The supreme court refused to interfere this ruling, having held that the court pointing the receiver had jurisdiction pass on the rights of the claimant on lien. Held, that a decree dismissing the to enforce the lien would not be distu by the supreme court, even though there jurisdiction to entertain the bill wit leave to make the receiver a party.—Pra Engineering Co. v. Detroit, F. & S. Ry., Mich. 582.

¶ 306. A suit to enforce a mechanic's in which it is evident that complainant endeavored to enforce a lien for an am much greater than he honestly believe be due him, will be dismissed.—Gri Clark, 155 Mich. 611.

¶ 307. In a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, under a contract whereby the defendant was to pay a sum named "when the work is completed and accepted by said party of the first part," such being said defendant, the latter's motion for a nonsuit should be granted on the plaintiff's showing an abandonment of the contract by him and that the work was never accepted.—Evans v. Woodley, 173 Mich. 20.

General law as to costs, see Costs.
Necessity of tender to carry costs, see Costs § 33.

¶ 308. An allowance of an attorney fee of $50.00 to each complainant and cross-complainant in a mechanic's lien foreclosure case, under Comp. L. 1897, § 10721, How. 2nd Ed., § 13777, is not excessive.—Grace Harbor Lumber Co. v. Ortman, 190 Mich. 429.

¶ 309. Forty dollars is a reasonable solicitor's fee for the prosecution of a mechanic's lien claim in the circuit court and upon appeal, where the amount involved is small, and a comparatively small amount of work is required of the solicitor.—Wisniewski v. Nawrocki, 153 Mich. 523.

¶ 310. In proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien, complainant may be allowed actual disbursements and reasonable solicitors' fees.—Wisniewski v. Nawrocki, 153 Mich. 523.

E. EXECUTION SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF PROCEEDS.

¶ 311. Complainant in a case to foreclose a lien may be allowed an execution to collect a money decree.—Scott v. Keeth, 152 Mich. 547.

§ 66. Sale of property and right or title acquired thereunder.

General law of execution and other involuntary sales wherein sales under lien decrees do not differ from other sales, see Executions; Judicial Sales.
Provisions as to sale of buildings, machinery, structures or improvements, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14809.
Provisions as to sale of the premises, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14810 et seq.

¶ 312. Notice of a sale for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien must be posted and published as in cases of execution sales of real estate, except that twelve days must intervene between the completion of the act of notification and the time of sale.—Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 Mich. 587.

¶ 313. A mechanic's lien enforced against a simple equity must be confined to that, and a sale of the equitable interest must be subject to the rights of the legal owner.—Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 Mich. 587.

¶ 314. The Mechanics' Lien Law, § 9, subd. 4 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), authorizes the court to order and direct the separate sale of a building upon land, in its discretion, where the lien has attached subsequent to the attaching or execution of a prior title, and where a contractor's lien has attached to a building erected with the knowledge and consent of a married woman, which lien does not attach to her interest in the land, because of homestead exemption rights, the court will permit the contractor to remove the building and dispose of it to satisfy his lien.—Jossman v. Rice, 121 Mich. 270.

¶ 315. If, when the lien attached, the person causing the building to be erected had no title to the premises on which it stood, but a mere right, resting in contract, to a conveyance on the performance of a condition precedent, and that right was afterwards lost by his failure to perform the condition, subsequent proceedings to enforce the lien would convey no right or title to the purchaser.—Scales v. Griffin, 2 D. 54.

¶ 316. A title secured under the mechanic's lien law is purely statutory, and its validity depends on an affirmative showing that every essential statutory step in the creation, continuance or enforcement of the lien has been duly taken.—Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 Mich. 587.

Acts 1899, No. 237, How. 2nd Ed., § 5108 et seq., nor of Pub. Acts 1913, No. 368.—In re Carpenter's Estate, 196 Mich. 561; Avery v. Woodruff, Id.

¶ 5. That one has held himself out as a medical practitioner may be shown by evidence that he exhibited a sign as "Dr. ——, Magnetic Healer," that he was called to visit sick persons and treated them, that he made a certificate of death and swore to a medical practitioner's statement, and by such certificate and statement and a report by him executed of infectious diseases.—People v. Phippin, 70 Mich. 6.

¶ 6. Pub. Acts 1903, No. 191, providing that on and after passage all men and women "who wish to begin the practice of medicine" shall make application for registration and certificate, includes one who was at the time practicing unlawfully in view of the previous legislation which required all practitioners to be registered and certificated.—Hooper v. Batdorff, 141 Mich. 353.

¶ 7. A chiropractor who treats human ailments by manipulation of the spine and muscles of the back is engaged in the "practice of medicine" within the meaning of Act No. 237, Pub. Acts 1899, §§ 5108-5118, How. St., 2nd Ed., pertaining to the examination, regulation, licensing and registration of physicians and surgeons.—Locke v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 535.

Exercise of dentistry as practice of medicine, see ante § 2.
Examination, regulation, licensing and registration of dentists, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6748-6759.

¶ 8. A practicing physician and surgeon who has not been licensed under Pub. Acts 1907, No. 338, as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 183, relating to the practice of dentistry, may not engage in the practice of dentistry nor advertise that he does so practice.—People v. Blair, 192 Mich. 183.

¶ 9. The fact that the Medical Act, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 368, was passed subsequent to, but at, the same session of the legislature as, the amendment to the Dental Act, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 183, does not authorize the construction of the Dental Act as being amended by the Medical Act, and physicians and surgeons have no authority to practice dentistry except as allowed by the Dental Act.—People v. Blair, 192 Mich. 183.

¶ 10. Where a duly qualified dentist administered under the direction of duly qualified physicians treatment to a patient for an incurable cancer of the mouth, using cocaine, morphine and other drugs in such treatment, in which administrations some skill was required, held that recovery for such services was allowable either as services of a nurse or as services of a duly qualified dentist under Pub. Acts 1913, No. 183, § 7, providing that any person shall be said to be practicing dentistry within the meaning of that act who shall treat diseases or lesions of the human teeth or jaws.—In re Carpenter's Estate, 196 Mich. 561; Avery v. Woodruff, Id.

Provisions as to licensing and registration of osteopaths, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6740-6746.

¶ 11. Under Pub. Acts 1903, Act No. 162, § 2, providing for the issuance of a certificate as an osteopath to any person engaged in practice of osteopathy in this state at the time of the passage of the act holding a diploma from a regular college of osteopathy, the words "at the time of the passage of the act" meant when the act took effect.—Mills v. State Board of Osteopathic Registration and Examination, 135 Mich. 525.

¶ 12. Claimant ran a store for a legatee, and among other sundries sold drugs, medicines, and poisons. The business was light and sales few. Held, he was required, by Act No. 134, Pub. Acts 1885, as amended by Act No. 332, Pub. Acts 1905, to be a registered pharmacist.—In re Reidy's Estate, 164 Mich. 167; Shattuck v. Watson, Id.

Mandamus to compel registration of veterinary, see post § 8.

Examination and licensing of veterinaries, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6813-6827.

¶ 13. Relator filed his application and letters for a veterinary certificate within the time required by Act No. 244, Pub. Acts 1907, but failed to state certain material facts. At the request of the board, relator supplied this defect after the expiration of the allotted time. Held, the application was seasonably made.—Jennings v. State Veterinary Board, 156 Mich. 417.

¶ 14. Act No. 244, Pub. Acts 1907, requiring the registration with the state veterinary board of all persons practicing veterinary medicine or surgery, provided that any one wishing to register as an existing practitioner must file with the board his affidavit, before January 1, 1908. Held, the provision as to date was mandatory, and not directory, being a reasonable time fixed by law.—Kerbs v. State Veterinary Board, 154 Mich. 500.

¶ 15. Section 4, Act No. 244, Pub. Acts 1907, requires an applicant for admission to practice veterinary medicine and su to file an affidavit that he has continu practiced the same in their various bra for five years, and to present letters o ommendation from ten reputable stock ers who have employed him, showing to be qualified. Held, that where an cant's affidavit omitted the words "in various branches," and his letters of r mendation did not state the dates or acter of the services rendered, his ap tion was properly denied.—Dusaw v. Veterinary Board, 157 Mich. 246.

¶ 16. Under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 191, and 3, requiring the state veterinary to issue certificates to graduates of re veterinary colleges, the board has no d tion to determine the standing of a v nary school organized under Comp. L. § 8143 which provides that every di granted by such college shall entitle possessor to all immunities allowed by ute or usage to any such institution.— v. State Veterinary Board, 138 Mich. 42

¶ 17. One holding himself out as a inary surgeon undertakes that he poss ordinary professional skill, and therefo an action for services rendered in suc pacity, it devolves upon him to prov qualification, at least so long as his to practice is not regulated by stat Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich. 1.

¶ 18. In an action for professional inary services, where there are no stat regulations, the burden resting upon pla of establishing his qualifications to pra may be discharged by showing his gr tion from some reputable college or s whereby a presumption of competen created, or by proving his study and rience. There is a like presumption of fication where one has been admitte practice under the laws of the state; whether such a statute existing plaintiff be presumed to have been authorize practice thereunder or must prove the quære.—Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich.

¶ 20. Proceedings of the board of registration of medicine under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5108 et seq., relating to the granting or refusing of certificates of registration for the practice of medicine, are subject to review by the courts, although the statute in terms makes no provision for such review.—Reetz v. People, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390, affirming 127 Mich. 87.

¶ 21. Mandamus will not lie to compel the state board of registration in medicine to register an applicant under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, providing for the issuance of a certificate upon presentation of proof of prior "legal registration" under Pub. Acts 1883, No. 167, as amended in 1887; where the affidavit, which applicant filed pursuant to the latter act, showed on its face that he was not a graduate of a medical college within the meaning of the latter act, it appearing that he attended at a medical college in Chicago for one day during examination and graduated therein.—Metcalfe v. Michigan State Board of Registration in Medicine, 123 Mich. 661.

¶ 22. Relator took in fact only a two years' course in a veterinary college. Act No. 244, Pub. Acts 1907, was passed meanwhile, requiring a course of three sessions of six months each before the veterinary board should register an applicant. The relator's college adopted the three-sessions course and issued him a diploma. Held, that mandamus to compel the board to register him should be denied relator, although his two years' course was taken with studies equivalent to the three-sessions course.—Folsom v. State Veterinary Board, 158 Mich. 277.

Personal nature of performance required from physician, see also Contracts § 220, ¶ 907.

¶ 23. Where a physician takes an unmarried layman with him to attend a case of confinement, and no real necessity exists for the latter's assistance, both are liable in damages; and it makes no difference that the patient or huband supposed at the time that the intruder was a medical man, and therefore submitted without objection to his presence.—De May v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160.

Liability of physician for failure to treat patient in accordance with agreement, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 531-540.

§ 10. ——Degree of skill or care required.

Instructions as to care and skill required, see post § 17.

¶ 25. All that the law demands from a physician is that he shall bring and apply to a case that degree of skill, care, knowledge and attention possessed and exercised by other physicians under similar circumstances.—Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 319.

¶ 26. In general, a physician's undertaking is that he will exercise ordinary skill. —Stone v. Jerome, How. N. P. 260.

¶ 27. If one knowingly employs one who is not a regular physician the latter is only required to exercise his best skill.—Stone v. Jerome, How. N. P. 260.

¶ 28. A patient who employs a physician is entitled to a thorough and careful examination, such as the condition of the patient and circumstances will permit, with such diligence and methods of diagnosis for discovering the nature of the ailment as are usually practiced by medical men of ordinary learning, judgment and skill in similar localities.—Rogers v. Kee, 171 Mich. 551.

¶ 29. A surgeon who, knowing the facts and circumstances of the case, after weighing them, decides on a course of action according to his professional judgment, is not liable for its failure; otherwise, however, if he fails to ascertain the circumstances or does not possess the skill which he claims. —Luka v. Lowrie, 171 Mich. 122.

¶ 30. It is the duty of a physician taking charge of a case where there is a broken limb to inform and instruct the patient as to his conduct and what caution should be observed in moving or using the limb while it is being treated.—Rogers v. Kee, 171 Mich. 551.

¶ 31. The implied contract between a physician and his patient in treating a broken or diseased limb is not to restore it to its natural condition, but giving due consideration to the state of the art at the time, to use that degree of diligence and skill which is ordinarily possessed by the average member of the profession in similar localities.—Miller v. Toles, 183 Mich. 252.

Jury questions as to negligence in operating without consent, see post § 16.

¶ 32. A surgeon is not liable for an error in judgment in amputating a crushed foot when instant action of some sort is imperative and his determination must be based on the physical character of the wound and the general condition of the patient, and his apparent ability to resist shock.—Luka v. Lowrie, 171 Mich. 122.

¶ 33. A surgeon is not negligent in operating on an infant if in the opinion of four surgeons an emergency exists and a delay might prove fatal.—Luka v. Lowrie, 171 Mich. 122.

¶ 34. In an action against a physician for malpractice it appeared that plaintiff's decedent having received a gunshot wound in the calf of the leg, defendant took charge of the case. He failed to make an examination sufficient to disclose that two arteries were severed. Death resulted from arterial hemmorhage. Held, that the case did not come within the rule as to "emergency cases."—Dailey v. Shaffer, 178 Mich. 574.

¶ 35. Consent of parents to an operation on a minor is not necessary when immediate operation is required under an emergency and the obtaining of consent is impracticable.—Luka v. Lowrie, 171 Mich. 122.

¶ 36. A physician is justified in relying on the statement of the house surgeon in a hospital that an injured minor's parents were not present, and in operating i emergency without their consent.—Lul Lowrie, 171 Mich. 122.

Performance of operation without conse patient, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 38

¶ 37. One who is not possessed o requisite qualifications of a physician surgeon cannot be exempted from lia for malpractice on the ground that his take was caused by an error in judg —Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374.

¶ 38. Where plaintiff's attending cian engaged a skilled surgeon and as him in matters of detail in performi operation on plaintiff, he was not j liable with the surgeon for neglect move a sponge from the wound.—Bro Bennett, 157 Mich. 654.

¶ 39. In an action against a phy for damages for malpractice, the cou considering the question of whether th evidence in the case tending to show a ulent concealment by defendant of the of action, need not confine itself to the made by plaintiff, but may consider a sions made by defendant.—Groendal v. rate, 171 Mich. 92.

¶ 40. In an action for malpractice want of the proper care or skill whi minishes the chances of the plaintiff covery, prolongs his illness, increase suffering, or in short makes his con worse than it would have been if due and care had been used, would in a sense constitute injury.—Rogers v. Ke Mich. 551.

¶ 41. In an action for malpractice i lecting properly to diagnose a fractu the neck of the left femur, there can recovery if the result to the plaintiff actly what it would have been if d ant had seasonably discovered and pr treated the fracture, but if the condit not all that could reasonably be ex and the plaintiff suffers thereby, he recover.—Rogers v. Kee, 171 Mich. 551

¶ 42. In an action for improperly s a broken bone there may be recover pain and suffering that would have avoided if the bone had been properly set. —Duffy v. Charters, 180 Mich. 572.

¶ 43. A physician who is called to treat a diseased joint which has not improved under the attentions of several other physicians is not guilty of malpractice in trying without success a new treatment which, although not generally used, has achieved some remarkable results, where at the time of applying such treatment the only alternative was amputation.—Miller v. Toles, 183 Mich. 252.

Regulations as to drugs and druggists, see ante § 5.

¶ 45. In dispensing medicines a druggist is held to a high degree of care; but actual negligence in him or his employees is a necessary element in his liability when a mistake has occurred.—Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576.

¶ 46. If, in selling medicine, error occurs without fault on the part of the druggist or his servants, the case is one of inevitable accident, and the druggist is not liable for injurious results.—Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576.

¶ 47. In an action against a druggist for injury caused by his clerk's negligence in delivering one medicine where another is called for, it is no defense that the medical treatment was negligent; but a charge that defendant is liable without regard to negligence or legal fault is error.—Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576.

Liability of druggist for negligence in sale of drugs or in filling prescriptions, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 63-78.

Actions for malpractice against persons professing to treat as physicians, and right to set up malpractice in bar of action for services, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12765.

¶ 48. A declaration for malpractice by a surgeon in setting a broken limb may be held, on demurrer, to set forth sufficiently the facts and circumstances necessary to show a cause of action, if the negligence, omission and improper treatment by defendant are stated as facts, thus notifying him with what misconduct in his profession he is charged.—Hanselman v. Carstens, 60 Mich. 187.

¶ 49. A declaration in an action for negligence in setting a broken leg sufficiently states the duty defendant owed to plaintiff when it avers that defendant was a physician and surgeon, and as such was employed by plaintiff to set her broken leg.—Hanselman v. Carstens, 60 Mich. 187.

¶ 50. The question of the unskilfulness or negligence of a physician in performing an operation, held eliminated from a case by the express declarations at the trial of the plaintiff's counsel that the only question involved was whether the operation was performed without the consent of the plaintiff. —Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 319.

¶ 51. That there was no variance between the declaration and proof, held in an action against a physician in malpractice.—Duffy v. Charters, 180 Mich. 572.

¶ 52. The failure of the ends of a broken clavicle to properly unite may be shown in an action against a physician for malpractice, under a declaration alleging that the plaintiff suffered injury as the result of the defendant's improper treatment, and his failure to place the ends of the broken bone in apposition.—Duffy v. Charters, 180 Mich. 572.

Res gestæ of the treatment as evidence in malpractice suit, see also Evidence § 454.

¶ 53. In an action for damages based on defendant physician's misconduct in taking a layman with him to attend a case of confinement, plaintiff may testify that she supposed the intruder was a physician or a medical student, and may show whatever was said at the time tending to support such supposition. And a competent witness may be asked as to the custom in regard to calling assistance in cases of confinement. —De May v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160.

¶ 54. In an action against a physician for malpractice in treating and amputating a limb, it is improper to produce and offer in evidence bones taken from the amputated limb, where various portions thereof had been removed before the amputation took place, and their condition before and at the time of amputation indicated a continuing disintegration which was active long after the defendant had ceased to treat the injury.—Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374.

¶ 55. In an action for malpractice it was held that the evidence tended to show such a total want of skill, and such a degree of carelessness, on the part of defendant, a physician (who was employed to remove a tumor from a woman's uterus), as would in law make him guilty of manslaughter.— Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180.

¶ 56. That one has had the management of a farm owned by him, but has not personally been largely engaged in farming affairs, does not tend to show general incompetency to practice the profession of surgery. —Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 58. A surgeon is not liable for malpractice in amputating an arm where physicians testify that the operation was properly done and the only evidence of malpractice is the testimony of one physician who testified that he would have attempted to save more of the arm lower down near the wrist and possibly the thumb, but that the rest of the hand should have been amputated, and that it was a matter of individual opinion and he would not consider it negligent to amputate as was done.—Pepke v. Grace Hospital, 130 Mich. 493.

¶ 59. In an action against a surgeon for malpractice held that there was no testimony warranting the inference that the disabled arm or the crippled foot resulted from improper surgical treatment.—Neifert v. Hasley, 149 Mich. 232.

¶ 60. In an action for malpractice, plaintiff cannot recover upon proof of facts equally as consistent with due care as with negligence on the part of defendant.—Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374.

¶ 61. In an action against a physician for malpractice, defendant's want of the requisite qualifications of a physician cannot be shown by proving that he was discharged by a patient, and another physician hired, who changed the treatment.—Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374.

¶ 62. Whether the method which the plaintiff's evidence shows was adopted by a physician in setting a broken bone was proper, under the circumstances, may be shown by answers to hypothetical questions submitted to medical witnesses in an action for malpractice, although the defendant's evidence tends to show that such treatment was not applied.—Duffy v. Charters, 180 Mich. 572.

¶ 63. In an action against a physician for malpractice, matters of special knowledge strictly involving professional skill and attention, unskilfulness, negligence or failure to do what should have been done, must be shown by those learned in such matters.— Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 319.

¶ 64. A physician is not answerable for the loss of a patient's limb where there is neither lay nor expert testimony tending to show that his treatment contributed to the loss.—Miller v. Toles, 183 Mich. 252.

¶ 65. The fact that a patient does not fully recover, or that a surgical operation is not entirely successful, is not evidence of the negligence of the attending physician or surgeon.—Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 319.

¶ 66. That a woman consented to the removal of her ovaries by a physician, held established by the great weight of the evidence in an action against the latter.— Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 319.

Determination by jury of the correctness of treatment of fractured limb, see post ¶ 95.

Jury questions in actions for compensation, see post § 22.

General law as to jury questions, see Trial, VI.

¶ 67. It was error to take from the jury the question whether defendant surgeon was negligent in operating on plaintiff's left leg instead of the right which had been prepared for the operation, where, a doubt having arisen while plaintiff was in anæsthesia, a brother went to make inquiry but before he returned the operation was proceeded with on an unauthorized assurance by plaintiff's father.—Sullivan v. McGraw, 118 Mich. 39.

¶ 68. In a suit for malpractice there was evidence that defendant attended plaintiff several times and informed her that her child would be prematurely born; that he stated her condition was serious; that he agreed to return to attend her at 11 p. m. of the day in question; and that her child was born about 12 m. Plaintiff's counsel in his opening statement offered to show that shortly after 11 o'clock p. m. on the day in question her husband several times called defendant on the telephone, advising him of plaintiff's condition, and that the latter agreed to attend her at once; that he did not arrive until 2 o'clock a. m., and that he failed, after the birth of the child, properly to repair the lacerations of the uterus. The declaration alleged that on account of defendant's negligence her uterus was unnecessarily lacerated and subsequent to the birth of the child defendant negligently failed to discharge his duty in repairing said lacerations. Held, the trial court was in error in refusing plaintiff permission to introduce further testimony and in directing a verdict for the defendant.—Adams v. Henry, 165 Mich. 554.

¶ 70. In a suit against a dentist for personal injuries arising from the dislocation of plaintiff's jaw in the process of the extraction of teeth, evidence that the plaintiff upon returning shortly after the operation to the dentist for examination of the jaw for dislocation, was mistakenly informed that it was not dislocated but that the muscles of the jaw were merely contracted, is sufficient to require the submission of the question of defendant's negligence to the jury.—Donoghue v. Shaw, 170 Mich. 544.

¶ 74. Where in a malpractice suit the defendant, a physician, testifies that he discovered the dislocation of plaintiff's shoulder when first called to attend her, and the testimony of witnesses for plaintiff show that defendant repeatedly told her that her arm was not dislocated, and when confronted with the statement of another physician that her shoulder was dislocated protested that it was not so, there is evidence to go to the jury tending to show that he fraudulently and purposely concealed from her the nature of her injury.—Groendal v. Westrate, 171 Mich. 92.

¶ 75. In an action against a physician for malpractice, where the evidence was conflicting as to what would have been the result had the physician made a careful examination, and whether he was negligent in not making such examination, the question of negligence was properly submitted to the jury.—Dailey v. Shaffer, 178 Mich. 574.

¶ 76. An action against a physician for removing the ovaries of a woman without her consent during an operation, held submitted to the jury under proper instructions.—Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 319.

¶ 77. In an action against a physician to recover damages for malpractice, evidence of negligence in treating a fractured arm, held sufficient to go to the jury.—Wilk v. Black, 188 Mich. 478.

Care and skill required of medical practitioners, see ante § 10.

Instructions as to care required of druggists, see also ante ¶ 47.

Instructions in actions by medical practitioners to recover compensation, see post § 22.

General law as to instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 78. A physician must exercise reasonable skill, taking into account the advancement of professional learning, but a charge that he must exercise such skill as is ordinarily exercised by educated physicians, without further defining it, is incorrect.—Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

¶ 79. Where a physician is sued for malpractice it is improper for plaintiff's counsel to urge to the jury defendant's general incompetency as a ground of recovery, unless such incompetency has been alleged in the declaration and evidence given tending to show it; and a refusal to charge against recovery on that ground in case there is no such allegation or evidence is error.—Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 80. In an action for malpractice where the declaration alleges that defendant was guilty of negligence in setting plaintiff's broken leg, and that he negligently and carelessly injured the ligaments of the knee whereby permanent lameness and deformity resulted, a charge is erroneous which treats the question at issue as one of neglect in the care of the broken leg rather than as an injury to the knee caused by defendant's alleged negligence.—Spaulding v. Bliss, 83 Mich. 311.

¶ 81. An instruction, in an action against a surgeon for malpractice, that the measure of defendant's legal duty was to exercise such care, skill, and diligence in his treatment of the plaintiff as physicians and surgeons "in the neighborhood where he resided" ordinarily exercised in like cases, while not strictly accurate, is not prejudicial to plaintiff, where it appears that defendant resided in a city where there were other physicians, presumably of average ability when compared with similar localities.—Pelky v. Palmer, 109 Mich. 561.

¶ 82. It is error to instruct the jury in a malpractice case that plaintiff cannot recover unless he shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, "a state of facts from which no other rational conclusion can be drawn than that the defendant was unskilful and negligent"; the effect being to require the jury to acquit, if they can, upon any theory, find the facts rationally consistent with skill and diligence, notwithstanding a contrary probability.—Pelky v. Palmer, 109 Mich. 561.

¶ 83. In an action against a physician for negligent treatment of plaintiff's foot following which amputation became necessary, expert witnesses declined to state that the result more probably came from the treatment than from the original injury. Held, that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that defendant was not liable for the loss of the foot.—Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374.

¶ 84. In an action against a physician for malpractice the court properly instructed that the damages would be such as were suffered by reason of defendant's failure to administer the proper treatment, and that in assessing such damages the fact that had decedent recovered, after proper treatment, he would have been crippled, should be taken into consideration.—Dailey v. Shaffer, 178 Mich. 574.

¶ 85. The refusal to give plaintiff's requested instruction as to exemplary damages in an action against a physician for performing an operation on the plaintiff without his consent, becomes immaterial where a verdict was correctly returned for the defendant.—Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 319.

§ 18. Contracts, compensation, and actions for compensation.

Agreements among physicians to divide fees as obnoxious to public policy, see Contracts § 70, ¶ 283.

Necessity that a promise to pay for medical services rendered another be in writing, see Frauds, Statute of, § 22.

Right to set up malpractice in bar of action for services, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12765.

¶ 86. Where a doctor was employed by one who had been injured in a railroad accident to explain his injuries to the company's management, on the secret understanding that his services should be paid in proportion to the amount recovered, such bargain was held void as against public policy.—Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392.

See also post ¶ 99.

General law of agency, see Agency.

Authority to employ medical services for injured persons, see Agency § 34.

¶ 87. Employment in a laundry will not, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be deemed hazardous so as to make applicable in case of injury to an employee in such laundry, the rule that an employer is liable in hazardous cases, for the services of a physician rendered to an employee in an emergency at the request of a foreman, having no general authority.—Holmes v. McAllister, 123 Mich. 493.

¶ 88. Even if the rule applies in this state that employers are liable in certain emergencies for the acts of foremen in employing physicians to attend employees, the rule would not be extended beyond the emergency, and the employer would not be liable for the services rendered after the emergency has passed.—Holmes v. McAllister, 123 Mich. 493.

General law as to variance, see Pleading, X.

¶ 89. Under an express provision of Comp. L. 1897, § 10426, malpractice of a physician may be given in evidence in bar of any action for services rendered by the physician. —Vandenberg v. Slagh, 150 Mich. 225.

¶ 90. Under proper pleadings, malpractice may be proven for the purpose of defeating a claim for services rendered by a physician or surgeon.—Vandenberg v. Slagh, 150 Mich. 225.

¶ 91. Under an agreement that a doctor was to have no pay if he effected no cure, the material question would be whether a cure was effected by plaintiff; the nature of the disease is not material either under plaintiff's or defendant's theory.—Hollywood v. Reed, 57 Mich. 234.

¶ 92. Where, in a physician's suit for services, the defense is made that by a special agreement pay was to be contingent on a cure, and that there was no cure, defendant's financial condition is irrelevant in determining whether such a bargain was made. —Hollywood v. Reed, 55 Mich. 308.

Judicial notice as to skill or ability, see Evidence ¶ 126.

Evidence of condition subsequent to time pleaded in action for compensation for services, see also Evidence § 94.

Cross-examination as to value of medical services, see Examination of Witnesses § 54.

¶ 93. The fact that a surgeon changes a course of treatment adopted by another does not in itself show that the former course of treatment was not proper at the time; nor is the patient's failure to recover perfect soundness of limb in itself evidence of malpractice, nor is the fact that he survived, although he refused to allow a particular course of treatment, evidence that such course might not have been proper under the circumstances.—Wood v. Barker, 49 Mich. 295.

¶ 94. In assumpsit for medical services rendered defended on the ground that no cure was effected and that there was to be no pay unless there was, the record of a divorce proceeding between the defendant patient and his former wife is irrelevant.— Hollywood v. Reed, 57 Mich. 234.

¶ 95. The jury cannot be allowed to determine for itself the correctness of a physician's treatment of a fractured limb; and it was held proper to refuse to permit a defendant sued for medical services to exhibit the limb to the jury long after the injury had healed.—Carstens v. Hanselman, 61 Mich. 426.

¶ 96. Evidence that a physician had practiced for eighteen years, and was a graduate of the university, is prima facie proof of the exercise of due care on the part of the person selecting him to treat an injury for which defendant is liable.—Reed v. City of Detroit, 108 Mich. 224.

¶ 97. A physician's average daily receipts do not measure the value of his services so as to exclude competent opinions as to such value.—Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392.

¶ 98. There is no presumption of law as to the value of a surgeon's services; a jury cannot ascertain the value without testimony from competent persons, nor can a jury reduce the compensation claimed for such services, where undisputed testimony shows it to have been appropriate, on the ground, unsupported by evidence, that plaintiff's treatment was improper.—Wood v. Barker, 49 Mich. 295.

¶ 99. A verdict against a railroad company for services of a physician chosen by an injured employee in the absence of the company's physician cannot be sustained on evidence that after a time the chief surgeon, who had no authority to employ the physician, wrote to him asking for a history of the case and requesting that the bill for services, itemized, be sent to the writer, the charge having been made in the first instance to the injured person at a much less sum than in the bill rendered to the company.—Burke v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 114 Mich. 685.

¶ 100. In a suit for professional services by a physician under a bill of particulars for his individual services, a charge that recovery may also be had for the services of an assistant held erroneous.—McNair v. Parr, 177 Mich. 327.

¶ 101. In an action for the services of physicians in attending victims of a wreck on defendant's railroad, it was not error to refuse a request involving the theory that the physicians, in being called to treat any and all persons injured, were working by the day's work.—McKnight v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 307.

¶ 102. The reasonable value of the services of a surgeon was a question for the jury in an action for such services in which plaintiff testified that his charges were reasonable and that the charges depended upon the ability of the patient to pay, and where the defendant claimed that plaintiff had stated that persons who had political jobs were made to pay for cases where doctors worked for nothing.—Crumrine v. Austin, 133 Mich. 283.

¶ 1. Laws 1877, Act No. 40, authorizing the incorporation of military companies does not permit a minority of a company to be incorporated; and it is defective in its provisions as to the necessary proceedings to effect incorporation.—Hochgraef v. Milward, 38 Mich. 469.

¶ 2. The Statute Laws 1881, Act No. 150 (How. St. § 978), providing for the enrolment of not more than one hundred and fifty contributing members in each company and battery of state troops, and exempting such members from jury duty, is valid.—Hall v. Burlingame, 88 Mich. 438.

¶ 3. Where the name of a man liable to military duty was fully given and properly spelled upon the enrolment list for a draft, held, that the dropping out of the last letter of his name from the ballot placed in the box did not invalidate the drafting of his name.—In re Spangler, 11 Mich. 298.

Accidents within "war zone" and in munitions works, together with questions pertaining to employees in military service, as affected by compensation acts, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 1011-1027.

¶ 4. Since Pub. Acts 1895, No. 63, provides that field and line officers of the Michigan National Guard, except when elected to fill a vacancy, shall be commissioned for a term of three years from the date of their election and until their successors are commissioned, no vacancy exists upon the expiration of a regular term, but the incumbent holds over pending the issue of a commission to his successor.—Baxter v. Latimer, 116 Mich. 356.

¶ 5. An election for the full or regular term of field officers of a regiment of the National Guard is not an election to fill a "vacancy" within the meaning of Pub. Acts 1893, No. 198, which provides that "all vacancies in the field officers of a regiment shall be filled by a majority vote of the field and company officers of said regiment."—Baxter v. Latimer, 116 Mich. 356.

¶ 6. As How. St. § 901, provides that regimental field officers may be elected by the company officers, authority not being conferred upon the field officers to participate in a general election, an election for a field officer for a full term in which election field officers participated whose votes were necessary to make a majority for the person declared elected, was void, and a new election was properly ordered by the commander-in-chief.—Baxter v. Latimer, 116 Mich. 356.

Civil liability of military officers for negligent or wrongful acts, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 1022-1070.

Voting residence of inmates of soldiers' homes, see Elections § 14.

¶ 7. Since sec. 11 of Act No. 152, Pub. Acts 1885 and amendments, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., sec. 3723, establishing the Michigan Soldiers' Home, expressly declares who may become inmates thereof, the Board of Managers is without authority to admit to the Home persons not within such enumeration. —Mason v. Board of Managers of Michigan Soldiers' Home, 181 Mich. 347.

¶ 8. Pension money of inmates of the Michigan Soldiers' Home can be withheld under Act No. 102, Pub. Acts 1911, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., sec. 3759, by the Board of Managers of the Home for purposes of discipline only, in trust, to be paid to the rightful owner at his discharge from the Home, or to his heirs or representatives on his death. —Mason v. Board of Managers of Michi Soldiers' Home, 181 Mich. 347.

¶ 9. Act No. 313 of Pub. Acts 1905, H Ann. St., 2nd Ed., sec. 3767, though it mits money accumulated in the "post fu and "posthumous fund" of the Michigan diers' Home to be used for furnishing post hospital and for certain other purpo beneficial to inmates of the Home, does permit the Board of Managers of the Hc to require inmates to turn over to it for manent retention and use of the Hom portion of their pension money, where mo so received was not credited to such fu but was separately kept and accounted although subsequently transferred to s funds.—Mason v. Board of Managers Michigan Soldiers' Home, 181 Mich. 347.

¶ 10. A rule requiring inmates of Michigan Soldiers' Home to deposit t pension money in excess of a certain s with the Board of Managers, to be held s ject to disposal of the board, in order to serve order, enforce discipline or preserve health of the inmates, is valid as a necess police regulation, and authorized by sec of Act No. 152, Pub. Acts 1885, How. A St., 2nd Ed., sec. 3723, empowering the bo to make rules and regulations for the forcement of discipline and preserving der and the health of inmates of the Ho —Mason v. Board of Managers of Michi Soldiers' Home, 181 Mich. 347.

¶ 11. A rule of the Board of Manager the Michigan Soldiers' Home requiring designated portion of the pension money the inmates of the Home to be turned o to the board for permanent retention, ultimately to be turned into the gene state fund, is void, not being within sec of Act No. 152, Pub. Acts 1885, How. A St., 2nd Ed., sec. 3723, empowering the Bo of Managers to enact rules and regulati for the enforcement of discipline, and serving order and the health of inmate Mason v. Board of Managers of Michi Soldiers' Home, 181 Mich. 347.

¶ 12. Acquiescence of inmates of the M igan Soldiers' Home in the unlawful re tion of a portion of their pension money the Board of Managers, for permanent propriation for the use of the state, d not create a contract binding the inma to such disposition of their money, w their consent was obtained under a mista belief that the board was acting accord to law.—Mason v. Board of Managers Michigan Soldiers' Home, 181 Mich. 347.

¶ 13. The Board of Managers of the M igan Soldiers' Home has power, under H St. § 1984h, to adopt a rule requiring mates to turn over to the commandant, to held subject to the board's disposal, t pension money in excess of $5 per mon and such a rule does not infringe the Act

Congress of Feb. 28, 1883, avoiding any assignment or transfer of any right, claim or interest in a pension.—Loser v. Board of Managers of Soldiers' Home, 92 Mich. 633.

¶ 14. The Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home has not the power of determining what relatives are dependent upon the pensioner for support, and to direct how much of his pension money shall be sent to such relatives; and a rule so providing is pro tanto void, though valid in so far as it requires part of pension money to be turned over to the board.—Loser v. Board of Managers of Soldiers' Home, 92 Mich. 633.

MILLS AND MILLING.

TREATS of flour and grist mills for general public service and of milldams and works accessory thereto, excluding water power rights and easements (see Waters).

Analysis.

§ 1. In general; public millers.
§ 2. Raceways, dams and works, and bridges.

Malicious injury to mills and dams, see Crimes § 105.
Statutes for the support and regulation of mills, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 126.

¶ 1. The statute relating to the duties of millers and mill-owners (Comp. L. 1857, § 1333 et seq., How. St. §§ 1618-1621) is meant to apply to such mills only as are in the habit of grinding for toll.—Merrill v. Cahill, 8 Mich. 55.

¶ 2. Under the statute, millers who hold themselves out to the community as millers grinding for the public generally are bound to a similar impartiality to that required of common carriers, innkeepers, and those following such public avocations. And it is as clearly their duty to receive grain when the mill is running as to grind it when received.—Merrill v. Cahill, 8 Mich. 55.

¶ 3. Where two or more persons own and run such a mill, they are all liable for a refusal to receive grain brought to be ground, whether the refusal comes from one or all such owners, or from the agent in charge.—Merrill v. Cahill, 8 Mich. 55.

Injunction to prevent removal of mill fixtures, see Injunction § 75.
Duty to provide bridges for highways over raceways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4428 et seq.

¶ 4. Comp. L. 1871, §§ 1309, 1310, How. St. §§ 1453, 1454, in requiring mill races to be bridged, applies also to races cut before it was enacted; and this does not give it a retrospective operation, for it is the duty of mill-owners to bridge their races where highways cross them, independent of any statute; the statute imposes no new duty upon them, but only gives an efficient remedy for neglect of a duty existing before; it recognizes an existing duty and provides how its future performance may be compelled.—Merrill v. Village of Kalamazoo, 35 Mich. 211.

¶ 5. The exception from the operation of How. St. § 1453—which makes it the duty of all owners of mills or other waterworks, where any race or races appertaining to the same may cross a highway, to keep a good and sufficient bridge or bridges over the same —of mills erected and races dug previous to the formation of the highway, has reference to races existing when the highway was laid out.—Commissioner of Highways of Richmond Township v. Martin, 88 Mich. 115.

¶ 6. Where a dam and race were built at the same time, and the earth taken from the race was used in the construction of the dam, which was intended to be and was thereafter used as a highway in place of a portion of an old road destroyed by its construction, and the water was not let into the race until after a bridge had been built over the race, which with the dam was used instead of the old highway and bridge, such race comes within How. St. § 1453, cited, and the owners of the mill used in connection with said race are liable for its maintenance.—Commissioner of Highways of Richmond Township v. Martin, 88 Mich. 115.

¶ 7. Under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 1309, 1310, How. St. §§ 1453-4, requiring mill-owners to construct on the highway over their mill races "a good and sufficient bridge or bridges not less than fourteen feet in width," and empowering the commissioners of highways, in case of their refusal or neglect, to build at their expense such bridge or bridges, the construction by the mill-owners of a suitable bridge fourteen feet in width would be a complete performance of their legal duty, and the commissioners are only authorized to do at the expense of the mill-owners what is requisite to discharge their unperformed duty; and cannot charge them with the expense of building a bridge thirty feet wide.—Merrill v. Village of Kalamazoo, 35 Mich. 211.

¶ 8. If, when a mill race was dug, there was no traveled road within the limits of the highway crossing where the bridge was built over the race, the mill-owners cannot, under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 1309, 1310, How. St. §§ 1453-4, be held for the cost of building it.—Merrill v. Village of Kalamazoo, 35 Mich. 211.

¶ 9. Where a road has remained without alteration at the point where crossed by a mill race, questions of its abandonment and re-establishment, and of variations in its lines at other points, would not preclude the right of the public to insist upon the public way at this point, or affect in any manner the mill-owner's duty to keep the race bridged for public use.—Merrill v. Village of Kalamazoo, 35 Mich. 211.

¶ 10. The duty of mill-owners to build and maintain a bridge over a mill race is a common-law duty.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

¶ 11. Public Acts 1909, No. 283, chap. VIII, §§ 14-16, relative to the construction and repairing of bridges over mill races is an affirmance of the common-law duty of the mill-owner to make a bridge and affords a means of benefit to the public.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

Qualifications of mining experts, see Evidence § 283.
Declaration of sovereign ownership of mines and minerals in lands not patented in fee or leased from the state or the nation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 797 et seq.

¶ 1. The ownership of undiscovered minerals constitutes an estate in the land.—Hansen v. Hall, 167 Mich. 7.

¶ 2. A reservation of mineral rights in a contract relating to a sale of land without any qualification, includes gas and oil.—Weaver v. Richards, 156 Mich. 320.

¶ 3. A lessee of lands for years can work an open mine upon the premises unless restrained by the terms of his lease; but he cannot open a new mine unless the privilege of doing so is expressly granted.—Harlow v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 36 Mich. 105.

§ 2. Easements incident to mining.

Easements arising from grant of mining rights, see post § 3.
General law of easements, see Easements.

¶ 4. Where minerals are reserved from a deed in fee simple, easements to do such acts affecting the surface as are reasonably necessary to remove them may be granted or reserved so as to attach to the mining estate.—Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 50 Mich. 604.

¶ 5. The right to use shafts or other mining excavations or erections made and used solely for mining purposes is in the nature of an easement which is appurtenant to the mine.—Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 50 Mich. 604.

¶ 6. A declaration for an injury caused by the caving-in of the surface over a mine will cover a case in which the caving-in was due in part to the insufficiency of lateral supports, and need not be confined to one in which the surface fell in because of the removal of that on which it rested.—James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335.

II. CONVEYANCES, LEASES AND WORKING CONTRACTS, AND ROYALTIES.

§ 3. Conveyances and grants.

Grant or reservation of surface-working rights, see post § 4.
Sales of rights and executory agreements, see post § 5.
Leases and working agreements, see post §§ 6, 7.
Rents and royalties, see post § 8.
Actions and procedure to enforce or protect rights, see post § 9.
Easements implied in reservations of minerals, see ante § 2.
Sufficiency of tender of title with mineral rights reserved under contract for sale of "surface rights," see Vendors and Purchasers, III.
General law of deeds and contracts to convey, see Deeds; Vendors and Purchasers.
Effect of deed without reservations to estop successors in title to claim them against original grantee, see Estoppel ¶ 21.
Construction of deeds as to whether fee or incorporeal right passes, see also Deeds § 45.
Construction and effect of reservations and exceptions of mineral rights in deeds, see Deeds §§ 71, 73.
Reservation of "half" of minerals in deed, see Deeds § 236.
Construction of wills disposing of mining properties, see Wills, VI.

¶ 7. A mere reservation, in a conveyance of minerals, or such a reservation with the right of mining, must always respect surface rights of support, and will not, standing alone, permit the surface to be destroyed without some additional statutory or contract authority; and such authority will be carefully construed to prevent the destruction of surface rights.—Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 50 Mich. 604.

¶ 8. Easements to do such acts as are reasonably necessary to get out the mineral and remove it from the mine may be granted or reserved so as to attach to the mining estate.—Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 50 Mich. 604.

¶ 9. The right to use shafts or other mining erections, made and used solely for mining purposes, is in the nature of an easement appurtenant to the mine, so that ejectment for parts of the surface necessarily occupied by them cannot be brought by the grantees in a deed reserving mining rights. —Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 50 Mich. 604.

¶ 10a. Where the surface rights to real estate are in one person and the mineral rights in another, and the value of both rights is included in one assessment against the owner of the surface rights it is no more the duty of the owner of the surface rights to pay the entire tax than it is the duty of the owner of the mineral rights.—Curry v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 190 Mich. 445.

¶ 10b. Where taxes are assessed on the land as an entirety and either the surface owner or the mineral owner pays the taxes, he is entitled to contribution from the other. —Curry v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 190 Mich. 445.

§ 4. Grant or reservation of surface-working rights.

¶ 11. Grantees in a deed reserving mining rights below the surface, but providing that in case any of the surface shall be permanently occupied by the owner of the reserve right he shall compensate the owner of th fee, cannot bring ejectment on account o such occupation so far as it is necessary t the operation of the mine.—Erickson v Michigan Land & Iron Co., 50 Mich. 604.

§ 5. Sales and executory agreements for rights

Leases and working agreements, see pos §§ 6, 7.

General law of sales of interests in lands see Vendors and Purchasers.

¶ 12. An agreement to sell the location o a mining company construed, and the right of the parties thereunder determined.—Titu v. Minnesota Min. Co., 8 Mich. 183.

Joint adventures and partnerships, see Joint Adventures; Partnership.

¶ 13. A lease granting an undivided interest or right to prospect upon the lands and open and work mines, to appropriate all ores and minerals procured, to obtain wood for said purposes, and to erect buildings needful for the business, is so indefinite and incorporeal as not to be enforceable by an action of ejectment, at least until actual possession of some part has been taken; and while under it the lessee could open as many mines as he pleased, wherever he liked, and could assign his interest, he could not subdivide it and assign to more than one person, partnership or corporation; and a similar undivided right remained in the lessor.— Harlow v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 36 Mich. 105.

¶ 14. A lease of mining land from the war department of the United States government purported to give permanent rights, including a right of pre-emption. An act of congress recognized the control of the war department by providing for its transfer to the treasury department, and it also gave to occupants holding under war department leases a right of pre-emption on certain conditions. Held, that this ratified such lease whether it was originally valid or not, and that one who held an agreement from the lessee entitling him to a specified share of the land when the lessee should obtain title had a claim which followed the lessee's purchase, and obtained thereby an equitable title, which the legal owner held in trust for him, and which passed by descent and could be transferred by assignment.—Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 Mich. 39; and see Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 50 Mich. 578.

¶ 16. Agreement between the parties for joint mining operations held to include a certain property.—Quinn v. Tully, 174 Mich. 30.

¶ 17. Implied covenants cannot be incorporated in a mining lease, since prohibited by § 8959, Comp. L. 1897, § 10821, How. St., 2nd Ed.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 18. A lease of a salt-well implies no covenant that the well shall be of any particular productive capacity. In the absence of any distinct agreement the lessee takes it as he finds it.—Clark v. Babcock, 23 Mich. 164.

¶ 19. The conditions in a lease of land for mining purposes held to include the right to remove ore from the premises.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 20. Conditions in a lease of land for mining purposes held not to require that it be worked by the lessee, but merely to fix the manner of operation when actually worked.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 21. A lessee is estopped from denying the existence of merchantable ore in paying quantities by a recital in a lease that he had made an exploration and found ore in paying quantities.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 22. Where one purchases a half interest in a mine from another with the agreement that the vendor should have charge of the mine, sell the products, and divide the proceeds equally, it cannot be said that a fiduciary relation exists between them.—Dowse v. Gaynor, 155 Mich. 38.

¶ 22a. The lessee of land for mining purposes under the agreement in his lease to pay taxes assessed on the land, ore and improvements was liable for taxes assessed on the land during a year when he unsuccessfully explored for ore.—Gribben v. Atkinson, 64 Mich. 651.

§ 7. ——Forfeiture, abandonment and re-entry.

¶ 23. A mining lease is surrendered by operation of law where the lessee takes it for a corporation to be organized, holds it for a few days and then assigns it to the corporation with which the lessor deals exclusively for 10 years, during which time the original lessee is never in any way treated as under obligation and the assignee is at all times treated as the owner of the leasehold.—Gingrass v. Mather, 128 Mich. 582.

¶ 24. A lease of land for mining purposes cannot be forfeited by the lessor for the breach of an implied covenant to reasonably operate the demised premises.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 25. The failure of the lessee to mine ore, or to make an exploration sufficient to disclose whether there was mineral on the demised premises, will not permit the lessor to terminate the lease in the absence of an express provision permitting it.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 27. A mining lease prohibited the cutting of timber for the private use of the lessees or their employees, and contained a forfeiture and re-entry clause, to become operative in case of the nonpayment of the royalties and taxes agreed to be paid by the lessees, or in case of the nonperformance of any of the covenants of the lessees at any of the times fixed for such performance. Held, that such clause did not apply to a breach of the provision forbidding the cutting of timber.—Wakefield v. Sunday Lake Mining Co., 85 Mich. 605.

¶ 28. The failure to pay the royalties reserved in a mining lease when due will not, of itself, work a forfeiture, where the lease does not provide that in the event of such nonpayment it shall become void.—Wakefield v. Sunday Lake Mining Co., 85 Mich. 605.

¶ 29. Assurances given by a lessor to the officers of a company holding a mining lease, as to the time in which the royalties might be paid under the statute authorizing summary proceedings for the recovery of the possession of lands, were held to have deferred the right of re-entry until such time should elapse, or until notice of the abandonment of such proceedings should be given. —Wakefield v. Sunday Lake Mining Co., 85 Mich. 605.

¶ 30. An assurance given to the lessee in a mining lease by the lessor, at the time of the service of a notice to quit, that another notice would be given before any proceedings were taken, was held to defer the right of re-entry until such notice should be given. —Wakefield v. Sunday Lake Mining Co., 85 Mich. 605.

¶ 31. A lessee under a mining lease, which contains no provision for a forfeiture in case of nonpayment of royalties, may, on the lessor's re-entering, for this alleged cause, by collusion with the lessee's servants and holding and operating the property, make the lessor account, in equity, for all the property so held and operated, and for all ore taken from the mine by him, at the market value when taken, less the royalty to which he is entitled under the lease.—Wakefield v. Sunday Lake Mining Co., 85 Mich. 605.

¶ 32. A demand for payment of rent or royalty due, though necessary before re-entry, may be waived by the parties. Notice of re-entry or of the intention to re-enter is not necessary.—Pendill v. Union Min. Co., 64 Mich. 172.

¶ 33. Leases of coal mining lands for terms of twenty-five years, with the privilege of renewal, were given in 1857 and 1858, but the lessees did not go upon the lands and ceased to pay rent in 1871, apparently thinking that the mines were not worth working. The owners regarding the leases as abandoned, no payment having been tendered for several years, did not bring suit for the rent, but let the lands again to other persons at a higher rental. Held, on an injunction bill brought by the assignees of the original lease to establish their own title and restrain the later lessees from mining the lands, (1) that the owners had a right to regard the abandonment as final and to relet the premises; and (2) that the owners were necessary parties to a bill intended to destroy securities under which they were entitled to increased revenues, and should have been impleaded as defendants.—Porter v. Noyes, 47 Mich. 55.

¶ 34. Where a lease of a mine provided that it should be terminated sixty days after delivery by lessee to lessor of a written surrender thereof, and payment of all royalties due, and that upon performance of such conditions the lessee might remove buildings, and where lessee's assignee sent such surrender to lessor, who wrote acknowledging receipt, and stating that it had been recorded and that it disposed of the lease, and where subsequently an arrangement was made between the lessor and the assignee whereby the latter used the pumps for a week, lessor paying charges, and where, without paying royalties due, the assignee removed buildings and machinery from the land, subsequently paying such royalties, it was held that the lessor's action ratified surrender of lease, without simultaneous payment of royalties.—Pendill v. Lucy Min. Co., 105 Mich. 221.

Forfeiture for nonpayment of rent or royalty, see ante § 7.

Remedy for disposal of ore defeating lien, see post ¶ 41.

Evidence of exhaustion of ore so as to discharge royalty agreement, see post ¶ 44.

Priority of stipulated lien for royalties, see Liens § 11.

Laches in seeking accounting of profits, see also Equity ¶ 156.

¶ 35. Where a lease of land for mining iron ore upon a royalty expressly reserves to the lessors the use and possession of the land for every other purpose, and restricts the lessees' right to cut timber to such as may be wanted for mining purposes, the lessees are not liable for the stipulated royalty upon the ore, if, upon diligent search and exploration, no iron ore is found and none exists in or under the soil; but they are liable to pay the taxes upon the property as agreed in the lease.—Gribben v. Atkinson, 64 Mich. 651.

¶ 36. A lease of land "for the purpose of exploring for, mining, taking out, and removing therefrom the merchantable iron ore which is or which hereafter may be found on, in, or under said land," at stated annual "rent," to which "royalties" as earned were to be applied, presupposes the existence of merchantable ore, and if, after reasonable efforts on the part of the lessee, ore is not found in minable quantities, the lease fails, and no rent can be collected.—Blake v. Lobb's Estate, 110 Mich. 608.

¶ 37. Under a mining lease, covering several years, requiring enough ore to be mined to make certain royalties, and providing for a stipulated sum per year as minimum royalties if not mined, a mining company having exhausted the stipulated quality of ore is not required to pay the ratable minimum royalty for the last half year but will be liable for royalties on the actual amount of ore secured.—Hewitt Iron Mining Co. v. Dessau Co., 129 Mich. 590.

increase or decrease as such rate might advance or decline during the term of the agreement, does not entitle the seller to an advance equal to an increase in cost of mining all grades of coal, but only as to the increase on thirty-inch seams of coal, where, at the time the contract was made, that was the only kind of coal subject to the $1.01 rate.—Caledonia Coal Co. v. Consolidated Coal Co., 181 Mich. 431.

¶ 39. Royalties under a mining lease cannot be recovered by the landlord from the lessee's assignees whom he has excluded from possession and from working the mine.—Pendill v. Eells, 67 Mich. 657.

¶ 40. A reservation in a mining lease of a lien on "all ore mined" (that shipped as well as that remaining on the premises), to secure the payment of royalties, is not, as between the parties, waived or destroyed by a further provision contemplating that the ore will be shipped to the customary market in another state before payment of royalty, or by the custom of shipping it to be paid for by advances, since the custom could not overcome the express reservation.—Iron Duke Mine v. Braastad, 112 Mich. 79.

§ 9. Actions and procedure to enforce rights.

[Note. Matters pertaining to remedies and practice generally without anything distinctive to actions about mining rights are treated in the general procedural topics, e. g., Equity; Pleading; Evidence; Trial; Ejectment; Trespass; Conversion; Injunctions; Specific Performance; Rescission; etc.]

Ejectment for surface rights, see also ante ¶¶ 9, 11.

Limitations on action to recover share in location rights, see Limitations ¶ 54.

Limitation of actions for continuing mining trespass, see Limitations ¶¶ 255, 256.

Rescission and cancellation suits, see Rescission.

Pleading in trover for removal of ore, see Conversion § 23, ¶¶ 103, 104.

Sufficiency of mining lessee's right to sue for conversion of ore, see also Conversion § 20, ¶ 93.

¶ 41. A lessee of a mine, who disposes of ore in such a manner as to deprive the lessor of a lien for royalties expressly reserved to him by the lease, is liable to the latter in an action of tort.—Iron Duke Mine v. Braastad, 112 Mich. 79.

¶ 42. The remedy of a lessor for the breach of an implied covenant to reasonably mine demised premises, is an action at law.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 43. A bill alleges breach of an instrument conveying gravel in that certain top soil was improperly taken where, even if the provision of such instrument that the top soil not fit for the grantee's use shall be thrown off, cannot be construed to mean that such soil is not fit for the grantee's use, such bill in effect avers a breach by alleging that the top soil was not removed according to the agreement, and that the gravel beneath the rich soil, and the soil and everything were taken though the grantee promised to cease taking such soil.—Putnam v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 174 Mich. 246.

¶ 44. In an action for minimum royalties under a mining sublease, evidence that only a small amount of the stipulated annual tonnage is mined during the last year, that the ore bodies have been exhausted, that ore has been mined in small quantities since the expiration of the sublease under a new lease from the owner which was to take effect at the expiration of the one in question, that the defendant has continued to prospect unsuccessfully and taken out only a fractional part of the minimum required under the lease in question establishes the fact of exhaustion of the ore and avoids the liability for the minimum royalties.—Hewitt Iron Mining Co. v. Dessau Co., 129 Mich. 590.

III. OPERATION OF MINES AND REGULATIONS THEREOF.

§ 10. In general; public control and regulations.

§ 11. Liabilities incident to mine workings.

Rank and priority of mining liens, see Liens § 11.

Common-law liability of master to servant, see Master and Servant, III.

Workmen's Compensation Law, see Workmen's Compensation Law.

¶ 45. It is negligence not to keep mining works reasonably well protected from a common danger, such as that of falling rocks.—Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 Mich. 492; James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335.

¶ 46. If the owner of a mine turns it over to contractors when he knows or should know that it is in an unsafe condition, he is liable for an injury to a miner who goes to work in ignorance of the danger.—Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164.

¶ 47. Mere ownership of a mine does not impose the duty of keeping it in safe condition; the owner may transfer the responsibility to lessees or contractors, unless he retains control and gives others to understand that they may rely upon him to protect them from the negligence of the occupants.—Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164.

¶ 48. Where the owner of a mine in proper condition contracted with certain persons to work it, but the contract provided that the latter, not the owner, should be liable for injuries to workmen, a stipulation in the contract providing that when the contractors repaired the mine the work should be done under the supervision of a person designated by the owner, it was held that such stipulation did not require the owner to supervise, but merely gave him the right to do so, and that neglect of his own interests in this regard would not render him liable for injuries to miners.—Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164.

¶ 49. Where a mining company contracting for the removal of ore reserves to itself the power of guarding the mine from dangers, it is liable for such injuries as employees of the contractors suffer, without their own fault, from want of protection; and its responsibility is not changed by the fact that the work is done by the ton instead of by the day.—Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 Mich. 492.

¶ 50. A flooding of one mine from another sustains no right of action if it only results from the exercise, by either mining company, of its right to discontinue operations, or to go on after the other has discontinued.—National Copper Co. v. Minnesota Min. Co., 57 Mich. 83.

Statutory duties and liabilities of mine owners, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 741-748.
Duty and liability in mining accident cases, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 750-768.
Work necessarily dangerous to others as affecting liability of employer for acts of independent contractor, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 928-937.

§ 12. Injury to lateral and subjacent support.

Easements for support, see also ante ¶ 6.
Effect of reservation on surface rights, see ante ¶ 7.
General duty of adjoining owners as to lateral support, see Adjoining Owners.
Right of adjoining owner to enter and inspect mines, see Comp. L. 1915, § 9079 et seq.

¶ 51. A declaration for a negligent injury caused by the caving-in of the surface over a mine will cover a case in which the caving-in was due in part to the insufficiency of lateral supports, and need not be confined to one in which the surface fell in because of the removal of that on which it rested.—James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335.

Jury questions as to knowledge or notice of open hole, see post ¶ 54.
Sufficiency of evidence of neglect, see post ¶ 55.

¶ 52. Plaintiff's decedent lived on a strip of mining property 3 miles long and 2 miles wide, and in a house owned by defendant mining company. A portion of the property, once operated as a mine, was entirely unfenced and was an open common used for pasture. Across this portion a footpath extended to the highway which was used by the occupants of houses located on said mining property. This footpath ran within some 15 feet of an old open pit filled with water, which had an opening of some 5 by 6 feet in area at the surface, and was so surrounded by grass and bushes as to make its existence unsuspected a few feet away. This pit was about 1,400 feet from the decedent's home and less than 200 feet from the highway. The decedent, twelve years of age, in collecting wood in a wheelbarrow about said mining property, fell into the pit and was drowned. The decedent's father was a lessee or at least an occupant by permission of defendant's house. Held, plaintiff's decedent was not a trespasser or a mere licensee to whom defendant owed no duty, but such a license was possessed by the father as to impose upon defendant the duty to warn the decedent of such existing dangers as were known to it or which should have been discovered by it in the exercise of reasonable care.—Peklenk v. Isle Royale Copper Co., 170 Mich. 299.

Injuries to miners and others caused by objects falling down mine shafts, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 1065-1075.

Declaration for cave-in damaging lateral support, see ante ¶ 51.
Actions based on common-law or statutory tort liability for negligence to servants, see Master and Servant, III, H.
Procedure under Workmen's Compensation Act, see Workmen's Compensation Law.
Actions for death or under Survival Act in general, see Death by Wrongful Act.
Action for death of infant employed unlawfully in mine, see Death by Wrongful Act.

¶ 53. Timbering put up in a mine to stay the walls must be adapted to the incidents of mining, such as the falling of ore and rock, and the shock of explosions; and where experienced mining men differ in their testimony as to the adequacy or inadequacy of such timbering, it is for the jury to form their own conclusions.—James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335.

¶ 54. In an action for wrongful death of a child, who was drowned by falling into an unguarded and partially concealed old mining excavation situated about 200 feet from a highway and 15 feet from a much traveled path, evidence held sufficient to submit to the jury on question whether officers of the mining company in the exercise of reasonable diligence ought to have been aware of the hole.—Peklenk v. Isle Royale Copper Co., 187 Mich. 644.

¶ 55. Plaintiff's decedent lived on a strip of mining property 3 miles long and 2 miles wide and in a house owned by defendant mining company. A portion of the property, once operated as a mine, was entirely unfenced and was an open common used for pasture. Across this portion a footpath extended to the highway which was used by the occupant of houses located on said mining property. This footpath ran within some 15 feet of an old open pit filled with water, which had an opening some 5 by 6 feet in area at the surface, and was so surrounded by grass and bushes as to make its existence unsuspected a few feet away. This pit was about 1,400 feet from the decedent's home and less than 200 feet from the highway. The decedent, twelve years of age, in collecting wood in a wheelbarrow about said mining property, fell into the pit and was drowned. No responsible officer of defendant had actual knowledge of the existence of the pit, but the superintendent knew of a trench leading from it. Held, there was sufficient evidence of defendant's negligence under Comp. L. 1897, § 11527, imposing the duty of guarding such openings as the one in question, to require the submission of such questions to the jury.—Peklenk v. Isle Royale Copper Co., 170 Mich. 299.

¶ 56. Under Comp. L. 1857, chap. 63, How. St. § 4004, the company's business office may be in one county and the mining business be carried on in another.—Van Etten v. Eaton, 19 Mich. 187.

¶ 58. A mining corporation cannot issue accommodation paper and deliver it to third persons.—Beecher v. Dacey, 45 Mich. 92.

¶ 59. Laws 1875, p. 128 (How. St. § 4015), which was passed to confirm sales or leases by mining companies that had been made in good faith and for value though not according to the requirements of Comp. L. 1871, § 2888 (How. St. § 4052), did not make such sales, etc., presumptive evidence of their rightful character; but it must still be shown that they were in good faith, etc.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Atkinson, 44 Mich. 166.

¶ 60. Comp. L. 1871, § 2888 (How. St. § 4052), providing that alienations or mortgages of lands, etc., of mining companies should have no force or effect unless authorized by a three-fifths vote of stock at a meeting called by notice as provided in Comp. L. 1871, § 2887, was enacted to protect the interests of stockholders, and would not enable others to raise questions of irregularity as to the notice.—Beecher v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co., 45 Mich. 103.

¶ 61. The fact that the president and treasurer of a mining company who are also its sole corporators having substantial interests conducted their business as if they were partners does not enable one who did not deal with them as partners to recover for notes given and taken as corporate notes unless he shows a corporate liability.—New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank of Negaunee, 39 Mich. 644.

¶ 1. In order to reform a written contract on the ground of mistake the mistake must be both mutual and common to both parties to the contract.—A. E. Wood & Co. v. Standard Drug Co., 192 Mich. 453.

¶ 2. In order to ascertain whether a mistake has been made in describing property in a deed, it is essential to ascertain the intent of the parties—the one in selling, and the other in buying—as to the subject-matter of the sale; and if the deed fails to express that intent, there is a mistake which can be relieved against in equity.—Conlin v. Masecar, 80 Mich. 139.

¶ 3. There is no contract where there turns out to be no subject-matter. So held where the agreement was based on a supposed judgment which did not exist.—Gibson v. Pelkie, 37 Mich. 380.

¶ 4. One who after investigation pays a claim made in good faith, but afterwards found to be baseless, cannot recover back the money on the ground that it was paid under mistake of fact.—McArthur v. Luce, 43 Mich. 435.

Overruling of former decision as ground for relief of person acting thereon to his detriment, see also Courts ¶ 111.
Suing under unconstitutional law as badge of malice, see Malicious Prosecution ¶ 58.

¶ 5. A mistake of law is something done or suffered under a misapprehension of legal rights, and in reliance upon what one believes them to be; it must be the necessary result of ignorance, and without negligence in its origin, and diligence in seeking relief upon the discovery of the mistake is as necessary as in cases of fraud.—Macklem v. Bacon, 57 Mich. 334.

¶ 6. Mutuality in a mistake of law does not aid the equities that arise from it, for equity will never interfere unless there is something that makes it inequitable to enforce the obligation over which the mistake has occurred.—Macklem v. Bacon, 57 Mich. 334.

¶ 8. The rule that equity will not relieve against a mistake of law is not universal;

where a person is ignorant or mistaken with respect to his own antecedent and existing private legal rights, interests or estates, and enters into some transaction, the legal scope and operation of which he correctly apprehends and understands, for the purpose of affecting such assumed rights, interests or estates, equity will grant its relief, defensive or affirmative, treating the mistake as analogous to, if not identical with, a mistake of fact.—Renard v. Clink, 91 Mich. 1.

¶ 9. There are cases of fraudulent misrepresentations or concealments of matters of law by those holding confidential relations to the person wronged thereby which equity will relieve against.—Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470.

¶ 10. The doctrine which makes a party bear the consequences of his mistakes of law is often hard and can be maintained on grounds of general policy only; hence it is relaxed in some instances where the mistake of this party is combined with the fraud or misconduct of the other party to the transaction.—Tabor v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 44 Mich. 324.

¶ 11. Whether or not it is competent to relieve against the consequences of a mistake of law clearly made out, quære.—Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 Mich. 13.

¶ 12. Where a claim is allowed by a board of auditors after they have been informed that their liability is doubtful and have taken advice, they cannot recover back the sum paid on such allowance, as their mistake is one of law and not of fact.—Wayne County v. Randall, 43 Mich. 137.

¶ 13. One who through gross laches or ignorance of the law fails to redeem lands sold on execution within the time allowed by law has no claim afterwards to relief in equity.—Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27.

¶ 14. A husband who had been appointed administrator of the estate of his deceased wife disposed of it in accordance with her ante-mortem oral directions, turning over to her son's guardian notes amounting to over two-thirds of the property. Afterwards he filed a bill to secure the return of the notes, claiming not to have been aware of his own legal rights as an heir of his wife and to have acted under the advice of the probate judge. Relief was denied him.—Hughes v. Pealer, 80 Mich. 540.

¶ 15. Defendant in divorce agreed, after considering the matter, to permit his wife to take a decree of divorce "without costs or alimony." Held, that he could not have the decree set aside for fraud on the ground of his ignorance of his wife's right to dower on divorce.—Orth v. Orth, 69 Mich. 158.

¶ 16. A wife at her husband's request signed with him a note which represented a debt of his, and also sums to be advanced during his illness and for the support of the family. In ignorance of her rights, but without undue influence from any one, she paid the note out of insurance moneys received upon her husband's death, and she acquiesced in the filing of her claim for the amount so paid against her husband's estate, which was solvent. Held, that the payment was voluntary, and could not be recovered back.—Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 485.

¶ 17. An instrument in writing, deliberately adopted by the parties, must stand as written, although the parties may have mistaken its legal intent.—Holmes v. Hall, 8 Mich. 66.

¶ 18. Mistake as to the legal effect of a written instrument constitutes no ground for relief in equity.—Martin v. Hamlin, 18 Mich. 354.

¶ 19. A contract made on the strength of a decision which is erroneous and is afterwards overruled is made under a mistake of law, if any, and the overruling of the decision affords no ground for relief.—Pittsburg & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 118 Mich. 109. Writ of error dismissed in 178 U. S. 270, 44 L. ed. 1065, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931.

¶ 20. A lessee's foreign birth and ignorance of the law cannot alter the terms of a lease which he has accepted.—Steubben v. Granger, 63 Mich. 306.

¶ 21. Ignorance—arising from failure to read the instrument—of the terms of one's contract will not relieve one person from his contract obligations; the law only relieves therefrom in cases of fraud, mistake, waiver, or estoppel.—Wierengo v. American Fire Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 621.

¶ 22. The fact that the son told his wife that the agreement to support his mother for life and to give a lien on the farm as security was not enforceable will not defeat the wife's liability after the son's death on a contract made by both and read to her before signing.—Milks v. Milks, 129 Mich. 164.

¶ 23. In an action upon a guaranty given by defendants to secure an indebtedness assumed by a third person and to secure the payment of the purchase price of goods sold to such person, it being shown that defendants knew that such person was about to obtain goods from plaintiff, that before he could obtain same he would have to secure signers to the papers presented to them for signature, but instead of making certain as to what the paper contained relied on such person's representations as to its contents, a defense that they signed same in ignorance of its contents and in reliance on such person's representations that it was a recommendation is not available.—Saginaw Medicine Co. v. Batey, 179 Mich. 651.

¶ 24. In an action on a guaranty, a defense that defendants signed same in ignorance of its contents in the belief that it was a mere recommendation is not available where upon receipt of the instrument the obligee wrote to them acknowledging its receipt and referring to it as a guaranty, to which letter they paid no attention.—Saginaw Medicine Co. v. Batey, 179 Mich. 651.

¶ 24a. In an action for damages for breach of a contract for the exchange of real estate, held that if a supplemental agreement to waive further tender of title was understood by defendant when signed by him and was not obtained by fraud, it was binding on defendant.—Frederick v. Hillebrand, 199 Mich. 333.

¶ 25. Where, in purchasing for a certain sum, all the merchantable pine fit for sawlogs on certain land, the vendee relies wholly upon his own estimates, and the contract, skilfully drawn by experienced men, contains no warranty as to the quantity or quality of timber, the vendee can have no relief as upon an implied warranty or for a mistake, if, through unsoundness, the yield falls far below his expectations.—Nester v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 69 Mich. 290.

¶ 26. Where the parcel of land offered for sale was fenced, and both parties were upon the ground and saw the inclosed land, which was described to the purchaser as two lots, —it having been so described in mortgages which the vendor had purchased, who had afterwards taken a deed containing a like description,—when in fact one-half of one of the lots was owned and occupied by an adjoining proprietor, such mistake was mutual, and could be corrected in equity.—Conlin v. Masecar, 80 Mich. 139.

¶ 27. A bill of sale of a livery stock included "two two-seated full-top carriages," but it afterward appeared that one of the carriages which the vendor supposed was a full-top was not so. Held, that this mistake of fact could not, in law, relieve him of the obligation to deliver a full-top in its place or account for the value of such a carriage. —Lampson v. Cummings, 52 Mich. 491.

¶ 28. Where an obligor in a bond conditioned to pay any decree that might be obtained in foreclosure proceedings was not fraudulently induced to sign it by the obligee, he cannot be released on the ground that he did not know of a prior incumbrance when he signed it.—Rynearson v. Fredenburg, 42 Mich. 412.

¶ 29. A wife's claim that when she joined in a mortgage with her husband she did not know that it included certain lands belonging to herself, that she had not read the mortgage or heard it read, and that, if she had, she would not have recognized her lands by the description, was not sustained where it appeared that the mortgagee had acted in good faith and had done nothing to mislead her, and where the security, excluding her land, would fall far short of satisfying the debt.—Peake v. Thomas, 39 Mich. 584.

¶ 30. Where defendant, the grantee, evidently believed that he was purchasing all the land described in the deeds, and where he paid the full consideration therefor, such deeds will not be set aside as for a mutual mistake in description.—Darling v. Jewell, 96 Mich. 187.

§ 5. Accident.

¶ 32. Courts of equity have large powers for relief against the consequences of inevitable accident in private dealings, and may doubtless control their own process and decrees to that end, but they have no such power to relieve against statutory forfeitures.—Cameron v. Adams, 31 Mich. 426.

¶ 33. A deed from a wife to a husband will be set aside after his death where the evidence shows that they have made mutual deeds to insure the land in the survivor, that while she was sick he obtained her deed without her knowledge and recorded it and that afterward he undertook to grant back the property, but died before the deed was executed.—Gardiner v. Gardiner, 134 Mich. 90.

¶ 34. A person is presumed to know the nature of an instrument executed by him.—Ensign v. Dunn, 181 Mich. 456.

¶ 35. A municipal officer who claims to recover from the city money which he has paid to it by mistake has the burden of showing the mistake and the overpayment; but no different weight of evidence is required than in any other civil issue.—McBride v. City of Grand Rapids, 47 Mich. 236.

¶ 37. There is no error in rejecting vague evidence offered by an alleged lessee to show that he did not understand he was making a lease when he signed the instrument, where such evidence is opposed to the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, and where the lessee has made no protest for sixteen years after discovering the alleged mistake.—Campau v. Lafferty, 50 Mich. 114.

¶ 38. Plaintiff advertised to sell at public auction his one-half interest in standing wheat, which was bought by the defendant at a named price and paid for. Plaintiff later voluntarily repaid to defendant one-half of the money on the mistaken belief that he had been paid too much. Held, in an action to recover this amount as paid by mistake the defendant should be permitted to show in rebuttal of mistake that he really thought that he was buying the whole and not one-half interest.—Stowell v. Ames, 148 Mich. 439.

Sufficiency of proof to warrant reformation, see Reformation, III.
Evidence that parties understood effect of instrument, see also Fraud §§ 48, 50.

¶ 39. An alleged mistake in a conveyance calls for very strong proof; and in the case of a mortgage the mortgagor's testimc that he really intended to leave certain p cels out of the description is not of its enough to show they are in by mistake Shepard v. Shepard, 36 Mich. 178.

¶ 40. The evidence of mistake in a wı ten contract, on which the court should in giving relief, ought to be so clear as establish the fact beyond cavil; and es cially where the party setting up the m take has had the contract prepared by own professional adviser, and apparen with care and deliberation.—Vary v. Sh 36 Mich. 388.

¶ 41. A mistake in drawing notes and mortgage to a husband and wife jointly stead of to him alone is shown by evidei that they grew out of a sale of land own by him, that within four days after th were taken he made a will assuming to d pose of them as his, giving his wife a l estate in them, that when he died she his legatee acquiesced in their being inv toried as part of his estate and received t income from them as such, that each of th was possessed of considerable means, a that the scrivener did not draw them cording to the understanding of the parti —McLeod v. Free, 96 Mich. 57.

¶ 43. On a bill to reform a lease on count of fraud or mistake in not including heating provision therein, evidence held sufficient to establish a mutual mistake. A. E. Wood & Co. v. Standard Drug Co., 1 Mich. 453.

¶ 44. Complainant's right to sue to redee from a mortgage was not cut off by quitclaim deed which was made for anoth purpose than to convey title, where it a peared that the mortgagee in possession the premises caused a quitclaim deed to prepared and sent to the mortgagor, and though knowing him to be a married ma the mortgagee did not include his wife as party to it; and where in her letter tran mitting such deed she called it a power attorney which she required to help her collecting the rent, and where the deed was in the English language, but the letter in Swedish, the latter language being better understood by the mortgagor.—Shouler v. Bonander, 80 Mich. 531.

¶ 45. On a bill to foreclose a mortgage on a wife's separate property where she claimed she never executed the contract or note and mortgage with a knowledge of their contents, a finding that the mortgage sought to be foreclosed was given by the mortgagor, a married woman, with full knowledge of its contents, was approved, where there was evidence that the scrivener had explained to her the contents of the papers before she signed, and further that he had explained that the mortgage was a lien on her individual property.—Knowlson v. Bruist, 86 Mich. 588.

¶ 46. A deed will not be set aside at the suit of a wife who joined with her husband in its execution to secure his creditor, which indebtedness the wife had advised her husband to secure, on the ground that she was ignorant of the contents of the deed, where it appears that no misrepresentations were made to her at the time she executed the deed, and that she made no inquiry as to its form or contents.—Sanborn v. Sanborn, 104 Mich. 180.

¶ 47. A verdict ought to be set aside which holds a lease to be void on the lessee's claim that he signed it supposing it to be something else, and which, in so holding, ignores the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, and the fact that after the lessee discovered the alleged mistake he made no protest for sixteen years.—Campau v. Lafferty, 50 Mich. 114.

¶ 48. A vendor's claim that the word "heretofore," in a land contract providing for releases to the vendee on account of payments "heretofore" made in case of platting and sale of parts of the land at agreed minimum prices for each foot of frontage, was a clerical error, and that "hereafter" was intended, is sustained by the testimony of the vendee and his agent that neither of them expected, at the time of the transaction, that the release clause would cover the down payment, taken in connection with other clauses in the contract indicating clearly that the parties had in mind releases for future payments only.—Johnson v. Wilson, 111 Mich. 114.

¶ 50. A stipulation in a lease that the property adjoining the premises leased shall not be used as a billiard hall was properly found to have been with the full consent and knowledge of all parties, where, in an action for an accounting under instrument, the evidence shows that no fraud or misrepresentation was in any way practiced upon defendants, to induce them to make such a contract, and that all parties entered into such lease with full knowledge of all its terms and conditions.—Emigh v. Whiteley, 140 Mich. 21.

¶ 52. An intention on both sides to have a deed cover not only the lands of the grantor described therein but also an alley adjoining in which he had a possessory interest or claim and which was used in connection with said described land as a coal and wood yard, being contiguous with the opposite half of the alley and abutting land of a railroad company used under lease for the same purpose, was shown by testimony of the broker and the scrivener of the contract that grantor was selling the "whole business" or all of his property, the testimony of grantor that he asked and "found out" that grantee "wanted the whole lot," and the testimony of him and another showing that he knew of the alley and had held it as his own and that he considered that "it would always go with that property" coupled with the fact that the buyer and grantee had no knowledge of the existence of the alley and supposed it was included in the description and would not have bought the land had he known the contrary.—Kinyon v. Cunningham, 146 Mich. 430.

¶ 53. On a bill to correct a mistake in the description of a deed, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that a mutual mistake was made as to the amount of land to be conveyed.—White v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 190 Mich. 1.

¶ 54. On a bill for reformation of a contract for the sale of land on the ground of mistake, where it appeared that the contract called for a certain number of feet off a certain lot, being the building then occupied by defendant as a drug store, all of which lot complainant expected to and did acquire title to, and defendant found out before signing the contract that the drug store did not cover all of the ground, and complainant was unaware of the discrepancy until after the contract was signed, evidence held insufficient to show a mutual mistake warranting reformation of the contract.—Schlossman v. Rouse, 197 Mich. 399.

¶ 55. Evidence held to sustain the finding, on a bill to correct a certain deed, that the grantor in such deed possessed a one-half interest only, in the lands described therein and that by mutual mistake the deed was made to convey the entire interest instead of such one-half interest, only, of the grantor in the lands.—Gustin v. McKay, 196 Mich. 181.

¶ 1. A mortgage is no longer in this state what it was originally at the common law—a grant of the land to the mortgagee, defeasible upon condition subsequent, and to become absolute on failure to pay at the specified time. It is a mere chattel interest, a security or lien upon the land for the debt, which can be enforced only by sale on foreclosure. The estate in the land is still in the mortgagor; his title is a legal one, and the mortgagee gets no title or right of possession until after foreclosure.—Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; Batty v. Snook, 5 Mich. 231; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 270; Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351; Ormsby v. Barr, 22 Mich. 80; Gorham v. Arnold, 22 Mich. 247; Wagar v. Stone, 36 Mich. 364; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 Mich. 503.

¶ 2. In this state a mortgage is not a grant of the land to the mortgagee, defeasible upon condition subsequent, and to become absolute on failure to pay at the specified time. It is a mere security, the estate in the land and the right of possession remaining in the mortgagor until the mortgage is foreclosed and the equity of redemption has expired.—Bowen v. Brogan, 119 Mich. 218.

¶ 3. Once a mortgage always a mortgage. —Thompson v. Mack, H. 150; Batty v. Snook, 5 Mich. 231; Emerson v. Atwater, 7 Mich. 12; Reed v. Bond, 96 Mich. 134.

¶ 4. There can be no mortgage without a mortgagee.—Sinclair v. Slawson, 44 Mich. 123.

¶ 5. At law, to constitute a mortgage, the grantor himself, and not a third person, must be entitled to the benefit of a defeasance.—Case v. Ranney, 174 Mich. 673.

¶ 6. A mortgage may be given to one person in trust for another.—Comstock v. Howard, W. 110.

§ 3. Debt or obligation or consideration for mortgage.

Consideration in general, see Contracts, V.
Presumption that consideration is correctly stated, see also Evidence § 51, ¶ 273.
Presumption as to stated consideration being correct, see also Contracts § 139, ¶ 605.

Part payment as nugatory consideration for release of personal liability, see Contracts § 123, ¶ 539.
Void judgments as nugatory consideration, see Contracts § 133.

¶ 7. A mortgage cannot be sustained without an obligation capable of proof.—Sackner v. Sackner, 39 Mich. 39.

¶ 8. The nonpayment of any consideration for a mortgage deprives the mortgagee of all equities.—Terry v. Tuttle, 24 Mich. 208.

¶ 9. Where a mortgage does not represent a real debt chancery will order it to be surrendered and cancelled.—Teed v. Marvin, 41 Mich. 216.

¶ 10. A mortgage for amount of the fine given to a county as the condition of a pardon from sentence of imprisonment and fine is upon sufficient consideration.—Rood v. Winslow, W. 340; Rood v. Winslow, 2 D. 68.

¶ 11. A mortgage given in Michigan on settlement of a debt that is payable in Canada is not invalidated by the fact that in fixing the amount of it the current premiums on gold were allowed upon the amount of the Canadian debt, Canadian currency being then on a gold basis.—Oliver v. Shoemaker, 35 Mich. 464.

¶ 12. The liability of one for a deficiency judgment rendered on the foreclosure of mortgages on land, which he had bought for a partnership association afterwards formed and which land he conveyed to it, is a sufficient consideration for a mortgage to him of other lands to secure him, the association being legally liable to him for the amount.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 13. A mortgage given by the vendee in a land contract to secure the purchase price of a resale at a larger sum made to him by his vendor's grantee who had no greater rights than the vendor, held without consideration.—Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109.

¶ 14. Where a mortgage was given on the understanding that the mortgagor should have a future credit, and the mortgagee's agent, who took it, knew that it would not have been given otherwise, it cannot be enforced for a different purpose, and if no credit is thereafter given and no advances made, it is held to be without consideration. —Mizner v. Kussell, 29 Mich. 229.

¶ 15. A mortgage by a legatee to secure the performance of an agreement whereby an executrix is to perfect title to property or in default to repurchase the same for a stipulated price, it appearing that the executrix purchased indirectly a homestead at an executrix' sale, which property she wished to sell, is based on sufficient consideration, and a default occurs where an effort to obtain deeds from nonresident heirs to the property is unsuccessful.—Litchfield v. Tunnicliff, 118 Mich. 383.

¶ 16. Where a bill seeks to enjoin the foreclosure of a mortgage on the ground that it was procured through fraud and misrepresentation and was without consideration, and the evidence shows that when the mortgage was given the parties had an accounting and agreed on the amount due, no complaint can be made as to the consideration passed, though a part may have been given to discharge an earlier obligation founded upon an illegal agreement.—Quigley v. Wolf, 177 Mich. 467.

¶ 16a. Note and mortgage given for an existing debt are presumed to have been taken as security and not as payment, in absence of evidence to contrary.—Dempsey v. Pforzheimer, 86 Mich. 652.

¶ 16b. A mortgage given by an execution debtor pending a bill by him to set aside an execution sale of the land mortgaged, upon which bill a decree is entered giving the purchaser at such sale a lien for improvements and disbursements, to be paid by the debtor, the land to be sold in case of default, is valid as against the debtor and a grantee from him with notice, where the land is sold under such decree, and purchased by a third person for the benefit of such debtor.—Seeley v. Sharrer, 112 Mich. 267.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.
Estoppel of mortgagor to dispute mortgage, persons bound as privies to estoppel, see Estoppel ¶ 235.

¶ 17. If the assignee of a mortgage which is in form of a mortgage on real estate, and which was recorded as such by the original mortgagee, instead of being filed as a chattel mortgage, treats it as a real estate mortgage in proceedings for foreclosure, he is afterwards estopped by his conduct from asserting the contrary.—Miles v. McNaughton, 111 Mich. 350.

¶ 20. A deed absolute on its face may be enforced as a mortgage, when given as security for a loan.—Mintz v. Soule, 182 Mich. 564.

¶ 21. A deed absolute upon its face may be shown in fact to be a mortgage.—Ruch v. Ruch, 159 Mich. 231.

¶ 22. An instrument of conveyance that on its face purports to be given to secure a payment is merely a mortgage.—Cowles v. Marble, 37 Mich. 158.

¶ 23. A deed may be properly taken as security when the amount to be secured is uncertain and depends on future advances.—Abbott v. Gregory, 39 Mich. 68.

¶ 24. To render a conveyance absolute in its terms a mortgage, it must be so in its inception. It can never become a mortgage by any subsequent act; and if it once become an absolute deed for a moment it must always remain so.—Swetland v. Swetland, 3 Mich. 482.

¶ 25. A deed absolute will be decreed, on appropriate evidence, to have been given as a security requiring to be treated as a mortgage in an accounting between the parties.—Jordan v. DeGolia, 91 Mich. 370.

§ 7. Sufficiency, form and effect of defeasance.

Sufficiency of mortgage between parties without recordation, see Notice and Record of Title, II, A.
Statutory provision as to deed absolute in form where intended as mortgage, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11723.

¶ 26. The character of a deed as security is not destroyed by the fact that no defeasance was given until after the delivery of the deed, provided the transactions were substantially contemporaneous and were manifestly meant to amount to a mortgage.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 27. The recital in a bond of defeasance that the obligor will reconvey such interest as he has now acquired establishes the contemporaneous character of the deed and defeasance and cannot be contradicted by parol.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 28. A bond of defeasance, being under seal, is an instrument of as high order as the deed which it accompanies.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 29. A bond to reconvey is valid as a defeasance even though it covers lands belonging to a third person and included with the grantor's land by virtue of a power of attorney to him to sell them. It would be good at law as to the grantor's land, and in equity as to the third person's, the last not being mortgageable under a power of sale.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 30. A deed absolute taken in connection with a bond or separate defeasance or agreement, executed at the same time, to reconvey on payment of a stated sum, constitutes a mortgage if the instruments are of the same date or are executed and delivered at the same time and as one transaction. When this is the case it is a conclusion of law that they constitute a legal mortgage.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 31. The mortgagor of land that was worth considerably more than the mortgage debt deeded it to the mortgagee and took back a contract of sale which provided that, in case of default in payment, the party of the first part should be entitled to immediate possession, and should also have a lien on the crops. Held, that the deed and contract together should be construed as a mortgage, amounting, only, to a change in the form of a security for a continuing liability, and that it was unimportant that the conveyance and defeasance were, as indeed was formerly customary, separate instruments.—Ferris v. Wilcox, 51 Mich. 105.

Intention of parties, see post § 9.
Inadequacy or disparity of consideration, see post § 10.
Agreements and options for reconveyance, see post § 11.
Agreement for sale and payment of surplus in excess of debt, see post § 12.

Application of rule against resulting trusts to prevent declaring deed to be a mortgage, see Trusts, IV.

¶ 32. In doubtful cases courts of equity incline to construe a deed with a condition to be a mortgage; and may do so where a deed and bond to convey are concurrent instruments, in the absence of facts showing the intention of the parties to be otherwise.—Swetland v. Swetland, 3 Mich. 482.

¶ 33. In doubtful cases the court will lean to the conclusion that a security rather than a conditional sale was intended; and where the idea that a security was intended is conveyed with reasonable distinctness by the writings, and no evil practice or mistake appears, the court will incline to regard the transaction as a security, because of the general reasons which in all cases of uncertainty favor written evidence. But if it satisfactorily appears that a conditional sale was intended, the transaction must retain the stamp which the parties themselves have given to it.—Cornell v. Hall, 22 Mich. 377.

¶ 34. The form of a contract cannot prevent an examination of the whole transaction on a bill in equity, if it was entered into in continuation of an earlier agreement. —Curtiss v. Sheldon, 47 Mich. 262.

¶ 36. Land mortgaged for half its value was exchanged by the owner for personalty worth about the amount of the mortgage, and a warranty deed was executed by the owner, the grantee agreeing to pay the mortgage and also giving a paper agreeing to reconvey to the grantor in six months for a certain sum. The grantee soon after paid the mortgage, but the grantor made no repayment. Held, that the transaction was an absolute sale of land, and not a mere security for the price of the personalty. —Stahl v. Dehn, 72 Mich. 645.

¶ 37. Where it appears that, by express agreement of the parties, a debt due from the grantor to the grantee was extinguished by the deed, or that the money paid was not advanced by way of loan, or that it is at the option of the grantor to refund or to keep the money, the transaction is a conditional sale and not a mortgage. But if the remedies of grantor and grantee are reciprocal—the former bound to repay the money, the latter to reconvey the premises—then the deed will be construed a mortgage.—Swetland v. Swetland, 3 Mich. 482.

¶ 38. The character of an instrument in the form of a warranty deed with conditions, which is construed as a conditional sale, is not changed by the fact that it is assigned by a party, where the assignment calls the deed a "mortgage," or by the fact that such parties treat the instrument as a mortgage.—Blumberg v. Beekman, 121 Mich. 647.

¶ 39. An instrument must be construed a mortgage if, taken alone or in connection with surrounding facts, it seems to have been given as a security; the mere absence of terms of defeasance cannot determine its character as being or not being a mortgage. —Cooper v. Brock, 41 Mich. 488.

¶ 40. A quitclaim deed cannot be considered as a final surrender of all the grantor's interest, where the intention was in fact to secure the grantee for a debt due him fr the grantor, and enable him to dispose the property the more readily for the sa faction of the debt.—Curtiss v. Sheldon, Mich. 262.

¶ 41. A deed to secure money lent, with an understanding that the land is deemable by its payment, is a mortgage between the parties and those who purch from them with notice.—Hurst v. Bea 50 Mich. 612.

¶ 42. A wife's deed is not enforced as equitable mortgage where the arrangem was simply to secure the husband's de and was not assented to by her.—Harve Galloway, 48 Mich. 531.

¶ 43. A wife gave a deed of her separ estate, in which her husband joined, to cure a loan made to them, and all par executed a written instrument explaining transaction. This arrangement was ab doned, however, and the lender made a n one with the husband for his debt al to which the wife did not, so far as pears, assent. Held, that proceedings wo not lie to enforce the deed as an equita mortgage.—Harvey v. Galloway, 48 M 531.

¶ 44. A son was indebted to his mot and, on the third day before fleeing to av arrest for crime, he executed to his mot a deed, in which his wife joined, of all his real estate, including his homestead. took the deed, as also a bill of sale of interest in a vessel, to his mother, and t her that he had some papers to deliver her, and, upon being asked by her what t were, answered that she "need not wo any more." At about the same time he e cuted to his mother a bill of sale of all his remaining personal property, and pla the same on file in the office of the c clerk. The mother had no knowledge, u after her son had left the country, of execution of the second bill of sale. greater part of the indebtedness was denced by promissory notes, which were delivered to the son, nor was anything s about their surrender. Held, that the d is in fact a mortgage, and the only pro remedy open to the grantee is by a bill foreclose the same.—Sanborn v. Sanb 104 Mich. 180.

Sufficiency of evidence of intent of part see post ¶ 88.

¶ 45. The intention of the parties is vital question in determining the charac of an instrument in the form of a warra deed with conditions inserted, which claimed to be a mortgage.—Blumberg Beekman, 121 Mich. 647.

¶ 46. Though contracts for repurch contemporaneous with conveyances absol in form are sometimes strong evidence tending to show that the conveyances are intended to be mortgages, yet, where it appears that the parties really intended an absolute sale and a contract permitting repurchase, such intention must control, and, to ascertain the intention, the court will look beyond the writings to the circumstances surrounding the transaction.—Stahl v. Dehn, 72 Mich. 645.

¶ 47. Where a deed is given by a debtor to his creditor to secure a debt, the effect only of a mortgage can be given to the transaction, whatever the intent of the parties.—Hosley v. Holmes, 27 Mich. 416.

§ 10. ——Inadequacy or disparity of consideration.

¶ 48. In determining whether a deed absolute on its face was intended to be given as a mortgage, the adequacy or inadequacy of the price paid is a circumstance of great importance.—Schmidt v. Barclay, 161 Mich. 1.

¶ 49. A deed from a client to his attorney conveying property worth more than $9,000 for a stated consideration of $1,000, but subject to dower interest of a widow 54 years of age, held to be a mortgage to secure the amount stated as consideration, testimony being in conflict as to whether it was intended as a deed or as a mortgage.—Dean v. Radford, 137 Mich. 617.

¶ 50. On a bill to obtain an accounting and to have a deed declared a mortgage and the amount due ascertained, where it appears that the husband possessed considerable influence over the decedent grantor, and that she was in a helpless physical feeble mental condition, that she had reposed great trust and confidence in him, and could only transact business through him, when the consideration mentioned in the deed and bill of sale is disputed by him, the burden of proof of showing the true consideration, and that his transactions with her were fair and honest is upon the husband, the wife and grantor being dead.—Cady v. Burgess, 144 Mich. 523.

¶ 51. Complainant who owned the equity of redemption of certain lands, agreed with defendant that the latter should furnish the money to redeem and take the deed to the lands upon agreement to resell to complainant within two years for the amount advanced with interest and expenses. Subsequently and without any new consideration complainant also conveyed to defendant's wife by warranty deed. He failed to repurchase within the two years and brought this suit to have the transaction declared a mortgage. Held that equity would treat the conveyance as a mortgage to secure the money advanced.—Malone v. Danforth, 137 Mich. 227.

¶ 52. A conveyance absolute in form will not be held to be a mortgage from the mere fact of an agreement to reconvey with or without an advance in price.—Stahl v. Dehn, 72 Mich. 645.

¶ 53. Where land is conveyed by a debtor to his creditor, and an instrument given back which shows that the land is to be reconveyed on payment of the debt, such instrument cannot be regarded as an agreement for the sale of the land, but the transaction is plainly a conveyance of the land as security for the debt—in other words, a mortgage.—Enos v. Sutherland, 11 Mich. 538.

¶ 54. Defendant Miller and his wife owned, separately, each four lots. Mrs. Miller was in jail for failure to pay a fine of two hundred dollars. She told her husband that if he would raise two hundred dollars to pay her fine she would deed him absolutely her four lots. Miller went to one Cronks and borrowed $270, deeding him his four lots. Mrs. Miller also deeded her four lots to Cronks. Cronks gave back a land contract to defendant Miller, on all eight of the lots, which called for a conveyance of the lots upon payment of the $270. Held, the transaction resulted in a mortgage lien with the legal title to their respective lots remaining in defendant Miller and his wife.—Ferry v. Miller, 164 Mich. 429.

¶ 55. A certain contract of sale of certain premises signed by a mother and her son wherein she agreed to sell the premises to him at a certain price corresponding to the amount of a certain note signed by him and indorsed by her and containing the customary provisions of an ordinary land contract but not containing a condition binding him to buy, and providing that the stipulations therein should apply to and bind the heirs, assigns, etc., of the respective parties, held to be sufficient in connection with a deed of the same date to her of said premises for a consideration of one dollar to show such deed was a mortgage.—Maginn v. Cashin, 196 Mich. 221.

¶ 56. A conveyance to a mortgagee by deed, absolute in form, of land previously held under an indemnity mortgage with the understanding that the grantor could pay off the debt due on an appeal bond for which the mortgage was given as indemnity, and thus be entitled to a reconveyance, or the grantee could settle the amount due on the bond and pay the balance of the sale price of the land to the grantor is a mortgage and not a sale where the purpose of the deed was to facilitate sale if necessitated.—Sowles v. Wilcox, 127 Mich. 166.

lease with an option to repurchase, does not constitute a mortgage.—City Lumber Co. v. Hollands, 181 Mich. 531.

¶ 58. A conveyance and a contemporaneous land contract whereby the grantor may repurchase on paying his indebtedness to the grantee, within a specified time, may be construed to constitute a mortgage.—Clark v. Landon, 90 Mich. 83.

¶ 59. A deed to one accompanied by a letter of authority to another unlimited in time by which that other was authorized to rent or sell the property and by which the grantee signing the letter agreed to ratify any sale or rental made by the other, which letter also gave the so-called agent an option to purchase on payment of $400 with stated interest from date and taxes paid out, will be treated as a mortgage; where $400 was the sum advanced by the grantee and signer of the letter to buy the equity in the land on application of the so-called agent, and where the understanding was that the latter was to have a substantial interest in the land.—Leach v. Grube, 147 Mich. 348.

¶ 60. Execution having been levied upon a leasehold owned by a copartnership of which defendant was a member, he assigned his interest to complainant by written instrument providing that the latter should purchase at the sale with funds to be provided in part by defendant, should acquire the legal title to the fee, and reconvey to defendant, who was to remain in possession, upon the payment of the amount invested by complainant, together with an additional sum for services and expenses, in default of which payment complainant should have the option to declare the contract void, and treat defendant as his tenant holding over without permission. A subsequent agreement provided that complainant's lien was to be subject in part to that of a third party advancing moneys to the defendant whereby to make the purchase. Complainant, having complied with the terms of the contract, upon default of payment by defendant, instituted summary proceedings to recover possession. Held, that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee was created between the parties.—Anderson v. Smith, 103 Mich. 446.

¶ 61. Where A., being indebted to B. in the sum of $2,000, secured on real estate, conveyed to him the same real estate, and took back a contract for the purchase of it from B. for $2,000, payable as therein specified, which contract provided that "time is now, and shall be at all times, considered and deemed a material part of this contract"; and that on default being made by A. in any of its conditions to be performed by him, he should thereupon forfeit all rights under the same, and be thereafter a tenant at will to B. at a specified yearly rent; and it appeared that the tr action was intended merely to secure B. $2,000 due him, held to be a mortgage; that A. did not forfeit his right to red by a failure to pay at the time specifie Batty v. Snook, 5 Mich. 231.

¶ 62. The character of a transaction which a landowner has made a deed a lute in form, and he and the grantee h executed a land contract whereby he r repurchase at the same price within a st period, is not affected by the fact that contract gives possession to the grantee til payment.—Clark v. Landon, 90 Mich.

¶ 63. A conveyance of property, m after the beginning of foreclosure proc ings on the day of sale, mu·t be consid an absolute conveyance with the optio the grantors to repurchase, within a cer time, where the grantors were given right to repurchase for a sum less than amount required to redeem if the mortga property had been sold, and where the dence showed that the grantors did not a themselves of the privilege of repurchas within the time stated, but rented the p erty and permitted the grantees to imp it.—Abbott v. Gruner, 121 Mich. 140.

¶ 64. A conveyance of land express in payment of a debt of stated amount a clause providing that the grantee sh reconvey upon receiving such sum withi specified time is a deed with an optio repurchase, where it appears that repurcl was optional with the grantor.—Reed Bond, 96 Mich. 134.

¶ 65. An instrument in the form o warranty deed containing the following dition, "This deed being made under following condition, viz.: That said p of the second part shall not cut any st ing timber, or allow to be, within the pe of ten years from the date hereof, on twenty acres; and furthermore, that parties of the first part, for themselves t heirs, executors, and administrators, hereby reserve the privilege of redeen the said above-described twenty acres time within the period of said ten years paying to the said party of the second p his heirs, administrators, or assigns, above-mentioned seven hundred dollars, interest at seven per cent, which shall n this instrument void and of no effect," none of the characteristics of a mortg but appears to be an absolute sale, with option to the grantor to repurchase, must be held a conditional sale.—Blum v. Beekman, 121 Mich. 647.

¶ 66. Where a mortgagor of real est after satisfaction of the debt by the m gagee, for the purpose of securing the d deeds the land to the mortgagee and t back a contract with a provision tha case of default the rights of the mortg therein should be foreclosed in chancery, such deed and contract constitute a mortgage.—Detroit Cavalry v. Ranney, 193 Mich. 472.

¶ 66a. Where land is deeded away absolutely to secure a loan, and the grantors take back a contract of purchase, the transaction is to be treated as a mortgage.—Restrick Lumber Co. v. Wyrembolski, 164 Mich. 71.

¶ 67. A debtor conveyed certain lands to a trustee to be sold for the payment of debts, and the deed provided that the surplus and all unsold lands be returned to him after deducting costs and expenses. Held, that it was properly treated as a mortgage. —State Bank of Bay City v. Chapelle, 40 Mich. 447.

¶ 68. The rule that in doubtful cases the law will construe a contract to be a mortgage, because such a construction will be most apt to attain the ends of justice and prevent fraud and oppression, was applied in a bill to declare a deed absolute on its face a mortgage, where at the time of giving the deed, a contract was executed providing that in the event of a sale of the land within a certain time for a greater sum than a mortgage then on the premises together with interest, taxes, improvements and other expenses, one-half of any remainder should go to complainant.—Carveth v. Winegar, 133 Mich. 84.

¶ 69. Where a sister furnished her brother money to redeem certain land from a mortgage and he deeded a part of it to her with the understanding that she was to pay taxes and expenses and when the profits realized equaled the amount advanced with interest she should reconvey, and the whole transaction indicated that security was intended, the deed will be declared to be a mortgage. —Wall v. Albion College, 130 Mich. 526.

¶ 70. Where a conveyance of land without a defeasance nevertheless recites that the grantor "is" desirous of securing payment of certain debts and of indemnifying certain parties, and requires the surplus to be returned to the grantor, it is, as between the parties, a mortgage.—Austin v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 613.

¶ 71. Where a judgment debtor gave to the attorney of the creditor a deed of lands authorizing him to sell and dispose of them, and apply the money in payment of the judgment, and to execute and deliver to the purchaser a deed, provided the judgment was not paid in six months from that time; and the judgment not being paid the attorney caused the lands to be sold at public auction, and they were struck off to the creditor who was the highest bidder, it was held that the deed was a mortgage, and the right of redemption could not be barred except by foreclosure either at law or in equity.—Comstock v. Howard, W. 110.

¶ 72. A conveyance in trust to sell for the benefit of specified creditors and turn any surplus remaining back to the grantor though in the nature of a mortgage, is not a mortgage but an absolute conveyance subject to reconveyance upon the grantor's paying the debts mentioned therein.—Geer v. Traders' Bank of Canada, 132 Mich. 215.

Right of fraudulent transferee to hold deed as absolute conveyance where intended as security, see Fraudulent Conveyances ¶ 496.

¶ 73. Either a grantor or a grantee may prove that a deed in form absolute is in fact a mortgage; hence on a suit against the grantee for the balance due on the price of the land, he may show defensively that the deed was given as a mortgage.—Kellogg v. Northrup, 115 Mich. 327.

§ 14. Estoppel to claim mortgage or deed.

Shifting theory from absolute deed as mortgage to theory of deed procured by undue influence, see also Equity ¶ 656.

¶ 74. A woman who had little to do with her own affairs was not estopped from impressing a mortgage on a quitclaim deed made by her to a third person in simulation of a bona fide deed, where she had a contract for purchase of the land assigned at the time to defendant to protect advances and to shield the property from her husband's debts.—Crawford v. Osmun, 70 Mich. 561.

¶ 74a. Defendant took an absolute deed of realty from complainant as security for money loaned to plaintiff from time to time. Third parties secured a judgment against complainant and proceeded to levy an execution on said realty. Defendant filed a bill against said third parties claiming absolute title to the property, but at the time of filing the bill admitted to the complainant that he was in fact the holder of the mortgage only. Defendant did not prosecute the bill and subsequently said third parties secured a sale and purchased the premises at the same. Thereupon defendant paid off the claim of said third party and took from them a deed to the premises. Held, defendant could not change his relation from that of mortgagee to that of owner, and as between him and complainant he was still mortgagee after taking the deed from said third parties, and complainant should be allowed to redeem.—Williams v. Bolt, 170 Mich. 517.

Burden of proving beyond reasonable doubt, see also post ¶ 86.

Failure to testify as to character of deed as making unfavorable inference against party, see Evidence § 63.

¶ 75. Although a conveyance absolute in form may be shown by parol to be a mortgage, the burden of proof is upon him who asserts the defeasible character of the instrument.—Kellogg v. Northrup, 115 Mich. 327.

¶ 76. On a bill to have a deed absolute in form declared a mortgage, the burden rests upon the complainant to show primarily that at the time the instrument was executed there was a contract between himself and the grantee by the terms of which he agreed to repay the vendee the consideration advanced and that thereupon the lessee should reconvey the property to him.—Frolich v. Aikman, 194 Mich. 569. (Bird and Person, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 77. Where a conveyance by an illiterate old man was claimed to have been made merely to obtain a loan, evidence of the grantor's mental capacity was admissible as bearing upon the relations of the parties and the nature of the transaction.—Reilly v. Brown, 87 Mich. 163.

¶ 78. In a bill to have a deed declared a mortgage, the circumstances under which the transaction took place, the conversation at the time and the value of the land were competent evidence to show that the transaction was intended to be a mortgage.—Carveth v. Winegar, 133 Mich. 34.

¶ 79. A deed absolute in form may be proved by parol to have been intended by the parties to operate only as a mortgage for money loaned; and such proof will entitle the grantor to redeem.—Wadsworth v. Loranger, H. 113; Emerson v. Atwater, 7 Mich. 12; Van Wert v. Chidester, 31 Mich. 207; Barber v. Milner, 43 Mich. 248.

¶ 80. It is competent, in a suit to declare a deed absolute in form to be a mortgage, to show by parol testimony that the deed was in fact made as security for a loan.—McArthur v. Robinson, 104 Mich. 540.

¶ 81. Parol testimony may be admitted in equity to show that an instrument on its face a deed, is, in fact, a mortgage, though there is no fraud or mistake shown in the procurement of the deed.—Flynn v. Holmes 145 Mich. 606.

¶ 82. A complainant seeking to have a deed absolute on its face declared to be a mortgage, while having the burden of proof need establish his case only by a preponderance of the evidence, and not beyond a reasonable doubt.—Schmidt v. Barclay, 161 Mich. 1.

¶ 83. The evidence required to show that a deed absolute on its face was given as a mere security must be such as to command the unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind.—Etheridge v. Wisner, 86 Mich. 166; Abbott v. Gruner, 121 Mich. 140; Frolich v. Aikman, 194 Mich. 569. (Bird and Person, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 84. The proof that a deed absolute in form was in fact given as a security for a loan should be clear and convincing, and sufficient to overcome the presumption that the instrument in question truly represents the transaction in its entirety; but, in weighing the testimony, the fact that there was a considerable inadequacy of consideration as well as the fact that the original application was for a loan, are deemed of weight and importance in determining the main question.—McArthur v. Robinson, 104 Mich 540.

¶ 85. Where the complainant, under a mutual contract with the defendant to purchase real estate, fails to meet his obligations because of financial difficulties and thereupon assigns all his rights in the agreement to the defendant by an instrument absolute on its face, he cannot, in a chancery proceeding, have such assignment construed as a mortgage without proof so clear and convincing as to leave no doubt in the mind of the court.—Dalton v. Mertz, 173 Mich 153.

¶ 86. One who files a bill to have a deed given by him construed as a mortgage has the burden of proving beyond reasonable doubt that this was actually meant to be its effect.—Tilden v. Streeter, 45 Mich. 533 [Note. The expression "reasonable doubt" as used in the foregoing has been explained in other opinions cited in this section.]

¶ 87. A bill to have a deed construed as a mortgage cannot be sustained unless there is convincing proof in complainant's favor

even though defendant's showing is such as to establish no claim on the confidence of the court.—Tilden v. Streeter, 45 Mich. 533.

¶ 88. Whether a deed in form absolute was in fact a mortgage is a question of intent, and such intent is to be gathered from the instruments executed and from the facts and circumstances attending the transaction, as well as from other testimony.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 89. A deed in form absolute given by one who held a power of attorney to sell and convey may be shown by admissions of the grantee to be a mere security for money loaned.—Jeffrey v. Hursh, 49 Mich. 31.

¶ 90. The fact of relationship between the parties to a bill filed to have a deed construed as a mortgage has no force except as it is pertinent to the case and will aid in proving or disproving it.—Tilden v. Streeter, 45 Mich. 533.

¶ 91. Where a brother and sister were owners in common of certain premises in which their mother had a life interest, and the mother indorsed the brother's note given to his sister for money loaned and received from him a deed to his interest in the premises for an expressed consideration of one dollar and gave him a contract of sale and defeasance of the same property for a stated consideration corresponding in amount with such note and later conveyed the premises to the sister for a nominal consideration, held that the surrounding facts and circumstances strengthened the legal presumption that the instruments referred to of even date operated together as a mortgage.—Maginn v. Cashin, 196 Mich. 221.

¶ 91a. A man made an absolute conveyance of his property to his brother in order to avoid the payment of certain paper upon which, he claimed, his liability had been fraudulently obtained. He was also otherwise indebted. In a suit by creditors to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent as against them, it was proved by the brothers to have been bona fide. The grantor afterwards filed a bill against his brother for an accounting and for leave to redeem, claiming that it had been further agreed between them that the defendant, after paying his debts out of the proceeds and profits of the property, should reconvey. Held, on the evidence, that the bill was rightly dismissed.—Nickodemus v. Nickodemus, 45 Mich. 385.

¶ 93. On a bill to have a deed construed to be a mortgage, the complainant testified he had held the land under a lease with an option to purchase, and that the defendant loaned him the money to make the purchase and took a deed as security, verbally agreeing to recovery on payment of the loan. The defendant testified that he declined to make the loan and that at the expiration of the option made the purchase for his own benefit, and the evidence of the grantor tended to support the defendant. Held, the proof was not sufficient to overcome the presumption that the absolute deed was what it purported to be.—Crane v. Read, 172 Mich. 642.

¶ 94. A surety who had given a previous mortgage to certain property, later gave an absolute deed to the mortgagee to the same property, which deed recited a consideration of $4,000. The evidence disclosed that there was in fact no new consideration given, and that the mortgage was not intended to apply as a payment on the previous mortgage. Held, a bill to have the absolute deed declared a mortgage and to redeem, was supported by sufficient evidence.—Miller v. Peter, 158 Mich. 336.

¶ 95. Where the maker of a deed absolute in form was indebted to the taker and the land value exceeded the debt, and thereafter they treated the debt as still subsisting and the debtor sued to have it declared a mortgage and foreclosed, and the proceeds applied upon the payment of the debt, the court was equally divided as to whether the evidence showed the deed was intended as a mortgage or not.—McMillan v. Bissell, 63 Mich. 66.

¶ 96. A conveyance of land worth $6,000 by an illiterate and mentally infirm old man was declared to be a mortgage and a reconveyance ordered, it being shown that it was made merely to enable grantee to obtain for the grantor a loan of $3,000.—Reilly v. Brown, 87 Mich. 163.

¶ 97. On a creditor's bill attacking a conveyance by the debtor to another creditor, where the evidence showed that the land conveyed was of much less value than the debts for which it was conveyed, and that the debtor was hopelessly insolvent, a contention that the conveyance was intended merely as a mortgage, could not be sustained by testimony that a few subsequent entries on the creditor's books included the rents of the property in his account with the debtor.—Rathbone v. Maltz, 155 Mich. 306.

¶ 98. Complainant owned an equity worth $46,000 in a lot of land and a business house located thereon. Defendant had been her father's trusted business associate in his lifetime. After his death complainant intrusted absolutely to defendant the management of the said property. She was a woman suffering greatly from ill-health and lacking in business capacity, and she placed implicit confidence in defendant. Under the stress of financial embarrassment, she deeded the said premises absolutely to defendant for the sum of some $16,000. Held, the evidence justified the lower court in finding the deed was intended as a mortgage.—Schmidt v. Barclay, 161 Mich. 1.

¶ 99. In an action to declare a deed made by a father to his son to be a mortgage, evidence by defendant and two witnesses who would profit if the deed were a mortgage, held, to sustain finding that the conveyance was in fee.—Smith v. Smith, 177 Mich. 268.

¶ 100. On a bill to have a deed absolute in form declared a mortgage evidence held insufficient to show that complainant ever agreed to return the sum paid to him by the defendant as consideration for the deed.—Frolich v. Aikman, 194 Mich. 569. (Bird and Person, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 101. Evidence held not to establish that a deed was given as security for a loan.—Mintz v. Soule, 182 Mich. 564.

¶ 102. On a bill to have a deed absolute in form by one of the members of a partnership to a creditor of the partnership decreed to be a mortgage, which had been paid, and to have it discharged of record, evidence held sufficient to sustain a decree for complainant.—Rozycki v. Leppek, 199 Mich. 617.

¶ 103. On a bill to declare a deed to have been given as security and to redeem, the evidence showing that the parties had been friends for many years and that complainant had amassed considerable property and among others the farm in question and defendant was a lawyer, though not in active practice, with whom plaintiff had been in the habit of consulting as to business matters; before acquiring the farm the plaintiff had had some difficulty with his wife which later culminated in a separation, and defendant made a compromise with the wife by which she was to receive $1,500 in cash and some personalty, and to carry out the compromise the wife executed a deed of her interest to defendant and retained the deed until she should have received the stipulated property, the money to pay her being obtained by discounting plaintiff's note indorsed by defendant. Efforts to sell certain property were made without success, and arrangements were made that if plaintiff would make out a deed of his property to him and hold the deed until by a sale of the farm or other property he could realize sufficient money to pay plaintiff $10,000 he would take it and take care of the note of $1,500 that had been discounted to pay the wife and the mortgages, which deed was made with a consideration stated of $10,000. The complainant went west and returned in about two months and demanded a reconveyance of the deed after the defendant had compromised with the wife and sold the farm, paid the plaintiff $2,000 and taken care of the mortgages. The defendant claimed that no demand for a reconveyance was made until the suit was brought, held that the evidence did not establish that the deed should be held or treated as security.—Etheridge v. Wisner, 86 Mich. 166.

¶ 104. Parol evidence that a deed prima facie absolute was only meant as a mortgage must be explicit; mere general declarations to that effect by a party claiming the benefit of such a construction are not enough.—Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208.

¶ 105. The parol evidence to show that a warranty deed absolute in form was intended to secure a debt and to operate as a mortgage must be clear, unequivocal and convincing, or the presumption that the instrument is what it purports to be must prevail.—Cadman v. Peter, 118 U. S. 73, 30 L. ed. 78, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 957, aff'g 12 Fed. 363.

¶ 106. To establish an equitable right in lands in opposition to the muniments of title the parol evidence of the understanding of the parties must be very clear and distinct.—Van Wert v. Chidester, 31 Mich. 207.

¶ 107. The question whether a deed absolute was meant as a mortgage or not may properly be submitted to a jury where the fact depends on extraneous matters.—Stevens v. Hulin, 53 Mich. 93.

¶ 108. Where there is evidence tending to show that on the one side there was an absolute sale by a mortgagor to the mortgagee of the mortgaged premises with a contract for repurchase; and, on the other side, that the arrangement was merely to save the expense of foreclosure, the contract being taken in lieu of the mortgage, the question is one of fact for the jury.—Knight v. Hartman, 93 Mich. 69.

C. EQUITABLE MORTGAGES; TRUSTS, ETC.

Executory agreements for mortgage loans, see post § 21.
Contemporaneous agreement reserving possession or lien to grantor, see post § 22.
Land contracts as equitable mortgages, see post § 23.
Assignment of land contract or certificate see post § 24.
Lease as mortgage, see post § 25.
Priority of mortgages of equitable title, see post § 92.
Trust mortgage, see also post ¶ 151.
Trusts for security and payment of debts, see Trusts.
Trust mortgages in so far as the trust is concerned, see Trusts.
Conditions requisite for equitable liens, see Liens § 3.

¶ 109. An agreement in writing, intended by the parties to give a lien on real estate for the payment of a debt, though not witnessed as required by statute to convey real estate, is good as an equitable mortgage.—Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 Mich. 178.

¶ 110. Where a husband conveyed realty to secure a loan and thereafter upon payment of the loan by his wife the land was with his consent conveyed to the wife, he was entitled to have the deed declared an equitable mortgage and to have a reconveyance from the heirs of the wife upon payment of the amount due under the mortgage.—Darling v. Darling, 123 Mich. 307.

¶ 111. Where a husband conveyed realty to secure a loan and thereafter upon payment of the loan by his wife, the land was conveyed to her and during her lifetime she made improvements, her heirs were not entitled to an allowance for such improvements in a proceeding in which the deed was declared an equitable mortgage.—Darling v. Darling, 123 Mich. 307.

¶ 112. When it has been shown on a bill to cancel that a mortgage given by a wife upon her property was executed under duress to save her husband from jail, a lien upon part of the land in defendant's favor cannot be established upon the claim that such part was bought with money embezzled from the mortgagee by the husband, unless such fact is affirmatively made to appear.—Bentley v. Robson, 117 Mich. 691.

¶ 113. A deed absolute given to secure an indebtedness, which does not have the effect to divest the legal title of the grantor and convey it to the grantee, but conveys only a right by way of security, because of the contract between the parties of which it is the culmination, is an equitable mortgage.—Flynn v. Holmes, 145 Mich. 606.

¶ 114. There can be no recovery for breach of a contract to lend money on mortgage security until a valid mortgage according to contract duly executed has been tendered to defendant.—Lansing Turnverein Society v. Carter, 71 Mich. 608.

¶ 115. An oral agreement to give a mortgage upon lands cannot be sustained as an equitable lien if uncertain in its terms.—McClintock v. Laing, 22 Mich. 212.

¶ 117. An old man and a divorced woman thirty-five years old agreed to live together as father and daughter and did so live, it being understood that she should take care of him in case of sickness and that he would leave her his property when he died. He consented that premises bought by her with his money should be deeded to her, she to give him a mortgage thereon as security for his maintenance and support, but she neglected to execute it. A decree enforcing a lien in his favor on the property was sustained.—Williams v. Rice, 60 Mich. 102.

Contemporaneous agreements or options for reconveyance, see ante § 11.

¶ 118. A written agreement between the parties to a deed made at the same time, and allowing the grantor to keep possession of part of the property deeded, for a specified term, in consideration of his assistance in selling it again, in which event he was to receive certain specified benefits, held not to operate to give the grantor a lien in the nature of a mortgage, and to be no defense to a summary proceeding by the grantee under the statute to obtain possession of the land at the expiration of the term therein granted.—Ellis v. Brown, 29 Mich. 259.

¶ 119. A. conveyed a farm to B., his son-in-law, in consideration of $2,500. By the same instrument, B. bound himself to pay the debts of A., especially a mortgage on the farm, and to account to A. for the balance of the $2,500, after paying the debts; and B. promised and obligated himself, besides the payment of the $2,500, to board, lodge and clothe A., in health and in sickness, during his natural life, etc., and A. reserved to himself the right to live with B.; and for the security of the payment of the $2,500, and the fulfilling of the "clauses and conditions" above stated, B. was not to give, alien, exchange or sell the farm without permission of A., and the farm was to stand hypothecated until the payment in full of the $2,500, when A. was to "release the present mortgage in a legal manner." Held not to be a deed of trust, or a deed upon condition, but an absolute deed, incorporating within it a lien in the nature of a mortgage.—Campau v. Chene, 1 Mich. 400.

¶ 120. Evidence that the assignee of a mortgage bid in the property at foreclosure and subsequently leased the premises to the original mortgagor with an agreement to sell for a specified sum within a specified time is not sufficient to entitle the mortgagor to have the land contract declared a mortgage.—Doudt v. Loveridge, 138 Mich. 295.

¶ 121. Where a bank which had taken from a depositor a contract for the purchase of a building, and which had paid part of the price, subsequently took the depositor's check for the amount of his payment, and executed with him an agreement in writing acknowledging its indebtedness to him upon the contract in a sum covering the amount of the check and the rest of the purchase price, such agreement, upon the bank's becoming insolvent, was given effect as an equitable mortgage of the bank's interest in the property.—Whitney v. Foster, 117 Mich. 643.

¶ 122. P. contracted to sell to A. the undivided half of a tract of land at a price specified in the contract, and by the same contract A. agreed to render his personal services in the care, management and sale of the land. P. conveyed to A. the land in pursuance of the contract, taking back a mortgage to secure its performance. A. having failed to perform on his part, P. files a bill to foreclose the mortgage and claims an equitable lien upon his interest in the land, not only for the value of services which were not rendered, as required by the contract, but for the amount of a deduction from the real value of the interest sold to A., made as a special inducement to A. to enter into the contract. Held, that the considerations moving P. to contract with A. were of such a nature as to present an inherent difficulty in the attempt to estimate the pecuniary damage to P.; and whether or not P. would have a remedy at law for damages occasioned by the breach of contract, they are of a character too uncertain to constitute the subject of an equitable mortgage, or a vendor's lien.—Payne v. Avery, 21 Mich. 524.

¶ 123. In an action to set aside an assignment of a land contract, to have it decreed to be a mortgage, for an accounting and to secure a discharge of the mortgage upon payment of the amounts due, and to set aside an assignment by the first assignee and to compel such subsequent assignee to surrender the premises, evidence held sufficient to establish that the original assignment was as security for a loan.—Jackiewicz v. Siwka, 187 Mich. 165.

¶ 124. Where the vendee in a land-contract assigned it to third parties as collateral security for the performance of a contract with them, and to secure them for money advanced to pay the balance of the purchase-price of the land, and in the assignment authorized the vendor to convey the land to the assignees, the papers will be construed together, and the deed treated as a mortgage.—Gamble v. Ross, 88 Mich. 315.

¶ 125. An assignment of a land-contract by a vendee in possession, with a defeasance that if the assignee should be obliged to pay any part of a specified sum for which he had become surety, and the assignor should not repay the same by a given date, the assignee should have absolute ownership in the contract, and if repaid he was to surrender all claim thereto, is a mere mortgage of th land.—Meigs v. McFarlan, 72 Mich. 194.

¶ 126. An assignment of a land-contra for security and as a shield against cre itors and subsequent quitclaim deed of th land to defendant by complainant on no ne consideration were found to have been in tended as a mortgage, and complainant wa allowed to redeem.—Crawford v. Osmun, 7 Mich. 561.

¶ 127. Where an assignment of a lan certificate is meant by the parties as securit for debts existing and to be incurred, th relation established between them is that o mortgagor and mortgagee.—Gunderman Gunnison, 39 Mich. 313.

¶ 128. Defendant having assigned certai land certificates, in form absolutely, but i fact as security for debts he was owing t complainants and for advances to be mad and having afterwards paid up the indeb edness and advances, but desiring furth advances, it was arranged he should r deliver the assignments as security for suc further advances as complainants shoul make him; and redelivery thereof beir made, further advances were made by con plainants on the faith of such security, an settlements were had from time to time an defendant's due-bill taken, with interest a ten per cent, for the amount found du -Held, that a bill in equity will lie on con plainants' behalf for an accounting as to th amount of such advances and for the for closure and sale of such securities unle payment should be made in a reasonab time, in which event the certificates are t be assigned back.—Case v. McCabe, 35 Mic 100.

Lease of the land as further security, s post § 62.

Law pertaining to leases in general, s Landlord and Tenant.

¶ 129. An unconditional conveyance of farm by a man to his son, and an imm diate mortgage back by the latter to secu a loan of $1,400, also a lease of the far by him to his parents at a rental of o dollar a year, followed by the son's suppor ing his parents on the farm until his deat are to be regarded as parts of one transa tion, and in proceedings to foreclose th mortgage and for an accounting, the instr ments must all be construed together, th lease plainly having been intended as an a ditional security for the payment of th mortgage debt, and the clause giving th parents the use of the farm during the lives intended to insure to them a home o the farm while they lived, while the valu of the timber sold by the father, and of h use and occupation of the land from th time of his son's death until his own, shoul be deducted from the amount due on th notes.—Abele v. McGuigan, 78 Mich. 415.

¶ 130. A mortgage is to be construed most favorably for the mortgagee.—Stuart v. Worden, 42 Mich. 154.

¶ 131. A mortgage is to be construed in connection with other writings given at the same time, and in the light of surrounding facts; and where the condition secured is not clear the mortgage is to be construed most favorably for the mortgagee.—Stuart v. Worden, 42 Mich. 154.

¶ 132. Where there was some doubt whether a mortgage was, by its condition, payable in work or in money, it was held to be the duty of the court to construe it most strongly against the mortgagor, and in such manner as to make it a valid and binding security which might be enforced against him.—Jerome v. Hopkins, 2 Mich. 96.

¶ 133. A mortgage executed, payable, and covering lands in Michigan, is a Michigan contract, and is subject to interpretation by and enforcement under the Michigan laws.—Stack v. Detour Lumber & Cedar Co., 151 Mich. 21.

Parol to identify debt secured, see Evidence ¶ 1107.

¶ 134. A mortgage given for money advanced and lands to be conveyed can only be enforced by the mortgagee to the amount of money advanced, when he has wrongfully refused to convey the land.—Robinson v. Cromelein, 15 Mich. 316.

¶ 135. Where a person indebted on certain notes gives a mortgage deed for a sum less than the amount of the notes, and which does not refer to them or expressly identify the debt, or specify a time for payment, or make any provision for interest, it is due as soon as given, and is by implication a security bearing interest from its date, or at least from the maturity of the notes.—Eaton v. Truesdail, 40 Mich. 1.

¶ 136. Where, after a mortgage has been given securing a bond, the mortgagor's due-bill is substituted by parol agreement for part of the bond, and is made payable at a different date from any provided for in the mortgage, the mortgage-lien is not held to secure the due-bill, unless, at least, it is clearly shown that it was so agreed when the exchange was made.—Tucker v. Alger, 30 Mich. 67.

¶ 137. Describing the same parcel twice in a deed thereof from a mortgagee to a mortgagor does not show that it was twice taken into account in fixing the amount of the mortgage.—Hart v. Carpenter, 36 Mich. 402.

¶ 138. Where, in a conditional pardon, the person pardoned was required to secure the payment of $1,000 to the county, and the county commissioners obtained a mortgage for $1,150 (the $150 being added as the costs of prosecution of the mortgagor), the mortgage was held good for $1,000 and void as to the residue.—Rood v. Winslow, W. 340: Rood v. Winslow, 2 D. 68.

¶ 139. A mortgagee, having acquired the interest of an execution purchaser in the mortgaged premises, entered into an agreement with the execution debtor, before the expiration of the redemption year, by which certain additional claims were to be included in the mortgage security. After the filing of a foreclosure bill and a notice of lis pendens, a second judgment creditor sought to redeem, and received a sheriff's deed. Held, that such agreement was valid as against said judgment creditor.—Burt v. Gamble, 98 Mich. 402.

¶ 140. A mortgage, securing the sum of $1,500 which contained the condition that when the mortgagor's indebtedness to the mortgagee was reduced to a sum less than $3,500 the mortgage should stand discharged, construed as providing that the security for the sum of $1,500 was not in any respect to be affected until the indebtedness was reduced to the sum named.—Commercial State Savings Bank v. Stevens, 180 Mich. 35.

¶ 141. One of several mortgages given to a widow by the several children respectively in return for the conveyance to them of all her interest in her husband's estate "to secure the payment of $5,000, interest payable annually at 7%, mortgage to become null and void at the decease of the widow," must be construed to give the widow the right to the interest on one or all of the mortgages as she desires and this right is assignable. —Holmes v. Holmes, 129 Mich. 412.

¶ 142. Where a husband, having got his wife's consent to mortgaging her land for the purchase price of goods bought by him, obtained without false representations the execution of a mortgage covering, in addition to such purchase price, an old debt of his whereof she was not informed, the mortgage was held valid as to the purchase price only.—Smith v. Osborn, 33 Mich. 410.

¶ 143. A stamp upon a mortgage given while the laws requiring securities to be stamped in proportion to their amount were in force raises a strong presumption that the mortgage was not understood to be operative as a security beyond the amount covered by the stamp.—Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 52 Mich. 124.

¶ 144. Where a mortgage is given to secure the mortgagee for liabilities which it is optional with him to incur or not, such mortgage is at any time a lien upon the land only to the extent of the liabilities then actually incurred; and a deed given by the mortgagor and placed upon record will take precedence of the mortgage as to liabilities subsequently incurred.—Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380.

¶ 145. The mortgage being duly recorded is notice to a subsequent purchaser; but he is chargeable with notice only to the extent of the liabilities which had been actually incurred prior to his purchase.—Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380.

§ 29. ——Balance of running account.

¶ 146. A mortgage to secure a balance of a running account can only be enforced to the extent of money actually advanced or indebtedness actually accruing.—Brackett v. Sears, 15 Mich. 244.

¶ 147. A person made a bond and mortgage to a partnership, with which he had dealings in the way of mutual accommodation discounts, acceptances and indorsements, and took the receipt of the partnership therefor, which, after describing the papers, concluded as follows: "From which we are to deduct our account with him, and to pay him the balance, or to be returned to him at our option." The party subsequently pursued a similar course of business accommodations, the balance being always against the mortgagor, but never equaling the amount of the bond and mortgage. Held, that they must be considered as security for all these dealings.—Brackett v. Sears, 15 Mich. 244.

¶ 148. A mortgage to secure a sum and all obligations the mortgagee may assume or become liable for by indorsement will not secure the mortgagee for the payment of the pre-existing note of the mortgagor, upon which the mortgagee is not an indorser, nor will such payment be covered by a mortgage securing the mortgagee for all indorsements theretofore made, or which he shall thereafter make, for the benefit of the mortgagor.—Burt v. Gamble, 98 Mich. 402.

¶ 149. A mortgage securing the payment of $4,000 within ninety days from date, and all obligations the mortgagee may assume or become liable for by reason of any paper indorsements or obligations he may make for or at the request of the mortgagor, and which provides that, upon payment of such sum or sums for which the mortgagee shall become liable within the ninety days, he shall discharge the mortgage, secures only such claims, aside from the $4,000, as are based upon indorsements, or obligations made within the ninety days.—Burt v. Gamble, 98 Mich. 402.

¶ 150. A mortgage given as security for a debt due and to stand as security for any and all accommodation indorsements up to a given sum to the extent of which sum the mortgagee agrees to indorse the mortgagor's paper is held to cover a liability on an indorsement prior to the date of the mortgage.—Holliday v. Snow, 129 Mich. 494.

¶ 151. A trust mortgage stated that the mortgagor, being indebted to certain persons therein named upon promissory notes, some of which were indorsed by R., "and to R." upon certain notes made by the mortgagor to U. and P., "indorsed by R., and upon which he is liable as indorser," executed the mortgage "for the purpose of securing payment of said debts, and securing R. against his liability upon said indorsements," and authorized the trustee, upon default in the payment of said indebtedness, or if R. should be obliged to pay the notes upon which he was liable, to foreclose and sell the property, retaining from the proceeds of such sale "sufficient to pay said debts and indorsed notes." Held, upon a bill filed by U. to enforce an alleged interest in the security, that, so far as its debt was concerned, the mortgage constituted a mere personal indemnity to R., and that complainant was not a beneficiary thereunder.—Union Nat. Bank v. Rich, 106 Mich. 319.

¶ 152. A printed clause in a mortgage extending it to all debts not covered by the amount specifically stated seems to be to some extent counterbalanced by the presumption arising from the fact that the stamp on the mortgage corresponds to the specified sum.—Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 52 Mich. 124.

¶ 153. A mortgage given to secure all existing debts of the mortgagor to the mortgagee is valid without specifying the debts or their amounts. And a subsequent purchaser of the land, with actual or constructive notice of the mortgage, takes subject to it.—Michigan Ins. Co. of Detroit v. Brown, 11 Mich. 265.

¶ 154. A statement in a mortgage that it is given to indemnify an accommodation maker against all notes outstanding and that such notes amount to $31,500 when supplemented by testimony that the mortgagor had stated that the mortgage was made to cover specified notes and when these notes total $31,500 will be held to apply to them only notwithstanding the existence of other notes upon which the mortgagee is accommodation maker.—Albion State Bank v. Knickerbocker, 125 Mich. 311.

¶ 155. A mortgage which is so drawn as to cover any demands which the mortgagee may hold against the mortgagor cannot authorize the mortgagee to buy up claims against the mortgagor and enforce them unless the provision that he may do so is very clearly expressed. The provision can ordinarily cover only such demands as arise directly out of the dealings between the mortgagor and mortgagee.—Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 52 Mich. 124.

¶ 156. A mortgagee cannot take claims held by third persons against his mortgagor and include them in his mortgage unless the mortgagor consents and third parties are not prejudiced.—Perrin v. Kellogg, 38 Mich. 720.

§ 33. ——Mortgage running to two or more co-mortgagees.

¶ 157. Under a mortgage which contains no personal covenant, but which secures a certain sum to each of several creditors, no creditor is secured for a sum larger than that which was mentioned as due to him.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

¶ 158. The presumption is that each of two mortgagees owns an equal interest, which presumption, however, may be overcome.—City of Detroit v. Jacobs, 145 Mich. 395.

Prohibition against mortgage upon cemetery, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11168.

¶ 159. A mortgage covering "all the right, title and interest" of the mortgagor in "any and all contracts" to certain land covers an interest in real estate.—Balen v. Mercier, 75 Mich. 42.

¶ 160. Where a mortgage purports on its face to convey an indefinite interest in the premises, not exceeding that possessed by the mortgagor, and does not profess to transfer the whole or any particular portion of the premises, or any specific undivided interest, it must be taken as meaning to convey the right which the mortgagor had, and subject to all existing equities, and that right or its extent is to be ascertained by inquiry; and the mortgagee is bound to make inquiries and is chargeable with notice of all the facts to which such inquiries must lead.—Case v. Erwin, 18 Mich. 434.

Effect of notice of misdescription in record of mortgage, see Notice and Record of Title, II, B.

Effect of mistake in description of premises on rights under mortgage and subsequent purchasers, see Notice and Record of Title, II, B.

Sufficiency of description in the record to impart notice, see Notice and Record of Title, II.

¶ 161. A mortgage is not to be held void for uncertainty in the description of the premises, unless all means to sustain it have failed.—Dwight v. Tyler, 49 Mich. 614.

¶ 162. The omission, from a mortgage, of the names of the township, county and state in which the lands lie, does not invalidate it, if there are other adequate means, such as known descriptive signs, of identifying the lands.—Slater v. Breese, 36 Mich. 77.

¶ 163. A mortgage is not necessarily defeated by adding to the description elements that are untrue; such details will be rejected and the mortgage will stand if there is enough to identify the subject-matter.—Slater v. Breese, 36 Mich. 77.

¶ 164. Where a mortgage described the land conveyed as "lot four of block one of the La Fountaine farm, lying south of the river road and fronting the Detroit river, being now used and occupied with the steam sawmill thereon by the parties of the first part," and it appeared that that portion of said farm had been platted into four lots or blocks, which had not been subdivided, that the mill was situated on the one numbered four on the plat, and the others were fenced in, used and occupied with the mill, held, that the words "of block one" of this description should be rejected, and the mortgage held a valid lien upon lot four, according to the evident intent of the parties.—Anderson v. Baughman, 7 Mich. 69.

¶ 165. A mortgage described the premises as "the southeast quarter of the quarter of section 32," etc., containing "forty acres." The mortgagor owned the entire half of a quarter section, being eighty acres, and the mortgagee, supported by the parol testimony of the scrivener who drew the mortgage, claimed that it was meant to cover this whole parcel. Held, that this construction would contradict the terms of the mortgage, and that the lien must be confined to a quarter section.—Hurst v. Beaver, 50 Mich. 612.

¶ 166. Misdescription does not invalidate a mortgage of a homestead where it would not invalidate a mortgage of any other property, and where the premises can be identified by possession.—Beyschlag v. Van Wagoner, 46 Mich. 91.

¶ 167. An ambiguous description in a mortgage is not to be extended by parol unless upon positive proofs.—Hurst v. Beaver, 50 Mich. 612.

After-acquired title passing under mortgag by doctrine of estoppel, see Estoppel § 2(

Inapplicability of doctrine of inurement o after-acquired title to purchase mone; mortgagee as to lands not covered b; purchase but described in mortgage, se Estoppel ¶ 51.

Inurement of after-acquired title by estoppe against mortgagor, see Estoppel § 21.

¶ 168. A patent obtained by a mortgago and vendee in possession inures to the ben efit of his mortgagee and vendor.—Haney v Roy, 54 Mich. 635.

¶ 169. Where the mortgagor's title to par of the mortgaged premises fails, and is per fected by his securing a quitclaim deed of th premises, such subsequently-acquired titl inures to the mortgagee's benefit under hi mortgage.—Gray v. Franks, 86 Mich. 382.

¶ 170. Husband and wife, to whom a undivided half of a lot of land had been con veyed, mortgaged the whole lot without cove nants of warranty or title, and pending fore closure in chancery the wife inherited th other undivided half. Held, that the wife' subsequently-acquired interest did not inur to the foreclosure purchaser.—Brennan v Eggeman, 73 Mich. 658.

¶ 171. The lien of a mortgage covering al the property and franchises of a gas com pany, together with "all improvements and additions, of every name and nature," ex tends to a new municipal franchise obtained in place of that belonging to the mortgago at the time of the execution of the mortgage —Lewis v. Weidenfeld, 114 Mich. 581.

¶ 172. One who gives a purchase-money mortgage that includes lands not granted to him is not estopped as against the grantors and mortgagees from denying that it covers those lands if he acquire them afterwards.—Brown v. Phillips, 40 Mich. 264.

¶ 173. A purchase-money mortgage cannot attach to anything which the purchaser did not own at the time of giving it.—Brown v. Phillips, 40 Mich. 264.

¶ 174. A widow who had a life estate in land of which her children were residuary devisees gave a mortgage on the land. One of the children afterward died, so that as the child's heir she became entitled to a share in fee. Held, that as long as there were no outside equities, such as may rise with subsequent purchasers, the interest she acquired by inheritance inured in aid of the mortgage. —Brayton v. Merithew, 56 Mich. 166.

¶ 175. Where land subject to two mortgages is purchased by the first mortgagee at a foreclosure sale under his mortgage, and after the expiration of the equity of redemption, the land is repurchased by the mortgagor, the title thus acquired does not inure to the benefit of the second mortgagee.—Swarthout v. Shields, 185 Mich. 427.

§ 37. ——Mortgages on life estates, reversions and remainders.

Law pertaining to life estates in general, see Life Estates.

¶ 176. A mortgage on certain land given by the holders of a life estate therein is an encumbrance on the life estate only.—Stroh v. O'Hearn, 176 Mich. 164.

¶ 177. A life tenant and the owners of the fee, having taken a single mortgage for the purchase price of land and they having conveyed their interest in the land and with it assigned their interest in the mortgage, it was held proper to allow the fee owner to have the amount of interest to accrue to the life tenant determined from the date of the decree according to life tables, and on payment of that amount with interest to have the mortgage discharged from the life tenant's claim.—Horton v. Howard, 95 Mich. 134.

¶ 179. Where at the time of a certain quitclaim deed grantor had only a life estate and a lien for his support, as was subsequently ascertained by decree, but the grantor subsequently joined with another in mortgaging the land and later the quitclaim grantee received a conveyance of the fee to a part of the premises subject to one-half of all the incumbrances on the whole tract, it was equitable to charge his portion with the mortgage.—Montague v. Haviland, 101 Mich. 80.

See also ante ¶ 147.

¶ 180. A mortgage taken by the brother of a deceased partner of a firm from the surviving brother securing his notes some time after the death and when the affairs of the firm survivor were embarrassed must be held to have been taken for an individual debt, where it covered only the individual interest of the survivor in firm lands and was ostensibly to cover a loan by the mortgagee, who was administrator of the deceased brother as well as an employee of the surviving brother, and his circumstances and relationship were such that he must have known that it could not be for an advance on firm account.—Brown v. Watson, 66 Mich. 223.

Rights of land mortgagee in chattels affixed to land at time of mortgage, see Fixtures § 27.

Giving chattel mortgage on fixtures as an agreement that they are personalty rather than realty covered by the land mortgage, see Fixtures § 22.

Effect of making chattel mortgage in addition to real estate mortgage to impress chattel character on things mortgaged, see Fixtures § 16.

¶ 181. A lien created by a mortgage upon a building attached to the freehold in such a way as to make it part of the real estate is not defeated by a removal of the building to other premises. A later mortgagee of the building is therefore not let in to priority.—Johnson v. Bratton, 112 Mich. 319.

¶ 182. Prior to the assignment of a mortgage to a bona fide assignee, the mortgagor removed the buildings from the mortgaged premises upon another lot, owned by his wife, and which she subsequently conveyed by quitclaim deed, such removal being made without the consent of the mortgagee or assignee. Held, that the buildings were still encumbered by the mortgage, and could be sold on its foreclosure if the land did not bring enough to satisfy the mortgage.—Partridge v. Hemenway, 89 Mich. 454.

¶ 183. A mortgage on realty used as a foundry and machine shop covers machinery placed by the owner in the building many years before, although some of the machines were not fastened to the soil, being so heavy as to render annexation unnecessary; especially where the parties understood the mortgage was to cover the machinery.—Smith v. Blake, 96 Mich. 542.

¶ 184. A mortgage upon a manufacturing plant will, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intent, be held to cover machinery subsequently purchased to replace such as was old and out of repair, or which is adapted to the purposes of the business.—Sturgis Nat. Bank v. Levanseler, 115 Mich. 372.

¶ 186. The right to foreclosure does not mature until the debt secured by the mortgage under foreclosure falls due.—Kelly v. Bogardus, 51 Mich. 522.

¶ 187. A mortgage for a debt made payable after several years, the interest payable annually, is in default after the expiration of the year, if interest is in arrears.—Dederick v. Barber, 44 Mich. 19.

¶ 188. Breach of the condition of a bond given by a son to support his parents during their natural lives entitles them to foreclose the mortgage securing the bond.—Wright v. Wright, 49 Mich. 624.

¶ 189. Where a mortgage payable absolutely at a specified time is given to secure the payment of another encumbrance on land conveyed to the mortgagee, it may be foreclosed by him upon default, without first paying off such encumbrance.—Raffel v. Epworth, 107 Mich. 143.

¶ 190a. On a mortgage of Michigan land back to the grantor, accompanied by a deed of Wisconsin lands under an agreement that the mortgagee, so receiving title, was to sell the Wisconsin lands and apply the proceeds on the mortgage, the mortgage was not to become due until the mortgagee had discharged the obligations cast upon him by the agreements, it being their obvious intention to satisfy the mortgage out of the proceeds so realized.—A. P. Cook Co. v. Bell, 114 Mich. 283.

§ 41. ——Mortgages to secure conditional or collateral liability.

Right and title under preliminary and collateral agreement, see post § 57.
Right to foreclose mortgages given to secure conditional or collateral liability, see Foreclosure § 5.

¶ 191. Where a mortgage is conditioned indemnify a surety, the mortgagee can foreclose until he has been damnified Thurston v. Prentiss, W. 529.

¶ 192. Where a mortgage is condition to pay the demand, as well as to save surety harmless, the mortgagee may fo close on failure of the mortgagor to pay, order to raise the money to pay the dema and rid himself of responsibility.—Thurst v. Prentiss, 1 Mich. 193; Dye v. Mann, Mich. 291.

¶ 193. There is no breach of condition a maturity of right under a mortgage until grantor is actually damnified where a c veyance was made as security for a d upon the express condition that the gran shall save the grantor harmless from c tain debts; a failure to pay the debts, reason of which the grantor is threaten with suit, is not a breach.—Michigan St Bank v. Hastings, 1 D. 225.

¶ 194. A condition in a mortgage that mortgagor "shall promptly pay and discha all notes and papers of his upon which mortgagees shall become indorsers or ceptors, together with all the interest, co and charges accruing thereon, so as to sa said mortgagees harmless by reason of th connection with such paper," is broken once on a failure to pay the paper at n turity, and a right under the mortgage crues, without further action of the mo gagees.—Butler v. Ladue, 12 Mich. 173.

¶ 195. The cause of action on a mortga does not mature where it secures an agr ment, conditioned on the success of a pe ing suit, and the suit fails.—Lamb v. Scull 61 Mich. 280.

¶ 196. A purchase-money mortgage giv upon condition that should the vendor before perfecting title by procuring a d charge of a prior mortgage and an und taking to save harmless against any cla for rents and profits, the mortgage is to fully discharged, cannot be foreclosed un the prior mortgage has been discharged a an acquittance of any claim for use a profits obtained.—McCrath v. Myers, Mich. 204.

¶ 197. Mortgagees holding a mortgage security of a bond given by the mortgag conditioned to pay certain notes within time certain after they mature, the mo gagors and mortgagees being respectiv principals and sureties on said note, may the stipulated time sue to foreclose, althou they have not then been compelled as su sureties to pay the notes; since the bond absolute and not by way of indemnity.—H v. Nash, 10 Mich. 303.

lect the notes from the makers and endorsers before right under mortgage matures. —Clare County Sav. Bank v. Goodman, 119 Mich. 338.

¶ 199. Where the note for which a mortgage was security was made a part of the defeasance clause, and contained a distinct and unequivocal promise to pay the principal sum on or before a specified number of years after date together with interest of a specified rate, but further stipulated that the note should become void and canceled at the death of the payee, provided the interest was fully paid at the time specified, and a later section of the defeasance clause provided that if the maker should pay the interest on the principal to the payee or his assigns when the same fell due, and the mortgage and note should become void upon the death of the payee, otherwise to remain in full force and effect, and the payee was living after the maturity of the note and the interest was not fully paid as therein provided, held that the mortgage was not intended as security for the payment of interest only but also for the principal, and that the complainant was entitled to a decree for both principal and interest, and that the land should be sold and the proceeds applied to satisfaction of the same.—Engler v. Engler, 192 Mich. 361.

¶ 200. Under a mortgage containing a condition that if at the expiration of the time limited for the payment of the instalments there should remain due on the mortgage a specified sum, the mortgagor might have the privilege of paying the amount due by giving therefor his note, secured by mortgage on other real estate, the instalments fall due at the time stipulated; but the mortgagor may in such case stop the sale by insisting on and complying with the terms of the condition.—Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

Implication as to covenant in mortgage for payment of debt, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11692.

¶ 202. A personal covenant in a mortgage will bind the mortgagor's estate after his death.—Dennis v. Sharer, 56 Mich. 224.

¶ 203. A purchaser under a mortgage is entitled to the benefit of such covenants as run with the land.—Ely v. Hergesell, 46 Mich. 325.

¶ 204. How. St. § 5561, which excepts mortgages from the general provision of the statute (How. St. § 5560), that "all grants and devises of lands made to two or more persons shall be construed to create estates in common, and not in joint tenancy, unless expressly declared to be in joint tenancy," does not operate to prevent the execution of a mortgage with covenants that are several, but leaves the rule as at common law. —Cooley v. Kinney, 109 Mich. 34.

¶ 205. A wife joining in the mortgage to bar her rights does not become bound by the covenant to pay the husband's debt thereby secured.—Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 Mich. 81.

§ 43. ——Provisions for interest, bonus, or commission.

¶¶ 206, 207. The mortgagee in a mortgage which provides that the mortgagor shall pay interest "at the rate of 6 per cent per annum if the mortgagee pays the taxes, or otherwise, if the mortgagor pays all taxes assessed on the mortgage, to be computed at 5½ per cent," is entitled to interest at six per cent where no assessment whatever is made upon the mortgage.—Rauch v. Seip, 112 Mich. 612.

¶ 208. The fact that the balance of accommodations and advances was always in favor of the mortgagees would not entitle them to charge commissions on such balance unless it had been so agreed.—Brackett v. Sears, 15 Mich. 244.

§ 44. ——For payment of taxes or insurance.

Validity of covenant to pay taxes, see Contracts § 52.

Breach of warranty in insurance policy against mortgage incumbrance, see Insurance § 140.

Forfeiture of insurance for breach of condition in policy against mortgage incumbrance, see Insurance § 168.

¶ 209. Under the general tax law and Comp. L. 1897, § 6168, How. 2nd Ed. § 6488, relating to the taxation of the capital of trust, deposit and security companies a tax on a purchase price mortgage held by a trust company given upon the sale by it of its real estate is levied upon or on account of a mortgage within the meaning of such mortgage which provides for the payment by the mortgagor of taxes so levied.—Union Trust Co. v. Radford, 176 Mich. 50.

¶ 209a. A covenant in a mortgage that the mortgagor shall pay all such taxes and assessments as shall, by any lawful authority, be levied upon the mortgaged "premises," does not impose upon him the obligation of paying taxes which, by virtue of subsequent legislation, are assessed against the mortgagee's interest in the land as a separate taxable interest from that of the mortgagor.—Fuller v. Kane, 110 Mich. 549.

¶ 210. A personal tax assessment against the mortgagee on the mortgage debt is within the meaning of the contract and required to be paid by a mortgagor who agrees to pay all taxes left upon the property "or upon or on account of this mortgage or the indebtedness secured."—Green v. Grant, 134 Mich. 462.

¶ 211. Payment by a mortgagor of a tax levied on the debt owned by the mortgagee is not a payment to preserve the security but for the benefit of the mortgagee just as if he paid it to the mortgagee direct.—Green v. Grant, 134 Mich. 462.

¶ 212. A stipulation for insurance for a mortgagee's benefit was held in equity to be an adjunct to the mortgage, and as binding the mortgagor and all others in his place without notice.—Miller v. Aldrich, 31 Mich. 408.

§ 45. Conditions and stipulations.

For election to declare whole sum due on any default, see post § 46.

For ejectment and receivership on default, see post § 47.

Stipulation as to power of sale, see post § 48.

Stipulations for attorney fees, see post § 49.

Construction of mortgage providing obligation would become canceled on death of mortgagee if interest paid as stipulated, see Foreclosure ¶ 26.

¶ 213. The condition in a mortgage that the mortgagees shall have the use of a horse and buggy "whenever they or either of them may desire," etc., is joint and several, and either may have a separate cause of grievance for a failure to accommodate him individually.—Tucker v. Tucker, 24 Mich. 426.

¶ 214. Where a mortgage was given to an old person to secure the payment of a debt by boarding and supporting her for five years, the mortgagee was absolutely entitled to the support for the entire period, and the mortgagor was not at liberty to furnish the support or pay the money at his option.—Hawkins v. Clermont, 15 Mich. 511.

¶ 216. J. gave a mortgage for $10,000, payable in several instalments. As further security for the first four instalments he gave a second mortgage on other premises, conditioned to pay said four instalments as they fell due. The second mortgage also contained a stipulation that whenever J. should build on the premises covered by the first mortgage, and cause the buildings to be insured for $2,000, and assign the policy to the mortgagee, and agree to keep the same so insured during the continuance of the first mortgage, then the mortgagee should discharge the second mortgage. J. built on the premises covered by the first mortgage, and caused the building to be insured, but did not assign the policy. The said four instalments of the first mortgage having become due, and three of them remaining unpaid, a bill was filed to foreclose the two mortgages. J. (who had become insolvent) now tendered an assignment of the policy of insurance, together with a written agreement to keep the building insured, which the holder of the mortgages declined to receive. It was held that under the second mortgage J. had his election to pay the said four instalments as they fell due, or to perform the stipulation therein with respect to building and insuring; that his right to elect terminated when the moneys fell due, and he had no right thereafter to a discharge of the second mortgage on tendering the policy of insurance and agreement to keep insured.—Chapin v. Jacobs, 10 Mich. 405.

¶ 217. Where a purchase-money mortgage contains a stipulation that it shall be "null and void" unless a certain other mortgage, already given by the vendor upon the same property, shall be discharged, the provision is for the benefit of the vendees who give the purchase-money mortgage, and if they do not insist upon it the mortgagee in the prior mortgage cannot.—Pool v. Horton, 45 Mich. 404.

¶ 218. The clause in a mortgage which provides that, upon default in payment of interest, the whole principal sum shall immediately fall due at the mortgagee's option, is in the nature of a forfeiture, and no advantage can be taken of it in cases where the mortgagor, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, denies, though erroneously, his liability to pay interest, or claims that it has been already paid.—Wilcox v. Allen, 36 Mich. 160.

Receivership for protection of security, see post § 65.

Law of ejectment in general, see Ejectment.

Foreclosure by ejectment, see Foreclosure § 16.

Appointment of receiver in foreclosure proceedings, see Foreclosure § 102.

Occasion for appointment and law governing receivership generally, see Receivers.

¶ 219. Any provision in a mortgage of lands which permits ejectment on a mere default in payment, or allows an ex parte order for a receiver of rents and profits, or destroys in advance the equity of redemption, is contrary to equity, and a court of chancery will not enforce it.—Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 Mich. 503.

§ 48. ——Stipulation as to power of sale.

Effect of assignment of mortgage to pass power of sale provided in mortgage, see post ¶ 434.

Foreclosure by advertisement under power of sale, see Foreclosure, II.

Power of sale in general, see Foreclosure, II, A.

¶ 220. The authority to sell is a special power and must be strictly pursued.—Niles v. Ransford, 1 Mich. 338.

¶ 221. The exercise of the power of sale by foreclosure by advertisement must comply substantially with statutory requirements.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461; Miller v. Clark, 56 Mich. 337.

¶ 222. The statutory provisions as to the right to foreclose under a power of sale must be followed strictly.—Dohm v. Haskin, 88 Mich. 144.

¶ 223. Unreasonable restrictions and intendments against the power of sale should not be favored.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

¶ 224. The proceeding under a power of sale being ex parte must conform in all matters to the conditions expressed by the legislature.—Lee v. Mason, 10 Mich. 403.

¶ 225. Foreclosures under power of sale are matters of contract authorized by the mortgagor, and ought not to be hampered by an unreasonably strict construction of the law.—Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223.

¶ 226. An error in a power of sale in a mortgage reciting that on nonpayment of the "said sum of one hundred" dollars, it really being to secure "two hundred," is clerical; and the mortgagee may, after default, disregard it, and foreclose for the sum actually due.—Damon v. Deeves, 62 Mich. 465.

¶ 227. A power of sale is no necessary part of a mortgage, and a defect in it does not affect the validity of the mortgage.—State Bank of Bay City v. Chapelle, 40 Mich. 447.

¶ 228. Under the statute of April 19, 1833, the power of sale continued in force as a personal power, until completed by deed, in the person who acted when the property was struck off, passing, in case of his death, to his personal representatives, and not to any official successor.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

Right in foreclosure proceedings to attorney fees under stipulation in mortgage, see Foreclosure §§ 130, 131.

¶ 229. Where there is no statute allowing it a stipulation in a mortgage fixing in advance a gross allowance for the attorney's fee in the event of foreclosure at law is against public policy, and cannot be enforced.—Vosburgh v. Lay, 45 Mich. 455; Louder v. Burch, 47 Mich. 109; Millard v. Truax, 47 Mich. 251; Millard v. Truax, 50 Mich. 343; Kennedy v. Brown, 50 Mich. 336; Damon v. Deeves, 62 Mich. 465.

¶ 230. Since a stipulation in a mortgage for fixed attorney's fees in event of foreclosure has the effect of a penalty and is therefore invalid under the decisions of Michigan, it will be so treated in a federal equity court on a bill to foreclose.—Bendey v. Townsend, 109 U. S. 665, 27 L. ed. 1065, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482.

¶ 231. In the absence of statute the provision for an attorney's fee in a mortgage could not be enforced upon a statutory foreclosure unless an actual sale was made, if at all.—Myer v. Hart, 40 Mich. 517.

¶ 232. Provisions for attorney's and solicitor's fees in mortgages, except where expressly sanctioned by statute, are void.—Kittermaster v. Brossard, 105 Mich. 219.

¶ 233. A provision in a mortgage or deed of trust for an attorney fee in the event of foreclosure is against public policy and void, except when permitted by statute or rule of court.—Curtis v. Mueller, 184 Mich. 148.

¶ 234. A provision for an attorney fee does not invalidate a mortgage given by an administrator.—Griffin v. Johnson, 37 Mich. 87.

¶ 235. A stipulation for attorney fees in a mortgage executed in a foreign state and there valid is unenforceable in Michigan, being against public policy.—Curtis v. Mueller, 184 Mich. 148.

¶ 236. The allowance in a foreclosure decree in chancery of $75 as an attorney's fee on account of a clause in the power of sale providing for "a reasonable number of dollars" as an attorney's fee in case of foreclosure, was held erroneous; the clause refers to a foreclosure under the power of sale, and not in chancery.—Hardwick v. Bassett, 29 Mich. 17.

¶ 237. A mortgage empowered the mortgagee in the usual manner to sell, "rendering the surplus moneys, if any there be, to the said mortgagor, after deducting the costs and charges of such vendue and sale aforesaid, and also [a sum specified] "as an attorney's fee, should any proceedings be taken to foreclose this indenture." It was held that the fee was limited to the case of a foreclosure under the power of sale; and could not be recovered on foreclosure in equity.—Sage v. Riggs, 12 Mich. 313; Van Marter v. McMillan, 39 Mich. 304; Botsford v. Botsford, 49 Mich. 29.

¶ 238. A purchase-money mortgage conditioned to become due on removal of certain specified defects of title is enforceable on performance of the condition, and is not defeasible because of other defects not specified in the condition.—Goodenow v. Curtis, 33 Mich. 505.

¶ 240. Where a mortgage for $2,000 upon premises described in it, and payable in two years, with annual interest, was in the usual form, but contained this clause, viz.: "The said $2,000 being for purchase money of the same, detained by the party of the first part as security for the perfection of the title to be made good by the party of the second part, to wit, a deed from Rice and wife (if any), or in chancery, or his legal representatives, to the party of the first part; also a mortgage to be discharged from record, made by one Joseph French, July 3, 1841, unless the same shall outlaw before the time of payment of this indenture; all to be arranged and completed on or before two years from this date, at which time this mortgage shall become due and be paid; but in case the title shall be made good as aforesaid, prior to the 9th day of September, 1867, the party of the second part shall give ninety days' notice to the parties of the first part of the arrangement of said title as aforesaid, the full term not to exceed two years from the date of this instrument," it was held that the proj construction of this clause is that the $2,(was kept back as security for the perfecti of the title in the two particulars mentior within two years, and that the stipulati for annual interest was to be operative o1 after the title had been perfected, and tl the term "outlaw," as here used, referred the time when by law the mortgage would presumed paid. Held, also, that there bel no stipulation in the nature of a forfeitu the mortgagee's rights could not be f feited on failure to comply by the day, if does so within a reasonable time afterwar —Curtis v. Goodenow, 24 Mich. 18.

Maturity of right under mortgage to secu conditional or collateral liability, s ante § 41.

Title and rights under preliminary and c lateral agreements, see post § 57.

Construction of several instruments as s gle contract, see Contracts § 150.

¶ 241. An agreement between a subseque purchaser and a mortgagee to pay ten p cent interest for forbearance was held to tach to the land, the rights of third perso not intervening.—Smith v. Graham, 34 Mi 302.

¶ 242. An agreement indorsed on a mo gage note to pay a higher rate of interest a mere personal undertaking and does n enlarge the mortgage.—Havens v. Jones, Mich. 253.

¶ 243. An indorsement upon a note, aft maturity, of an agreement by the mo gagor's grantees to pay ten per cent int est on lands thereafter, is but a persor undertaking, not secured by the mortga even as against the promisors, much less against subsequent purchasers.—Spear Hadden, 31 Mich. 265.

¶ 244. A note secured by mortgage was dorsed with an agreement to pay a high rate of interest. Held, that the indorseme was a mere personal agreement and did n enlarge the mortgage.—Havens v. Jones, Mich. 253.

¶ 245. A written agreement between subsequent purchaser and the mortgagee f the payment of an increased rate of int est after due, in consideration of an exte sion of time, was held to charge the la where there were no third parties having i tervening rights.—Smith v. Graham, 34 Mi 302.

¶ 246. A mortgagee has a right to stipulate for ten per cent interest as a condition to extending time of payment, and if paid and applied as interest, the application will not be disturbed.—Havens v. Jones, 45 Mich. 253.

¶ 247. Where, at a mortgagor's request, a mortgage creditor has already shown forbearance, on the faith of an oral promise to pay a higher rate of interest than that borne by the mortgage, and the mortgagor desires further extension without reference to any particular period, and executes a written agreement to pay such higher rate of interest from the date of the maturity of the mortgage until the principal shall be fully paid, without specifying any time of payment, it was held that such prior forbearance was a sufficient consideration for the promise to pay the additional interest up to the date of the agreement, and that any forbearance which took place after that on the faith of the agreement was a sufficient consideration for the promise to pay the additional interest till fully paid; also that, as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee or holder of the mortgage, such agreement would be valid and have the same effect as if the original bond and mortgage had provided for such rate of interest after maturity till fully paid.—Burchard v. Frazer, 23 Mich. 224.

¶ 248. Where, at the time an agreement was made for forbearance, and even before the maturity of the mortgage, the mortgagor had sold out all the land covered by the mortgage in separate parcels to various persons, it was held that as to these purchasers it was no more competent for the mortgagor to increase the mortgage debt by any such agreement than to affect them by an additional, subsequently executed mortgage for the increased sum, and that such agreement only bound the mortgagor personally, and that the lien of the mortgage upon the lands so sold was only for the amount of the principal, with interest, as provided in the original bond and mortgage.—Burchard v. Frazer, 23 Mich. 224.

¶ 249. Where those who have bought mortgaged premises from the mortgagors indorse upon the note secured by the mortgage, after its maturity, an agreement to pay ten per cent interest on it thereafter, it having borne only seven before, the agreement is only a personal undertaking, not secured by the mortgage, even as against the promisors, and much less as against a subsequent purchaser of the lands, who had not assented to the agreement.—Spear v. Hadden, 31 Mich. 265.

Mortgages amounting to common law assignments, see Assignment for Creditors § 12.

Necessity for recordation of instruments as between the parties, see Notice and Record of Title § 45.

¶ 250. The fact that one who has purchased undivided shares of certain property has mortgaged his interest as undivided shares does not hinder him from afterwards mortgaging the whole property when he has acquired the remaining shares.—Brown v. Phillips, 40 Mich. 264.

¶ 251. A mortgage executed to the mortgagees in lieu of their heirship interests in the mortgagor's estate, which is conditioned upon the payment of a specified sum to each, does not, at the common law, create an estate in joint tenancy, so as to permit the survivor to foreclose for the full amount.—Cooley v. Kinney, 109 Mich. 34.

¶ 251a. As between the parties a mortgage is just as effectual for all purposes without recording as it is with it.—Bacon v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

¶ 252. A mortgage by a tenant in common upon his interest for his individual debt is valid unless it appears that the real estate was purchased out of partnership funds and held for partnership purposes.—Ruppe v. Steinbach, 48 Mich. 465.

¶ 253. One who holds a power of attorney to sell and convey lands has no power to mortgage them, and a deed from him in form absolute, but given as a mere security for money loaned, will not sustain an ejectment. —Jeffrey v. Hursh, 49 Mich. 31; Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 254. A mortgage given by an infant feme covert to secure her husband's debt is absolutely void.—Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217.

¶ 255. A void mortgage by one co-beneficiary under a trust, void because she had no title, is not ratified by the act of the other co-beneficiary taking a deed of the land with an assumption clause after having been a witness to the execution of the mortgage.— Weaver v. Van Akin, 71 Mich. 69.

¶ 256. A mortgage is void where the mortgagor secured the record title to the property covered by the mortgage by fraudulently inducing the owner to sign the deed to the real property in question, when under the impression that it was a duplicate of a lease that had been read to him.—McGinn v. Tobey, 62 Mich. 252.

¶ 257. Where a person files a bill in chancery to have a certain instrument construed as a mortgage, he cannot raise the question of the validity of such instrument.—Dalton v. Mertz, 173 Mich. 153.

¶ 258. The forging of a deed whereby the surviving husband receives title to the deceased's land and his subsequent transfer to one of five children who transfers to another in return for a mortgage back both having knowledge of the forgery makes the mortgage good as to the shares of the two children involved in the transaction.—Cline v. Wixson, 128 Mich. 255.

Restraining cutting of timber on mortgaged property, see Injunctions § 76.

¶ 264. The legal title to mortgaged land was, at the common law, in the mortgagee, who was entitled to possession, and who might, at any time after default, if not before, unless the mortgage should otherwise provide, put the mortgagor out by ejectment.—Stevens v. Brown, W. 41; Mundy v. Monroe, 1 Mich. 68; Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392; Albright v. Cobb, 34 Mich. 316.

¶ 265. The mortgagee at the common law was entitled to the possession of the land mortgaged, and the court of chancery would not prevent him from taking possession, or, if he was in possession, deprive him of it, so long as there was anything due on the mortgage.—Schwarz v. Sears, W. 170.

¶ 267. Under R. S. 1838 a mortgagee had a right of entry on default in the payment of the mortgage; but if he made no entry he could have no such possession as would enable him to enter within twenty-five years, or bring an action for the recovery of the land; and an entry without right by a stranger would not inure to his benefit so as to enable him to make his original entry or bring suit within twenty years from the origin of his right.—Van Vleet v. Blackwood, 39 Mich. 728.

¶ 268. By the operation of the statute of March 8, 1843, forbidding ejectment by mortgagees (see How. St. § 7847), they are not entitled to possession until after foreclosure. Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 270; Newton v. Sly, 15 Mich. 391; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351; Newton v. McKay, 30 Mich. 380; Wagar v. Stone, 36 Mich. 364; Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 Mich. 503; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

¶ 270. A mortgagee until he has obtained title by foreclosure, cannot, even by stipulation in a mortgage, interfere with the mortgagor's right of possession.—Hardy v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 594.

¶ 271. A mortgagee has only a lien upon mortgaged land to secure his indebtedness, and has no grievance as mortgagee for anything which does not impair its value as such security, though the mortgage contains covenants respecting trade on the premises.—Hardy v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 594.

¶ 272. A stipulation in a mortgage limiting the sale of beer on the mortgaged premises to a named kind is only a personal contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee, though any damages resulting from a breach thereof may be a lien secured by a mortgage upon the property which has passed into the hands of a third party, and enforceable upon the foreclosure of the mortgage.—Hardy v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 594.

¶ 273. The constructive possession of vacant land as between the mortgagor and mortgagee must be deemed to be in the mortgagor.—Albright v. Cobb, 34 Mich. 316.

¶ 274. A mortgagor of land is entitled to possession until foreclosure, and does not forfeit this right by failure to make payments as stipulated.—Ferris v. Wilcox, 51 Mich. 105.

¶ 275. The mortgagor now having a legal right to possession until the mortgage is foreclosed may make any arrangement for the use and enjoyment that any person might during his term.—Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23.

¶ 276. Until a mortgagor's rights have been in some way foreclosed he is entitled to recover possession.—Humphrey v. Hurd, 29 Mich. 44.

¶ 277. A mortgagor can bring ejectment against a mortgagee who has gone into possession without his consent.—Newton v. McKay, 30 Mich. 380.

¶ 278. The mortgagor is entitled to recover the possession from his mortgagee at any time before his rights have been foreclosed.—Humphrey v. Hurd, 29 Mich. 44.

¶ 279. When a mortgagor's administrator has parted with the title to the premises, his permission to the mortgagee to take possession of them is of no more force than if given by a stranger.—Newton v. McKay, 30 Mich. 380.

¶ 280. Consent of the mortgagor to the mortgagee's taking possession, which would be good until revoked, might be given without any writing, and as informally as possible.—Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

§ 60. Right to rents, issues and profits.

Accountability of mortgagee for rents, issues and profits during his possession, see post § 75.

Assignment of rents for further security or application, see post § 61.

Assignment of rents of mortgaged property to mortgagee to be applied upon mortgage, see Landlord and Tenant ¶ 206.

¶ 281. The mortgagor, not the mortgagee, is entitled to the rents, issues and profits of the mortgaged premises until foreclosure becomes absolute.—Wagar v. Stone, 36 Mich. 364.

¶ 282. An assignment for a term of rents and profits by a mortgagor in trust to the trustee under several mortgages for different creditors, with a provision in the assignment that "the right to rents and income upon said property ceases" whenever any of the land should be sold to pay the mortgage debt or whenever the mortgages are paid, ceases by its own terms when the junior of the mortgages is foreclosed by the trustee, and is bought in by him for the creditors secured.—First National Bank v. Gillam, 123 Mich. 112.

¶ 283. An assignment of rents of mortgaged property, to be received by the mortgagee and applied upon the mortgage, is valid.—Kelly v. Bowerman, 113 Mich. 446.

¶ 284. An agreement assigning rents and income to a trustee "until the interest and taxes now due and that shall have accrued are paid," and providing for their application to taxes, insurance and interest incumbering the premises and after that to interest on another mortgage, is not limited to taxes and interest due at the time it was made; wh the object was to prevent accumulating rearages of taxes and interest and so to tect the interests of all the parties.—Vicar v. Denison, 81 Mich. 348.

¶ 285. An agreement, assigning to a t tee the rents and income of certain prop "until the interest and taxes now due that shall have accrued are paid," and signed to protect all parties and secure o mortgages besides those on the property not terminated by the bringing of a for sure suit on the mortgages on the prop itself for the principal and taxes and inte then due and unpaid.—McVicar v. Deni 81 Mich. 348.

¶ 286. A mortgagor, in consideration the mortgagee's agreeing to accept pa payments on a certain mortgage and to partial releases thereof at any time wi three years, assigned to a trustee "until interest and taxes now due and that s have accrued are paid," the rents and inc of premises upon which were two past mortgages executed by him to the same n gagee, such rents and income to be app first, to the taxes and insurance on premises; second, to the interest on the mortgages on said premises; and third interest on the assignor's mortgage t third person. Under this arrangement parties acted for four years and until was begun to foreclose the two mortg Held, that the arrangement was valid, continued valid after the first-named n gage and the mortgage to the third pe were paid; that it was not limited to taxes and interest due at the time it made, nor did the foreclosure suit termi it; but that the trustee should pay to mortgagee rents which should become before the foreclosure sale so far as n sary to pay taxes and interest.—McVica Denison, 81 Mich. 348.

Lease as mortgage, see ante § 25.

¶ 287. Where a paid-up lease for a tain period was given to mortgagees as ditional security, who had the option to over on paying a fair rental, held, whether or not they gave up possessio the date fixed, their mortgage security mained and they could enforce it if the was not duly paid; and that the mortg could pay the debt at any time after i came due and so extinguish the securi Dutton v. Merritt, 41 Mich. 537.

¶ 288. The foreclosure of the mort would not prevent the mortgagees fron sorting to any additional security they n have, and they would have a right to s the amount of rent due from them und lease held as further security and unpa satisfaction of their debt.—Storey v. Du 46 Mich. 539.

Mortgagees of insured property as necessary parties to suit for insurance, see Insurance § 280.

Payment of insurance to mortgagee, see Insurance § 258.

Persons having insurable interest in mortgaged premises, see Insurance § 41.

Breach of warranties against mortgage incumbrance, see Insurance § 140.

¶ 289. An insurance policy taken out by the mortgagor, in which the insurance is stated to be for the benefit of the mortgagee, creates no contract relation between the latter and the insurer, and whatever defeats the mortgagor's right of recovery defeats any right of the mortgagee.—Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 398.

¶ 290. Whoever sues upon an insurance policy must be able to enforce the whole of it; and persons named therein as payees to the extent of a partial interest only, such as mortgagees of a part of the property insured, cannot sue.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609.

¶ 291. An insurance policy which provides that in case of loss the insurance shall be paid to a mortgagee, therein named, as his mortgage interest may appear, which provision was inserted pursuant to an agreement of the mortgagor, under which the policy was to be delivered to and held by the mortgagee until the mortgage was paid, and he was authorized to effect such insurance in case of a failure on the part of the mortgagor so to do, gives the right of action in case of a loss to the mortgagor.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

Covenants for payment of taxes and insurance, see ante § 44.

Persons having insurable interest in mortgaged premises, see Insurance § 41.

¶ 292. As between the mortgagor and first and second mortgagees, the duty of paying taxes is primarily upon the mortgagor.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

¶ 293. A mortgagee can protect his mortgage interest against taxes that the mortgagor should have paid, and the amount he pays in doing so may be added to the charge upon the land.—Payne v. Avery, 21 Mich. 524; Vaughn v. Nims, 36 Mich. 297; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

¶ 294. Payment of taxes by the mortgagee of land does not necessarily give him a right of action as against the mortgagor as for money paid to his use.—Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 Mich. 342.

¶ 295. A mortgagee owes no duty to the mortgagor or to a subsequent mortgagee to protect the land from tax-sales.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

¶ 296. On foreclosure for nonpayment of taxes as they fell due the mortgagee claimed to recover, as taxes paid by himself, certain sums paid by his agent in bidding in the property at tax-sales. Held, that such payments were not, in contemplation of law, payments of the taxes, and could not be included in the decree.—Maxfield v. Wiley, 46 Mich. 252.

¶ 297. Where a mortgagee has acquired a tax-title to protect the mortgage, a foreclosure decree may provide for the payment to him of the cost thereof on condition that he assign the certificate of purchase to the mortgagor.—Baker v. Clark, 52 Mich. 22.

¶ 298. If a mortgagee accepts a mortgage on lands already subject to returned taxes, the mortgage being silent as to taxes, and redeems soon after the tax-sale without giving the mortgagor an opportunity to do so instead, he cannot claim that his redemption certificate is a lien on the land as against a subsequent purchaser who has paid the mortgage in full without notice of the claim of lien.—Pond v. Drake, 50 Mich. 302.

¶ 299. Money paid by the holder of a mortgage to redeem the premises from a tax-sale does not constitute a lien apart from the mortgage, but is discharged when the mortgage is satisfied; and whether the amount paid is or is not included in the sum for which the mortgage is foreclosed, there can be no subsequent or separate proceeding against the mortgagor to enforce its payment.—Vincent v. Moore, 51 Mich. 618.

¶ 300. A mortgage trustee who bought in at his own foreclosure sale for the creditors' benefit, and thereby extinguished his right to receive and apply rents under a collateral assignment from the mortgagor for better security of the creditors, should until instructed to the contrary by them continue to pay the taxes assessed to the mortgagor on the land, but after such instructions cannot make or be credited for payments of the taxes; though he was also trustee under a prior mortgage for another set of creditors who insist that the rents be applied to taxes for their benefit and protection.—First National Bank v. Gillam, 123 Mich. 112.

¶ 301. One occupying land thinking he was the owner thereof and who had assumed title with a mortgage thereon, which he had paid, but who after losing the land had obtained a lien on the property by subrogation to the mortgage, could not claim as a part of that lien sums he had paid as taxes during his occupancy of the land inasmuch as such a claim was allowable only as against a claim for use and occupation, which was not litigated in his bill.—Taylor v. Roniger, 147 Mich. 99.

¶ 302. If, before foreclosure, a mortgagee pays taxes and insurance which the mortgagor ought to have paid, the sum paid may be included in the amount for which he forecloses, even though the insurance was taken for the full period allowed for redemption; but for such payments made after foreclosure sale the power of sale cannot again be asserted.—Walton v. Hollywood, 47 Mich. 385.

¶ 303. Where a covenant to insure is not kept by the mortgagor, the mortgagee may insure, and can add the premium, if fair and reasonable, to his debt.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

¶ 304. As between the owners of the fee, and those of a life-estate in the same encumbered property, the life-estate is to keep down the interest, and the fee is charged with the principal. A dowress pays one-third of the interest. Interest due at the ancestor's death is treated as principal.—Campbell v. Campbell, 21 Mich. 438.

¶ 304b. It is a mortgagor's duty to pay taxes while he owns the property, and one who acquires his interest is bound to discharge the unpaid taxes standing against such property.—Fells v. Barbour, 58 Mich. 49.

¶ 304c. So far as a mortgagee or his assigns is concerned, the purchase, by one who has acquired by virtue of an execution sale the mortgagor's interest, of bids under sales made for taxes, operates as a payment of the taxes.—Fells v. Barbour, 58 Mich. 49.

§ 65. Receivership or protection of security.

Stipulation in mortgage for appointment of receiver, see ante § 47.

Law of receivership generally, see Receivers.

¶ 305. Land is presumed sufficient security for the mortgage until the contrary is shown.—Brown v. Chase, W. 43.

¶ 306. As it is not the policy of the law to divest a mortgagor of possession before foreclosure and the expiration of the period of redemption, a receiver will not be appointed to take possession of unforeclosed mortgage premises for the mortgagee unless the right is clearly given by the arrangement of parties.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Lansing Lumber Co., 103 Mich. 392.

¶ 307. There is no rule of law that pr vents a mortgagee from becoming in go faith the purchaser of the equity of redem tion.—Richardson v. Medbury, 107 Mich. 17

¶ 308. How far the rule that a mortgag holding by warranty deed and not ousted disturbed cannot set up an outstanding ti by way of defense to a foreclosure sho be applied, quære.—Powell v. Conant, Mich. 396.

¶ 309. Where both parties to a conveya of land that is mortgaged suppose that title in fee is being transferred, though fact it is not, and the grantor afterwa purchases the land at the foreclosure sale, is bound in equity to recognize the grant right to a perfected title. And if he furt becomes a party to an arrangement wher a third person takes a deed from the gran and gives back a mortgage that he, grantor, disposes of for his own purpo he is then estopped from disputing that original deed conveyed title and that foreclosure purchase related back to it.—Coss v. Wadsworth, 56 Mich. 421.

order of sale were made in the foreclosure suit, but without prejudice to the rights of the second mortgagees. After the sale of the mortgaged premises to the assignee, and the execution and delivery to him of the usual commissioner's deed, he filed a bill to set aside the second mortgage, in which suit the validity of the tax-deeds was not assailed. Held, that the purchase by the mortgagor of the outstanding original title could not detract from the rights of the first mortgagee or of his assignee, and that the latter, therefore, so far as appears from the record, obtained a perfect title to the land.—Scherer v. Judson, 100 Mich. 539.

¶ 311. One who has sold mortgaged land with warranty and has covenanted to pay off the mortgage cannot make title in himself as against his grantee by allowing foreclosure and redeeming the land, and the equities may be protected by declaring a trust.—Huxley v. Rice, 40 Mich. 73.

Rights gained by junior mortgagee by payment of prior charges, see post § 82.

¶ 312. A mortgagor whose personal liability for the mortgage debt has become extinguished is not disabled legally from obtaining title in good faith under the foreclosure of another mortgage which has legal priority. And where no fraud or collusion appeared, although charged, a bill to subject such foreclosure purchase to the subsequent mortgage was properly dismissed.—Burdick v. Wheelock, 48 Mich. 289.

¶ 313. Land was sold to A., subject to a mortgage to B., payment of which A. assumed. Unknown to both A. and B. there was a prior mortgage to C. on the same land, and on their discovering this, A. promised B. to pay it off. Held, that a subsequent foreclosure by C., at which A. became the purchaser, did not extinguish the lien of B.'s mortgage.—Manwaring v. Powell, 40 Mich. 371.

Rights gained by junior mortgagee by payment of prior charges, see post § 82.

Right of purchasers under land contract to buy in tax title, see post ¶¶ 331, 332.

Right of mortgagee and junior incumbrancers to buy in tax titles, see post § 70.

Rights under tax titles in general, see Taxes, XII.

¶ 314. A mortgagor is estopped from cutting off his mortgagee's rights by acquiring tax titles.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

¶ 315. Neither a mortgagor nor his wife who has an interest in the fee can defeat the mortgage by setting up a tax title acquired by the purchase of the land under a sale for taxes assessed against the mortgagee's interest.—Chamberlain v. Forbes, 126 Mich. 86.

¶ 316. A mortgage on land containing covenants of warranty, and an undertaking to pay all taxes, was not defeated by the purchase of a tax title by the grantee of the land who took subject to the mortgage, and who obtained its extension.—Brown v. Avery, 119 Mich. 384.

¶ 318. Where the owner of land gives a mortgage on his premises containing a warranty of title and also a warranty against previous incumbrances, and, upon foreclosure of the mortgage, the mortgagor fails to redeem, resulting in the divesting of his title, and he subsequently purchases such premises from the holder of a tax title for taxes which were a lien at the time of the giving of the mortgage, such repurchase by the mortgagor must in equity be construed as a redemption rather than a repurchase, and to thereby inure to the benefit of the mortgagee.—Napper v. Fitzpatrick, 194 Mich. 175.

¶ 319. One whose title is obtained from an execution purchaser is in such privity with the defendant in the execution that if the latter has mortgaged the land he cannot let it be sold for taxes and bid it in so as to cut off the mortgagee's rights; nor can he cut it off by taking tax leases.—Fells v. Barbour, 58 Mich. 49.

¶ 320. Equity will not grant relief to a mortgagee by declaring a repurchase by a mortgagor, whose title had been divested by foreclosure proceedings, from the holder of the tax title for taxes which were a lien prior to the giving of the mortgage, to be a redemption rather than a repurchase and to thereby inure to the mortgagee's benefit where the mortgagee had learned of the existence of the tax title at least a year before a writ of assistance was applied for by the holder of tax title, and had ample opportunity to adjust it, and refused to pay or recognize the tax title, although the mortgagor promised to repay the amount thereof if the time of redemption was extended, and chose to take the chance of the tax being declared invalid in the writ of assistance proceedings, and where it appeared also that he had collected from the mortgagor usurious interest in a sum larger than the amount of the original tax.—Napper v. Fitzpatrick, 194 Mich. 175.

¶ 321. Tax deeds taken in another's name for the benefit of the owner of the equity places him at best in the position of a second mortgagee whose interest is cut off by foreclosure and sale under the mortgage.—Vreeland v. Monnier, 127 Mich. 304.

¶ 321a. A tax-title against which a mortgagee is indemnified cannot be set up against his foreclosure title by the party who indemnified him.—Wyman v. Baer, 46 Mich. 418.

¶ 321b. Where one has sold land with warranty, taking back a mortgage thereon for the purchase price, his devisees cannot, by purchasing at a sale for a tax that their devisor was bound to pay, being a lien on the land when he conveyed, use the tax-title to defeat the title of their devisor's grantee and mortgagor; nor would such tax-title cut off the mortgagor's equity of redemption so as to dispense with foreclosure.—Taylor v. Snyder, W. 490.

¶ 322. A mortgagee cannot acquire title to the mortgaged premises by purchase at a tax sale, the rule being that such purchase amounts to the payment of the tax, and inures to the benefit of the mortgagor.—Porter v. Corbin, 124 Mich. 201.

¶ 323. The purchase of tax leases by the attorney of the first mortgagee without any testimony that he was acting for the mortgagee other than his testimony that he did not know whether the purchase price paid out of his own money had been charged to the mortgagee, is not sufficient to show a purchase by the mortgagee unavailable against the owner.—Sherman v. Fisher, 138 Mich. 391.

¶ 324. Taxes accrued on land while subject to a mortgage. Later the mortgagee bought the land at the foreclosure sale. Thereafter the auditor general gave him a deed as tax purchaser. Held, the tax purchase was not void as being made by a mortgagee, since the relation of mortgagee had terminated.—Ensley v. Coolbaugh, 160 Mich. 299.

¶ 325. Taxes upon mortgaged lands are as much a lien upon the mortgaged interest as upon the equity of redemption; and where one having a second mortgage allows the land to be sold for taxes and obtains a tax-deed, he cannot use it adversely to the first mortgage.—Horton v. Ingersoll, 13 Mich. 409.

¶ 326. A second mortgagee who has purchased and bid in the premises can obtain a tax-title to them, and if it is allowed to become absolute he can use it in defending ejectment brought by the first mortgagee, unless the latter has tendered repayment.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

¶ 327. Where one having a second mortgage allows the land to be sold for taxes and obtains a tax-deed, he cannot use it adversely to the first mortgage.—Horton v. Ingersoll, 13 Mich. 409.

¶ 328. A second mortgagee who has foreclosed and bidden in the premises can obtain a tax-title to them, and if it is allowed to become absolute he has a right to use it as a defense to an action of ejectment brought by the first mortgagee, unless the latter tenders repayment.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

¶ 329. A second mortgagee is under no obligation to protect the lien of the first mortgagee by the payment of taxes or by purchasing the premises for his benefit at a tax-sale; but if he does pay or purchase, the act ipso facto constitutes a protection.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

¶ 330. Where a mortgagee instead of making payment of the taxes makes a purchase of the land at a tax sale either in his own name or in the name of any other person who has his money for the purpose, the mortgagor may have the purchase treated as a payment and may compel the cancellation of the certificate or deed on refunding the amount paid with interest.—Maxfield v. Willey, 46 Mich. 252.

¶ 330a. Where the holder of a tax-title having a second mortgage goes into possession under the mortgagee, the tax-title is no answer to a claim by the first mortgagee (whose mortgage was prior to 1843) that he should account for the rents and profits to be applied on their mortgage.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

Disability of grantees in possession to dispute grantor's title for purpose of defeating purchase money mortgage, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Time in which foreclosure purchaser may sue person claiming adversely to mortgagor, see Limitations ¶ 50.

¶ 331. A purchaser under a land contract of land subject to a mortgage cannot defeat the mortgagee's rights by disclaiming any right under the contract and claiming under the tax titles subsequently acquired.—Simons v. Rood, 129 Mich. 345.

¶ 332. A purchaser under a land contract providing for deferred payments and a postponed deed and subject to an existing mortgage cannot defeat the mortgagee's interest by the acquisition of a tax title based on taxes accrued prior to the purchase.—Simons v. Rood, 129 Mich. 345.

¶ 333. If two men give a mortgage for money borrowed by both, and one pays it, he is entitled to recover one-half the amount of the other, and the defendant is not entitled to reduce the recovery by showing that the money was in fact borrowed for the benefit of a partnership composed of themselves and a third person.—Goodrich v. Leland, 18 Mich. 110.

§ 72. Rights and titles under deed given as mortgage.

Rights and liabilities of subgrantees, see post § 73.

Absolute deed intended as mortgage in general, see ante, II, B.

Injunction by one holding deed intended as mortgage to restrain interference with the property, see Injunctions ¶ 72.

¶ 334. The statutory provision against ejectment by mortgagees is intended for the benefit of mortgagors, and they are not obliged to insist upon it. If in mortgaging their lands they give a deed that is in form absolute, they thereby convey the right to possession.—Bennett v. Robinson, 27 Mich. 26; Jeffery v. Hursh, 42 Mich. 563; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

¶ 335. Though a deed, absolute in form, but intended as a security, will leave in the grantor the right of a mortgagor to redeem, it does not follow that he would be entitled to maintain possession until foreclosure under How. St. § 7847.—Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311.

¶ 337. The grantees in possession under a deed absolute in form, but given by way of security merely, do not stand exactly in the same position in reference to an accounting for the rents and profits as ordinary mortgagees who have taken possession by way of enforcing their security; they are agents of the grantors as well as mortgagees, and are chargeable for any failure to obtain full rental value for the premises only on the same grounds as an agent thus put in possession.—Barnard v. Jennison, 27 Mich. 230.

¶ 338. In ejectment for lands conveyed by deed absolute under a power of attorney to sell, it is error to exclude evidence that the deed was meant to have the effect, merely, of a mortgage.—Jeffrey v. Hursh, 49 Mich. 31.

¶ 339. While it is true that a deed absolute in form but given as security for a loan is in fact a mortgage, a deed is required to revest title in the grantor.—McArthur v. Robinson, 104 Mich. 540.

¶ 340. A deed absolute, given as security, does not have the effect to divest the legal title subject to an equity to compel a reconveyance, upon redemption, enforceable only in a court of equity, but the legal title remains in the mortgagor, and is susceptible of recognition and protection by a court of law.—Flynn v. Holmes, 145 Mich. 606.

¶ 341. Where the grantee in a deed absolute given as a security sells and conveys to one who has full notice of all the facts, such second grantee will take no greater interest that his grantor had in the premises, and he will hold them subject to be redeemed on payment of the amount due on the mortgage.—Wadsworth v. Loranger, II. 113; Emerson v. Atwater, 7 Mich. 12.

¶ 342. A deed given by a son to his mother as security for her indorsement of his personal note, with a land contract from the mother to the son, constituting a mortgage between the parties, continues to be such even as against one to whom the mother subsequently deeds the property.—Maginn v. Cashin, 196 Mich. 221.

¶ 343. A defendant in a bill to declare a deed a mortgage, who as a subsequent purchaser made improvements in good faith in reliance upon his title, was entitled to compensation and his rights were directed to be protected upon an accounting.—Carveth v. Winegar, 133 Mich. 34.

§ 74. Rights of mortgagee or assignee in possession.

Accountability for rents, issues and profits during possession, see post § 75.

Expenditures for repairs, upkeep and improvements, see post § 76.

Right to compensation for management of premises, see post § 77.

Rights of possession, use and enjoyment generally, see ante § 59.

Rights of assignee and mortgagee of school land certificate, see also Public Lands ¶ 241.

¶ 344. If a mortgagee has entered into possession as purchaser under defective foreclosure proceedings, the validity of his mortgage is not affected, and he can claim all the rights of a mortgagee in possession under his mortgage.—Todd v. Davis, 32 Mich. 160; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

¶ 345. A mortgagee put into possession before foreclosure by the mortgagor's consent has at least a tenancy at will which cannot be destroyed without notice.—Byers v. Byers, 65 Mich. 598.

¶ 347. A mortgagee agreed orally with the mortgagor's grantee that he should occupy one tract of the land and the grantee the other during her life. Subsequently he began a foreclosure, which the grantee treated as a repudiation of the contract, and accordingly replevied wheat raised by a tenant of the mortgagee on the latter's tract and delivered to him as rent. Held, that the foreclosure was not a repudiation of the contract, since it could not affect the grantee's equitable right to the existing possession definitely taken by her under the parol agreement.—Byers v. Byers, 65 Mich. 598.

Right to rents, issues and profits, see ante § 60.

Accounting incident to redemption, see post § 176.

Accountability of mortgagee for amount realized on other security, see post ¶ 628.

Accountability of mortgagee in possession on redemption for rents collected, see also post ¶ 827.

¶ 348. A mortgagee in possession will be charged with the rental value of the land, minus reasonable expenditures for good husbandry.—Miller v. Peter, 158 Mich. 336.

¶ 349. Where the mortgagee has been in possession of the mortgaged premises, and the mortgagor comes with his money to redeem, the mortgagee must account for the profits of the mortgaged premises, of which the crops he may have appropriated or destroyed will be considered a part.—Stevens v. Brown, W. 41.

¶ 350. In a proceeding by a wife to foreclose a mortgage on her husband's farm, she will not be required to account for the proceeds therefrom while operated by her during the husband's absence, where she could not and did not accumulate any surplus beyond what she sent him from time to time.—Stevens v. Stevens, 181 Mich. 438.

§ 76. ——Expenditures for repairs, upkeep and improvements.

¶ 351. A mortgagee in possession is not entitled to recover for expenditures for repairs which were not necessary to preserve the estate from loss or injury.—Barnard v. Paterson, 137 Mich. 633.

§ 77. ——Right to compensation for mana ment of premises.

¶ 352. Where a mortgagee is in pos sion under the mortgage for the sole p pose of collecting and using the proce from the mortgaged property in payment the mortgage debt in the absence of an ag ment is not entitled to any pay or comm sions for services for his management of property.—Gilluly v. Shumway, 144 Mi 661.

¶ 353. A mortgagee in possession is entitled to commissions for collecting re for his own benefit, there being no agreem for such compensation and no evidence fr which such an agreement might be infer —Barnard v. Paterson, 137 Mich. 633.

§ 78. Rights and liabilities under agreem for possession or purchase by m gagor after foreclosure.

Rights to possession, use and enjoyment general, see ante § 59.

¶ 354. Where in consequence of a f closure and an agreement for retention possession of one of the parcels the lien the original mortgage was extinguished the parcel released, but because of an er in the proceedings a second foreclosure was necessary, the expense of the sec foreclosure cannot be charged to the origi mortgagor remaining in possession by vir of the agreement.—Clark v. Stilson, 36 M 482.

§ 79. Rights against third persons injur land or security.

Impairment of mortgage lien by conden tion of railroad right of way over m gaged land, see Eminent Domain ¶ 51

¶ 355. A mortgagee of an undivided interest in timber land can maintain a in equity to enjoin the removal of timbe Collins v. Rea, 127 Mich. 273.

¶ 356. Where one who by its record constructive notice of a mortgage wher bought standing timber constituting a uable part of the security, and who be cutting such timber had not only actual tice of the mortgage and of the mortga insolvency, but also advice that cut would injure the mortgagee, nevertheless tered on Sunday and cut part of the tim he is liable in suit by the mortgagee, aft foreclosure sale of the mortgaged prem has failed to satisfy the amount due, for value of the timber taken.—Webber v. F sey, 100 Mich. 58.

¶ 357. Where a mortgagee brings trea for the removal of a building from the n gaged land, counting upon the foreclo and sale of the mortgaged premises, and existence of a deficit thereunder, to sa the debt, he cannot recover unless he sh a deficiency upon a regular and legal foreclosure and sale.—Taylor v. McConnell, 53 Mich. 587.

§ 80. Rights of junior mortgagees or lienors.

Junior mortgagee as purchaser of premises, see post § 81.

Payment of prior charges to protect interest, see post § 82.

Right to possession after foreclosure, see post § 83.

Effect of outstanding junior lien, see also post § 125.

Right of second mortgagee to redeem, see post ¶ 768.

Right to urge laches, junior grantee against senior mortgagee, see also Equity ¶ 209.

Limitation of action by junior mortgagee for waste impairing his security, see Limitations ¶ 259.

¶ 358. A second mortgagee takes subject to a prior unrecorded mortgage expressly referred to in, and excepted from, the deed to his mortgagor.—Baker v. Mather, 25 Mich. 51.

¶ 359. The maker and indorser of a note secured by a mortgage are not released from their obligation to pay it by the fact that it has been taken up by the holder of a second mortgage with whom they had no relations. Payment of a first mortgage by a second mortgagee makes him in equity an assignee of such first mortgage, and he may resort to all suitable remedies to enforce payment. —Mattison v. Marks, 31 Mich. 421.

¶ 360. A second mortgage on real estate given subject to a prior mortgage does not acquire priority over such first mortgage by the fact that the insolvent mortgagor, in fraud of creditors, furnished his daughter the money with which to secure the assignment to herself of such first mortgage.—Hatch v. Daugherty, 145 Mich. 569.

¶ 360a. The security of a second mortgage on real estate given subject to a prior mortgage is in no way impaired by the fact that the insolvent mortgagor, in fraud of creditors, furnished his daughter the money with which to secure the assignment to herself of the first mortgage on such property.—Hatch v. Daugherty, 145 Mich. 569.

¶ 361. A second mortgagee can take up the first mortgage, tack it to his own and foreclose for both.—Manwaring v. Powell, 40 Mich. 371.

¶ 362. A junior mortgagee on paying to the prior mortgagee the amount of the decree obtained by him upon foreclosure becomes an equitable assignee, and is entitled to be substituted as complainant (First C. C. Ch. Rule 125) although he was originally made a defendant therein, and although the decree has been enrolled.—Codd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 120.

¶ 363. A subsequent mortgagee has the right to require the assignment to himself of a prior mortgage after it has fallen due and before foreclosure, and may proceed to foreclose such prior mortgage at once, on assignment to him.—Roff v. Miller, 189 Mich. 558; McCreery v. Roff, Id.

¶ 364. A second mortgagee who has foreclosed and bid in the property succeeds to the mortgagor's rights and can make any defense against the other mortgagee that the mortgagor could have made.—Thompson v. Jarvis, 39 Mich. 689.

¶ 365. Where a subsequent mortgagee pays the redemption money of the mortgaged premises to the purchaser under the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, he does not succeed to the rights of such purchaser, but stands in the place of the prior mortgagee; the only additional right which he acquires being the right to be reimbursed what he has paid, with interest, on foreclosing his own mortgage.—Johnson v. Johnson, W. 331.

¶ 367. In the absence of peculiar and unusual equities, the holder of a second mortgage may purchase the equitable interest of the purchaser at a foreclosure sale under a prior mortgage, there being a distinction between redeeming as a matter of right from a sale under foreclosure and taking an assignment of such equitable interest, the latter being a matter of contract between the parties.—Roff v. Miller, 189 Mich. 558; McCreery v. Roff, Id.

¶ 369. The owner of premises twice mortgaged conveyed them subject to the mortgages after the first had been foreclosed. Before the time of redemption had expired the grantee redeemed, and, having obtained a quitclaim to his wife from the first mortgagee, claimed that she held in her own right under a foreclosure from which the property had not been redeemed, and that the second mortgage was cut off. Held, that as her name was only used as a cover where her husband was the real party in interest, and as the transaction was probably understood by the mortgagee as substantially a redemption, no equity was made out in the wife's favor.—Wright v. Patterson, 45 Mich. 261.

¶ 370. Taxes being a lien upon land, the second mortgagee might make payment to protect his mortgage, and by doing so would succeed to the lien upon the land, which would take precedence over the first mortgage.—Noeker v. Howry, 119 Mich. 626.

Rights to possession in general, see ante § 59.

¶ 371. A second mortgagee who has foreclosed is, as against a prior mortgagee who has not made him a party to foreclosure proceedings instituted by such prior mortgagee, entitled to possession and rents until his rights are cut off by a proper foreclosure of the earlier mortgage.—Walker v. Fisher, 117 Mich. 72.

V. LIEN AND PRIORITIES.

§ 84. Lien and its extent in general.

Equitable liens, see post § 85.
Primary and secondary properties and debtors under lien, see post § 86.

Deduction of mortgage in assigning dower interest, see Dower § 55.
Imposing lien on dower in favor of mortgagee who advanced money paid dowress for sale of her interest to mortgagor and received therefor void mortgage, see Dower § 31, ¶ 84.

¶ 372. If a mortgage debt were revived by a new and subsequent agreement, the obligation to pay, and the lien, would rest, not upon the old mortgage and note, but upon the new agreement, which alone would constitute the basis of the right to enforce payment or to foreclose, and must be pleaded in an action therefor. Evidence of such an agreement, or of subsequent dealings had in reference to reviving the lien, could not be admitted under a foreclosure bill relying upon the original note and mortgage.—McCabe v. Farnsworth, 27 Mich. 52.

Priority between mortgages of equitable titl see post § 92.

¶ 373. A decree giving to one whose mor gage on land has been released by a forge instrument a lien for $452.83 as against subsequent mortgagee whose money was e pended in putting a building on such land i justified by evidence that the present valu of the land without the building is $25 that it was more valuable when the mortgag was given, and that about $200 had bee expended on the building before the secon mortgage was given.—Saginaw Building Loan Ass'n v. Tenant, 111 Mich. 515.

¶ 374. In foreclosure proceedings coverin a homestead and other lands, the primar fund for the payment of the mortgage is th land other than the homestead.—Wolcott Tweddle, 133 Mich. 389.

¶ 375. Where a mortgagor was indebte to his son in a considerable amount, and th mortgage in question was given to secure note made by a firm of which the son was member, and indorsed by the father, and th latter subsequently agreed to pay the no upon the understanding that the son was repay any difference between the amount paid and the father's indebtedness to hi equity will not, at the instance of the mor gagor's creditors, compel the makers of th note to satisfy the mortgage, it being cle that the mortgaged property became, in pu suance of such agreement, the primary fur out of which the debt should be realized.- Webber v. Webber, 109 Mich. 147.

¶ 376. Where a husband and wife e ecuted a mortgage to secure the former note and later a second mortgage was e ecuted between the same parties but befo execution thereof the husband had qui claimed to his wife, she by joining in th mortgage mortgaged her separate property secure the payment of the husband's det As between the spouses he occupies the p sition of principal and she that of surety, th mortgage not being the primary fund as b tween them, but the primary obligation res upon the husband.—Scribner v. Malinowsl 148 Mich. 446.

¶ 377. Whether the prior mortgagee an executory land contract, whose mortga was given to secure an antecedent debt, h rights paramount to those of a subseque mortgagee under a mortgage after the a quisition of the legal title by the mortgag quære; the court being equally divided. Edwards v. McKernan, 55 Mich. 520.

¶ 378. Where, after foreclosure, the ti held by the mortgagor turns out to have be invalid, and he takes advantage of a curati act and obtains a patent from the state confirming his title, the mortgagee is entitled to resort to equity for the purpose of re-establishing his lien and satisfying his claims.—Toms v. Boyes, 50 Mich. 352.

§ 88. Priorities and marshalling of liens in general.

[Note. The priorities under the recording acts and under the equitable doctrine protecting bona fide purchasers without notice are governed by principles that are common to all conveyances and incumbrances. They are therefore treated in the topic Notice and Record of Title, which see.]

Priority between dower and husband's sole assignment of land certificate as security, see Dower § 35, ¶ 91.

Priority between dower and mortgage by husband alone given for purpose of raising alimony for wife, see Dower § 35, ¶ 92.

Persons bound by decree adjudging priority, see Former Adjudication, V, and especially ¶ 381.

Priority of mechanics' liens, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14804.

¶ 379. Where there are several notes secured by a mortgage, neither has priority over the other because maturing earlier, but all have an equal claim to be paid ratably out of the land.—Jennings v. Moore, 83 Mich. 231.

¶ 380. Delivery of a mortgage to a creditor so as to give him a prior lien over a deed cannot be compelled even though so intended, when the parties entered into an escrow agreement whereby it was agreed that the consent of a debtor must be obtained before the mortgage placed in escrow could be delivered.—Belding Sav. Bank v. Moore, 118 Mich. 150.

¶ 381. Where a mortgagee, with knowledge of a subsequent mortgage on a part of the premises mortgaged to him, releases a part or the whole of the premises not covered by the subsequent mortgage, and the remaining property is not sufficient to pay both, equity will postpone the payment of the first mortgage out of the proceeds of a sale of the remaining property to the extent of the injury done the subsequent mortgagee by the release.—James v. Brown, 11 Mich. 25.

¶ 382. The English doctrine of tacking securities is not recognized in Michigan.—Wing v. McDowell, W. 175; Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380.

¶ 383. Indorsers of corporate obligations who took for security a mortgage covering real and personal property, and who realized on the personalty, and who took for further security at a later time a bond of another issue secured by a prior mortgage of the same land after they had denied that they knew of the prior mortgage, cannot claim to pro rate in the foreclosure of the prior mortgage, where it is evident that they did not rely on it as security and parted with nothing on the strength of it, and that it was not intended to cover the debt for which they indorsed.—Woodin v. Sparta Furniture Co., 59 Mich. 58.

¶ 384. Equity will not permit beneficiaries under a later mortgage to obtain priority over the beneficiaries under a prior mortgage merely because their acceptance of certain conditions was made later than the acceptance of the terms of the later mortgage by the beneficiaries thereunder, particularly where the later mortgage was by its terms made subject to the conditions of the prior mortgage, and the amount of indebtedness given priority was known.—Gillam v. Barnes, 123 Mich. 119.

¶ 385. A mortgage given in consideration of the mortgagor's release from liability as endorser on his son's notes, and to secure the substituted unendorsed notes of the son, will not lose its priority over a later mortgage, merely because an insolvent beneficiary in the first mortgage, which beneficiary was in the hands of a receiver, had negotiated the indorsed notes and was unable to make immediate surrender of all of them, and where the return of all the notes was not made a condition precedent to the mortgage taking effect and it was agreed that they should be taken care of by the receiver and returned to the mortgagor; but the decree of foreclosure should make provision for the surrender and return of the notes to the mortgagor.—Gillam v. Barnes, 123 Mich. 119.

¶ 386. Where two mortgages on the same property have the same date, the fact that the one recorded last was acknowledged first does not show that it was meant to be the first security.—Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 Mich. 477.

¶ 387. Of two mortgages of even date, one by agreement was to have priority over the other, the first mortgagee agreeing to pay the interest and principal of the second mortgage in case the common mortgagor failed to do so; but by the conduct of the second mortgagee the first mortgage was deprived of all the benefit of his priority. Upon foreclosure of the first mortgage it was held that the proceeds of sale should be divided between the two mortgagees in a certain proportion, the first mortgagee to be released from his suretyship.—Grunert v. Becker, 100 Mich. 50.

See also post ¶ 708.

Priority of purchase money mortgage over dower, see Dower § 34.

¶ 388. The purchase money being the first lien on land held under a land-contract, a mortgage given as security for money advanced to pay such purchase price takes precedence of a prior recorded mortgage of said property.—Balen v. Mercier, 75 Mich. 42.

§ 92. ——Mortgages of equitable title.

Equitable mortgages, see ante, II, C.

¶ 389. Where there were two mortgages of an equitable title to lands, that which was prior in time was allowed to prevail; nor would a subsequent obtaining of the legal title in right of another and not in one's own right, or with knowledge of the prior mortgage, aid the holder of the other.—Wing v. McDowell, W. 175.

§ 93. Priorities between different debts or obligations under same mortgage.

See also ante ¶ 379.

Priority of assignee of part of mortgage debt over part held by his assignor, see also post ¶ 428.

Lien and priorities where several notes are secured by same mortgage, see Foreclosure ¶ 501.

¶ 390. A corporation executed a trust mortgage to secure bonds for $12,000, or such part thereof as it should borrow, and bonds were issued for about $6,500 borrowed. To a foreclosure of said mortgage parties whom a second mortgage on the same pr erty had been given to secure them from l bility as indorsers of the corporation's n for $10,000 were made parties as subsequ incumbrancers, and pending foreclosure bond for $5,500 was delivered to them. He upon a cross-bill filed by such indorsers, t the corporation officers had no power to is this bond of which the effect was to les the security of the original bondholders, secure indorsers upon a note not intended be secured by bonds when given; and t the lien of such indorsers was subordin to that of the original bondholders.—Woo v. Sparta Furniture Co., 59 Mich. 58.

¶ 392. Execution creditors of a mortga are entitled to priority over the mortga as to moneys advanced by the latter s sequent to their levies.—Dummer v. Smed 110 Mich. 466.

¶ 393. A second mortgagee is entitled a lien for money advanced to pay delinqu interest upon the prior mortgage in orde prevent foreclosure, superior to that of c itors under levies subsequent to the mortg but prior to the payment.—Dummer v. Sm ley, 110 Mich. 466.

¶ 394. A mortgage given to secure porate bonds which as the mortgagee k had never been sold, but were turned o to him without authority as security for private debts of the company's treasurer, postponed to a subsequent levy.—McKee Grand Rapids & R. L. S. R. Co., 41 M 274.

¶ 395. It seems that a mortgagee need resort to another mortgage on foreign la to relieve judgment creditors of the m gagor, who have levied upon all of the p erty covered by the mortgage.—Farwell Bigelow, 112 Mich. 285.

Estoppel or waiver of priority, see post § 96.
Disability of person giving mortgage to be sold for fraudulent purpose to assert fraud as defense to mortgage in hands of bona fide purchaser, see Notice and Record of Title, I.
Subordination of fraudulent taker or mortgagee to bona flue taker without notice, see Notice and Record of Title, I.

¶ 396. Anything done by a first mortgagee to the prejudice of a second, with a knowledge of the second mortgage, should, to the extent of such injury, postpone the first to the second mortgage.—Bailey v. Gould, W. 478; James v. Brown, 11 Mich. 25.

¶ 397. A mortgage which omitted certain property by mistake is prior to one which the mortgagee's agent, entrusted to effect a correction of the mistake, took to himself by including all of the property and cancelling the original mortgage note, where he had no authority to do so and his offer to give his principal an interest in the mortgage taken by himself was declined.—Hunt v. Hunt, 38 Mich. 161.

¶ 398. A vendee of land gave to the vendor a purchase-money mortgage before delivery of the deed to him, and afterwards, at the time the deed was actually delivered, he mortgaged the premises to a third person in whose presence the delivery was made and who had no notice of the prior mortgage. Held, that the second mortgagee was entitled to priority.—Heffron v. Flanigan, 37 Mich. 274.

¶ 399. Where one mortgage was substituted for another, and by a corrupt arrangement with the mortgagor, a third person, knowing the facts, procured and took advantage of an interval between the discharge of the original mortgage and the recording of the substitute to record a mortgage which he obtained meanwhile for himself, and did this with the fraudulent purpose of securing priority, his mortgage was postponed to the other.—Waldo v. Richmond, 40 Mich. 380.

¶ 400. The parties to a mortgage agreed that a new one should be substituted with a clear title. Upon the same day on which this was done, and without the knowledge of the mortgagees, another mortgage was given to the mortgagor's father-in-law, who had advanced considerable money to the mortgagor's wife without asking repayment. The testimony indicated that the mortgage was made to him without his participation, and with the fraudulent purpose of giving it priority. Held, that it must be postponed to the other mortgage, since even if he were an honest mortgagee, his mortgage, if made first, was on premises already encumbered, and he had no equities which would make it anything but a second mortgage; and if the original mortgage was exchanged under a false pretense that the title was to be cleared, he was in no position to object to the restoration of the old security in behalf of the original mortgagees.—Eggeman v. Eggeman, 37 Mich. 436.

¶ 401. The grantee of a mortgagor quitclaimed to him in satisfaction of his foreclosure decree, and the mortgagor then recorded a later mortgage from the grantee to himself before the quitclaim deed could be recorded. Held, that the later mortgage should be set aside and the quitclaim deed permitted to stand by reason of the fraud.—Corey v. Alderman, 46 Mich. 540.

§ 96. Estoppels or waiver of priority.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 402. Where a mortgage is expressly made subject to prior mortgages their validity cannot be denied by the mortgagor or his assignee in bankruptcy.—Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734, 24 L. ed. 136.

§ 97. Presumption and evidence of priorities.

Presumption as to equality of interest of several co-mortgagees, see ante ¶ 158.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 404. Priority of one note over another secured by a mortgage cannot be shown by parol.—Jennings v. Moore, 83 Mich. 231.

¶ 405. Where a mortgagor testifies in general terms that he gave the mortgage at a specified time, and is not questioned as to the particulars of delivery, this testimony must be regarded as showing delivery at that time.—Matteson v. Blackmer, 46 Mich. 393.

¶ 406. A complainant in foreclosure desired to show that the mortgage held by him was delivered and recorded before another one of previous date held by a person who had died before the suit was begun; and he sought to show it by the testimony of a witness who claimed the decedent had told him his mortgage was neither acknowledged nor delivered until the other was put on record. The witness had lived five or six miles from decedent, and was not shown to have been his confidant. Complainant had a mortgage on the lands of the witness. Held, a suspicious circumstance that he had never mentioned his conversation with decedent in the latter's lifetime, nor until after complainant's suit had been pending seven years, and until complainant had called upon him, just before he was sworn, to know if he was possessed of valuable information.—Matteson v. Blackmer, 46 Mich. 393.

¶ 407. A claim of priority set up by a foreclosure defendant in behalf of a mortgage on the same premises and of the same date with the one in suit, but not recorded until two days later, was held not to be sustained by the proofs.—Clark v. Johnson, 32 Mich. 203.

VI. ASSIGNMENT OR TRANSFER OF DEBT, LIEN, OR INTEREST OF MORTGAGEE.

Assignability as personalty of deed taken as mortgage, see also Assignments ¶ 6.

¶ 408. A creditor named in a trust mortgage as one to be secured thereby if certain conditions were met, among them the substitution of new notes for outstanding indebtedness so as to consolidate it, having refused to accept the provisions of the mortgage has no interest therein which may be the subject of assignment.—Gillam v. Barnes, 123 Mich. 119; per Moore, J., others concurring in the result.

§ 99. Requisites, mode and sufficiency.

Deed of conveyance as an assignment, see post § 100.
Necessity and sufficiency of delivery, see post § 101.
Necessity and sufficiency of notice to mortgagor, see post § 102.
Right and authority to assign and receive assignment, see post § 105.
Formal requisites of execution, see Execution of Instruments.
Necessity for recordation of assignment and effect of failure to record, see Notice and Record of Title, II, A.
Necessity that assignment or transfer of mortgage be in writing, see Frauds, Statute of, § 47.
Effect of recording assignment of mortgage on right to pay mortgagee, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11724.

¶ 409. An assignment of a mortgage is not a conveyance of real estate and may be made without executing a deed or other instrument in writing where the statute does not require the transfer to be so made.—Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; Young v. McKee, 13 Mich. 552.

¶ 410. Mortgages are chattel interests, and may be transferred without writing.—Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45.

¶ 411. A mortgagee's rights may be transferred either by a legal or by an equitable assignment or conveyance.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

¶ 412. The right of a mortgagee may be transferred either by a legal or an equitable assignment.—Densmore v. Savage, 110 Mich. 27.

¶ 413. An assignment of a mortgage, though not witnessed, or with but one witness, is competent proof as well in law as equity to show a transfer of the entire interest of the mortgagee in the mortgage.—Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581.

¶ 414. The acknowledgment of an assignment of a mortgage is no part of the assignment.—Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

¶ 415. The assignee of a mortgage is entitled, if he is the real owner, to demand and receive payment on the notes secured by it whether indorsed or not, and the formal assignment, duly recorded and acknowledged, is the best possible evidence of ownership.—Pease v. Warren, 29 Mich. 9.

¶ 416. An assignee of a mortgage is not estopped from foreclosing by the act of his agent in withholding the assignment from record for the purpose of escaping taxation.—Terry v. Durand Land Co., 112 Mich. 665.

¶ 417. Where an assignment of a mortgage was procured by threatening the mortgagee, a timid and ignorant man, with a prosecution for slander, it was held to be without consideration, and a reassignment was decreed.—Tate v. Whitney, H. 145.

§ 100. ——Deed of conveyance as an assignment.

¶ 418. A deed by a mortgagee of the land covered by the mortgage may operate as an assignment.—Niles v. Ransford, 1 Mich. 338; Thayer v. McGee, 20 Mich. 195.

¶ 419. A deed to defendant from her mother of premises to which the mother held title by a deed which was in fact a mortgage given to secure the mother as indorser on the grantor's note given to defendant for a loan, held to be an assignment of such security.—Maginn v. Cashin, 196 Mich. 221.

§ 101. ——Necessity and sufficiency of delivery.

Delivery effected through escrow, see Escrows.

Sufficiency of delivery of instruments in general, see Execution of Instruments, III.

¶ 420. A mortgage left with a third party, to be delivered when a prior mortgage had been discharged and other conditions performed, was assigned by the mortgagee named in it, to the depositary, before they had been fulfilled. It was afterward assigned to another party before it fell due, and the assignee sought to foreclose it. Held, that there had been no delivery.—Cressinger v. Dessenburg, 42 Mich. 580.

¶ 421. A man executed an assignment of a mortgage security held by him in order that he might use it, if necessary, to secure himself and personal creditors in case of the failure of a manufacturing concern in which he was interested; but he never did use it, and he continued to collect money on it as his own, and used the money for his own purposes. Held, that this did not show that any effective assignment was intended or made out.—Hutton v. Cuthbert, 51 Mich. 229.

¶ 422. Until actual or constructive notice of assignment, the mortgagor is entitled to deal with the mortgagee or his personal representative on the supposition that no transfer has been made (unless the mortgage was given to secure negotiable paper and was transferred before due), and the assignee will be bound by such dealings.—Jones v. Smith, 22 Mich. 360.

¶ 423. Comp. L. § 4235 (How. St. § 5687, providing that recording the assignment of a mortgage shall not be such notice of the assignment as to invalidate payments made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, applies where the payment, though not actually made by the mortgagor, is so made as to release him from liability, as by an arrangement between all parties that he should deed the land to the person making the payment.—Goodale v. Patterson, 51 Mich. 532.

Assignment of part of debt, see post § 104.

¶ 424. The assignment of a debt secured by a mortgage carries with it the mortgage, as an incident to the debt, although there is no mention made of the mortgage in the assignment.—Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

¶ 425. Anything which transfers the debt (though by parol or mere delivery) transfers the mortgage with it.—Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380.

¶ 426. An equitable assignee of a debt secured by mortgage is entitled to have the mortgage follow the debt.—Briggs v. Hannowald, 35 Mich. 474.

¶ 427. The assignment of a part of a debt, or of one of several notes secured by a mortgage, carries with it a proportional interest in the mortgage unless it is otherwise agreed between the parties at the time.—Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251.

¶ 428. Where a mortgagee assigns part of a mortgage debt, or one of several notes secured by a mortgage, the law gives the assignee no priority of payment where there is no understanding or agreement to that effect; but the assignor may, if he sees fit, give the assignee such priority.—Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251.

¶ 429. The validity of an assignment of a mortgage is not impaired by a showing, merely, that the assignor's interest was but a life estate, if it does not also appear that the transfer operated to diminish the bulk of the estate at the death of the life tenant.—Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 Mich. 446.

¶ 430. A power of attorney to sell and convey lands and to borrow money by mortgage upon lands gives the attorney no authority to assign a mortgage, certainly not to assign to himself.—Post v. Springsted, 49 Mich. 90.

¶ 431. To sustain a foreclosure in equity by an assignee of a mortgage it need not be shown that the mortgagee's agent who assigned the mortgage had written authority, delivery by the agent in pursuance of the mortgagee's instructions being sufficient to transfer title to the mortgage and to enable complainant to foreclose in equity.—Moreland v. Houghton, 94 Mich. 548.

¶ 432. A wife's dower and homestead rights in land mortgaged by her husband entitle her not only to redeem from statutory foreclosure sale, but to receive, on paying the amount bid with interest, an assignment of the mortgage.—Moore v. Smith, 95 Mich. 71.

¶ 433. In a suit by the treasurer of the state of New Jersey to foreclose a mortgage of Michigan land which mortgage had been assigned to his predecessor in office and to his successors as a guaranty to the policyholders of the mortgagee, a New Jersey insurance company, the mortgagors cannot raise the question whether there is or is not a statute in New Jersey authorizing the securing of policyholders in the manner provided in the assignment. None by those who are interested in the distribution of the money can raise that question.—Gray v. Waldron, 101 Mich. 612.

¶ 433a. Where one who holds a deed of lands as security for the payment of a note transfers the note, he retains no further interest in the lands beyond the naked trust, which is subservient to the debt; and such transfer being to a national bank, the latter, if it could lawfully take such a security, would become in legal effect mortgagee, and if not, then the deed would cease to be operative for any purpose, and the grantee would be bound to reconvey when required.—Briggs v. Hannowald, 35 Mich. 474.

Effect of assignment of mortgage on pending foreclosure, see Foreclosure § 14.

¶ 436. The assignment of a mortgage includes and carries with it the notes to which it is collateral.—Loveridge v. Shurtz, 111 Mich. 618.

¶ 437. An assignment of the mortgage without the debt is a mere nullity.—Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380.

¶ 438. The assignment of a mortgage that appoints the assignee attorney, with full authority to have, use and take all lawful ways and means, in his assignor's name or otherwise, for the recovery of the money due thereon, transfers to such assignee all of the assignor's collateral rights, including a claim against a previous assignor to himself, for a breach of the covenant that such previous assignor had lawful authority to transfer.—Briggs v. Hannowald, 35 Mich. 474.

¶ 439. An assignment of a mortgage does not transfer undelivered collateral securities unless the parties so intend and a consideration is paid.—Fletcher v. Carpenter, 37 Mich. 412.

¶ 440. Assignments of mortgages by trustees are at most only nominal, and no assignment is necessary of a mortgage note payable to bearer.—Laprad v. Sherwood, 79 Mich. 520.

¶ 441. An assignee of a mortgage given to secure the payment of a negotiable note is entitled to the same protection that he would have as assignee of the note without the mortgage.—Helmer v. Krolick, 36 Mich. 371.

¶ 442. The assignee of a mortgage cannot at law sue in his own name upon the negotiable notes securing it, unless they are indorsed to him.—Pease v. Warren, 29 Mich. 9.

¶ 443. Where the assignee of certain notes secured by mortgage is induced to postpone foreclosure by representations made by an assignee of other notes maturing earlier and also secured by the mortgage, he does not become entitled to advantages, if any, over the latter, where he has not been damaged by relying on his statements.—Burhans v. Mitchell, 42 Mich. 417.

¶ 444. Where the vestry of a church duly authorized has borrowed money and given its note therefor secured by a trust deed of its rectory, it is liable for any deficiency upon foreclosure, and the fact that a new note, not authorized, has been given for the debt does not relieve the church from such liability to an assignee of the mortgage, since, if the note is void, equity will treat the transaction as an assignment of the debt and security.—Miller v. Childs, 120 Mich. 639.

¶ 445. The assignment of a mortgage, without the debt which it is given to secure, carries no beneficial interest in the mortgage to the assignee, who would hold it subject to the will and disposal of the creditor.—Bailey v. Gould, W. 478.

¶ 446. Where a deed was given as a mortgage to secure the grantee as indorser on the grantor's note with a return contract of sale and defeasance of the premises by the grantee to the grantor for the amount of the note, and the grantee thereafter conveyed the premises for a nominal consideration to the holder of the note, held that such holder as assignee of the mortgage could not foreclose same by merely declaring the contract forfeited.—Maginn v. Cashin, 196 Mich. 221.

Measure of damages for fraud in misrepresenting amount to accrue on mortgage assigned, see Damages § 123.

Invalidity of assignment of mortgage as defense against assignee bringing foreclosure, see Foreclosure ¶ 38.

¶ 447. The assignee of a mortgage takes it subject to all equities existing between the parties to it at the time of the assignment.—Russell v. Waite, W. 31; Dutton v. Ives, 5 Mich. 515; Nichols v. Lee, 10 Mich. 526; Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 Mich. 395.

¶ 448. The assignee of a past-due note and mortgage takes it subject to any perfected equitable rights existing in the mortgagor to set off claims against it, even though he has no actual notice of such claims. His position is precisely that of his assignor.—McKenna v. Kirkwood, 50 Mich. 544.

¶ 449. The bona fide assignee of a mortgage, not charged in the bill with knowledge of the complainant's equities against the assignor in respect to the mortgage, will not be held affected with those equities.—Cicotte v. Gagniere, 2 Mich. 381.

¶ 450. The assignee does not take the mortgage subject to any equities which any third person may have against the mortgagor. Where he has purchased the mortgage in good faith, it is not subject in his hands to any equities between the mortgagor and his grantor, growing out of the fraud of the mortgagor in procuring the title to the land.—Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 Mich. 395.

¶ 451. Where a mortgage was given accompanying a negotiable promissory note, and they were assigned before due to a bona fide indorsee, held that he was not affected by any equities existing between the original parties.—Reeves v. Scully, W. 248; Dutton v. Ives, 5 Mich. 515.

¶ 452. A second assignee, to whom the note and the mortgage are sold and assigned by the mortgagee with notice of the guaranty, has the right to pay the balance due the first assignees, and, on receiving an assignment from them of the securities, will be subrogated to their rights as a bona fide holder to the amount paid, but no further.—Anderson v. Northern Nat. Bank, 98 Mich. 543.

¶ 453. The purchaser of a promissory note before due, in good faith, for a full consideration, and in reliance upon the validity of a trust mortgage as it then read, given to secure the payment of said note and of other indebtedness of the mortgagor, with a preference in favor of said note, cannot be deprived of such priority by the reformation of the mortgage so as to eliminate all preferences therefrom.—Dunham v. Steele Packing & Provision Co., 100 Mich. 75.

¶ 454. One who takes an assignment of a mortgage securing a series of notes of which the first has matured and is unpaid is put upon the inquiry and takes subject to equities between the mortgagor and mortgagee as to all of the notes.—Abele v. McGuigan, 78 Mich. 415.

¶ 455. An assignment of a mortgage to a third person, without notice of a prior mortgage, cannot give the assignee a priority which his assignor did not have.—Wing v. McDowell, W. 175.

¶ 456. Where a mortgage has been assigned any equities between the assignee and the mortgagor affect the mortgage in the hands of any subsequent assignee.—Nichols v. Lee, 10 Mich. 526.

¶ 457. Where a non-negotiable bond has been given secured by a mortgage, its assignment before maturity is made subject to equities existing between the parties.—Reeves v. Scully, W. 248.

¶ 458. At the time of conveying land and taking back a mortgage for the price with a promise to pay contained in the mortgage but without a note the vendor represented the land to be free from all encumbrances, though he knew of two prior mortgages. In foreclosure of the purchase-money mortgage by a bona fide assignee, held, that such mortgage was subject to all equities between mortgagor and mortgagee.—Cooley v. Harris, 92 Mich. 126.

¶ 459. In foreclosure by assignee of the mortgage against the mortgagor, it is no defense that the assignment was made in payment of a gaming debt due the assignee from the assignor.—Reed v. Bond, 96 Mich. 134.

¶ 460. Where a mortgagee, under a pretended claim of right, wrongfully got possession of the securities from the bailee of his assignee, and then received payment on the mortgage from the grantee of the equity of redemption, it was held that the mortgagor, who had paid nothing, had no equities as against the assignee.—Chase v. Brown, 32 Mich. 225.

¶ 461. An assignee of a renewal mortgage securing non-negotiable paper acquires no valid claim against the mortgagor, where, without the latter's knowledge, the original mortgage had been previously transferred to a third person, in whose hands it is still outstanding.—Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562.

¶ 462. When mortgaged lands which had been sold by the mortgagor in parcels were subject to two mortgages, and the proceeds of the last parcel sold were applied upon the first of the mortgages, and as a part of the same arrangement the mortgagee in the second, who was mortgagor in the first and under obligations to pay it, assigned the second to a party who was to hold it for the protection of the fee against another specified claim, but this party afterwards sold it for value to one who took it in good faith, held, that under the rule that the proceeds must be applied to the satisfaction of the mortgage in the inverse order of alienation the mortgage was to be deemed satisfied in the first arrangement; and the second assignment, not being with consent of the owner of the fee, the assignee took nothing thereby.—McVeigh v. Sherwood, 47 Mich. 545.

¶ 463. Whether assignee of a mortgage seeking foreclosure is or is not a bona fide purchaser is not material where defenses of alteration since execution and partial failure of consideration are not sustained by evidence.—Detroit Sav. Bank v. Galvin, 99 Mich. 55.

¶ 463a. The fact that a junior mortgagee took in good faith after an earlier mortgage had been apparently discharged by a forged discharge does not avail the junior mortgagee.—Keller v. Hannah, 52 Mich. 535.

¶ 463b. A forged mortgage is not valid in the hands even of a bona fide holder unless he came into possession of it under circumstances creating an equity in his favor against the nominal mortgagor.—Camp v. Carpenter, 52 Mich. 375.

§ 108. ——Notice of equities and defenses.

Effect of actual notice or knowledge on rights of purchaser in general, see Notice and Record of Title, I, A.

Recitals, possession or other facts calling for inquiry as to status of record title, see Notice and Record of Title, I, B.

¶ 464. Nondelivery of the securities with the assignment of a mortgage should put a purchaser upon inquiry as to whether the nominal assignee holds the evidences of title before he deals with him as owner.—Fletcher v. Carpenter, 37 Mich. 412.

¶ 465. As a general rule an assignee of a mortgage takes the instrument subject to existing equities, and no purchaser can safely rely on inquiry made of his assignor alone, but if inquiry becomes necessary resort must usually be had to the debtor also. —Cooper v. Smith, 75 Mich. 247.

¶ 466. Where it is understood between a mortgagor and mortgagees that the mortgagor shall convey to such person as one of the mortgagees shall designate, an assignment by the other mortgagee will not affect a purchaser who, in good faith, takes conveyance from the mortgagor, without notice or knowledge of such assignment; the assignee is subject to the same equities as the assignor, and if the assignor afterwards gives a discharge of the mortgage to the purchaser the latter is entitled to rega it as a regular and valid release thereof. Goodale v. Patterson, 51 Mich. 532.

¶ 467. Where a mortgage was given secure a non-negotiable bond, any subseque assignee of the mortgage is bound to ta notice—and is therefore conclusively pr sumed to have notice—of every defect the right of the mortgagee as between t mortgagee and mortgagor, and such assign succeeds only to the mortgagee's rights. Terry v. Tuttle, 24 Mich. 206.

¶ 468. A. gave to B. a note, not neg tiable, secured by a mortgage, as securi for the performance of an agreement. took an assignment of the mortgage a attempted to foreclose. Held, that C. w chargeable with notice of the equities t tween A. and B., and that A., on perfor ing the agreement, could maintain agai C. a cross-suit for the cancellation of t note and mortgage.—Humphrey v. Bec with, 48 Mich. 151.

¶ 469. Facts communicated to the seco assignee at the time of the assignmer amounting to notice of the guaranty, are effective as if the guaranty had appear on the face of the mortgage.—Anderson Northern Nat. Bank, 98 Mich. 543.

¶ 470. The covenant in an assignment mortgage that the assignor has good rig and lawful authority to grant, bargain a sell the same, means that he has author to convey it as a valid, existing lien on t land according to its terms; and this co nant is broken by a previous secret relea of much of the security, destroying or i pairing the validity of the mortgage. Th the assignment was made in good faith no defense.—Byles v. Lawrence, 35 Mich. 4

¶ 471. It is no defense against an acti for a breach of a covenant as to validity a mortgage assigned that the defendant act in good faith in making the contract and referring the other party to sources of formation as to securities involved in t transaction.—Byles v. Lawrence, 35 Mi 458.

§ 110. Assignment as indemnity or secur and rights thereunder.

General law of pledge, see Pledges.

Parol evidence that assignment was for curity, see Evidence § 180.

Assignment of lease as security, see La lord and Tenant § 84.

¶ 472. An assignment of a mortgage or the right to a particular payment descrit therein, may be shown not to be absolute, l to have been designed as a security.—Hill

Goodrich, 39 Mich. 439; Hyler v. Nolan, 45 Mich. 357.

¶ 473. An assignment of a mortgage of lands for the purpose of securing the assignor's debt constitutes a mortgage of a mortgage.—Graydon v. Church, 7 Mich. 36; Wallace v. Finnegan, 14 Mich. 170.

¶ 474. A transfer of a mortgage to furnish security to the assignees for their indorsements of the assignor's notes must be regarded as carrying a beneficial interest to the assignee even though it does not in terms purport to convey any right in or title to the debt or notes.—Moreland v. Houghton, 94 Mich. 548.

¶ 475. Where complainant, a married woman, made an unconditional assignment of a mortgage to defendant, and delivered it to her husband, who delivered it over to defendant, and the latter gave the husband a receipt stating that the mortgage was received of the husband as collateral security for a debt owing by him to defendant, and there was no evidence of any negotiations between complainant and defendant, or of any understanding on her part that the transfer of the mortgage was to be upon any condition, or of any instructions by her in reference to it, it was held that the court could not say, from these facts, that the assignment was intended by complainant as security only, and not to be absolutely passed to defendant.—Durfee v. McClurg, 6 Mich. 223.

¶ 476. Where it is doubtful whether an assignment of a mortgage is a sale of the security or only a mortgage of it, if the consideration was much less than the amount due upon it, the court will incline to consider it a mortgage.—McKinney v. Miller, 19 Mich. 142.

¶ 477. One who has hypothecated a mortgage may at any time recall it and require a retransfer upon satisfying the secured debt.—Cooper v. Smith, 75 Mich. 247.

¶ 478. Where one pays a mortgage as the agent and with the funds of the mortgagor, and instead of having it discharged causes it to be assigned as security for a debt owing by himself, the assignee cannot hold the mortgage as against the mortgagor or his heirs.—Nichols v. Lee, 10 Mich. 526.

¶ 479. The cost to which the assignee of a second mortgage is put to redeem from the foreclosure of the first is a necessary outlay in aid of the assigned security, and the assignee is entitled to hold the assignment as security for it, but not to make it a personal charge against the assignor.—Wendell v. Highstone, 52 Mich. 552.

¶ 480. Where the owner of a mortgage on which nothing was to become due for several years assigned the mortgage to secure a debt of his own to an amount less than the mortgage, and the assignment was upon condition that if the assignor could pay his indebtedness to the assignee on or before the first day of May following, then the assignment was to be void, but if not, and the assignee should collect the moneys, he should, after retaining the amount of his debt, interest and charges, pay over the surplus to the assignor, held, that the assignor, or those claiming under him, would be entitled to this surplus from the assignee or any person claiming through him, at whatever period in the future it might be collected.—Graydon v. Church, 7 Mich. 36, overruling Graydon v. Church, 4 Mich. 646.

¶ 481. Where a subsequent assignee of the mortgage, which was assigned as security, took a deed of the mortgaged premises from the original mortgagor to himself, this deed had the effect to foreclose the mortgage as to the mortgagor so deeding; the land now represented the mortgage, and the mortgagor of the mortgage, or one claiming under him, might file his bill in chancery and have decree that the amount of the mortgage, less the sum it was assigned to secure, be paid to him, and in default thereof the premises be sold to satisfy, first the sum the mortgage was assigned to secure, and next to pay him the amount of the mortgage less such sum.—Graydon v. Church, 7 Mich. 36, overruling Graydon v. Church, 4 Mich. 646.

¶ 482. Where a mortgage was assigned as security and later the assignees took a deed from the mortgagor and assumed possession under such deed, and the original mortgagee having been remiss in asserting his rights, whereby he might have induced his assignees to treat the property as their own, discharged of the lien of the mortgage, he was held not entitled to an account of the rents and profits of the premises as against defendants.—Graydon v. Church, 7 Mich. 36.

¶ 483. Where a note and a mortgage, given to secure the payment of part of the purchase price of a tract of pine land, are assigned as collateral security for a lesser debt, without notice to the assignees of a guaranty by the mortgagee that the land will cut a certain amount of timber, and of his agreement to refund a stated sum per thousand feet for all shortage, the assignees will be protected as bona fide holders of the securities, against any claim under the guaranty, to the amount of their debt only.—Anderson v. Northern Nat. Bank, 98 Mich. 543.

¶ 484. A manufacturer made a collusive contract with a contractor, who was under agreement to build a power plant for a railway, by which the former, with a purpose to defraud the railway, agreed to rebate to the latter a certain amount from the stated price for engines supplied the power plant. The manufacturer took certain bonds secured by the trust mortgage as security for the engines furnished. Held, that by its fraud the manufacturer did not lose the right to participate in the security of the mortgage to the extent of what was equitably due it.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Detroit, F. & S. Ry., 159 Mich. 442.

VII. TRANSFER OF MORTGAGOR'S TITLE OR ESTATE, AND ASSUMPTION OF DEBT.

Novation by assumption of mortgage debt, see Novation § 1.

¶ 485. Where one joint tenant of mortgaged premises assigned his equitable interest to the other tenant, and a contract was entered into providing that, in consideration of such assignment, the other tenant should plat and market the property, pay the indebtedness to the mortgagee, pay the expenses of platting the property and marketing it, deduct the assignor's indebtedness to the assignee out of the assignor's share of the property and that the balance should be equally divided, held that it was the intention of the assignor in executing the assignment to convert the incumbered title interest into a contract right for participation in the profits.—Detroit Cavalry v. Ranney, 193 Mich. 472.

¶ 486. Where a part of mortgaged premises is conveyed by the mortgagor subject to the payment of the whole of the mortgage, that part becomes the preliminary fund for its satisfaction, and the land retained by the mortgagor becomes the secondary fund.—Mason v. Payne, W. 459; Berry v. Whitney, 40 Mich. 65; Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Soule, 51 Mich. 312.

¶ 488. In a suit by an assignee of mortgagee and vendor to foreclose m gages and land contracts a purchaser of mortgaged tract under an agreement by mortgagor to pay the mortgage is enti to have the debt enforced against the ot mortgages and land contracts prior to but cannot require the complainant to haust all personal remedies against all o mortgagors and vendors.—Holliday v. Sn 129 Mich. 494.

¶ 489. Where the holder of a mortg released a note that was given with it, serving at the same time his right to f close the mortgage on the land, and a ond mortgagee, with notice of the first m gage, had, prior to the release, foreclosed own mortgage at law, and purchased premises, the latter was held to stand in place of a purchaser of the equity of demption, subject to the first mortgage, the premises in his hands, as such purch with notice, to be the primary fund for payment of the first mortgage.—Bailey Gould, W. 478.

B. LIABILITY OF GRANTEE; CO NANTS TO ASSUME DEBT.

Purchase "subject to mortgage," see § 114.
Covenant to assume debt, see post § 115.
Covenants or agreements by strangers mortgage, see post § 116.
Nature of assumed liability, see post § 11
Estoppel of purchaser to contest mortg see post § 118.
Suits to establish or enforce liability, post § 119.
Subrogation of mortgagee to rights of m gagor against assuming grantee, see § 120.
Presumptions and evidence, see post § 12
Assignment or transfer of lien or interes mortgagee, see ante, VI.
Personal liability of mortgagor's gra after assumption of debt, see Foreclo ¶¶ 697-699.

¶ 490. The acceptance by a grantee deed conveying lands subject to a spec mortgage, and providing that he shall ass and pay the mortgage, binds him, and provision inures to the benefit of the m gagee, who may enforce it in equity.—C ford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354; Mille Thompson, 34 Mich. 10; Taylor v. Whitn 35 Mich. 97; Carley v. Fox, 38 Mich. Unger v. Smith, 44 Mich. 22.

¶ 491. When defendants accept a conveying premises to themselves subje certain specified incumbrances, with an press provision in the deed that they assume and pay the same, they are b as effectually as though they had signed the instrument; after they accept the deed the provision becomes an agreement on their part to assume and pay, and a subsequent conveyance by them of the property to other parties does not operate to relieve them of the obligation.—Kollen v. Sooy, 172 Mich. 214.

¶ 492. An agreement made with a grantor of realty to assume and pay incumbrances inures to the benefit of one having a mortgage upon it; the mortgagee may treat both the buyer and the seller as his debtors and enforce the agreement in a bill of foreclosure. —Kollen v. Sooy, 172 Mich. 214.

¶ 493. A provision in a deed of mortgaged land, warranting the premises except as to the mortgage, which the grantee "assumes," renders the grantee personally liable for the mortgage debt.—Jehle v. Brooks, 112 Mich. 131.

¶ 494. A creditor attached lands subject to a mortgage, which mortgage he afterwards agreed to purchase, and on appeal from a decree holding him liable for any deficiency on foreclosure sale, it was held that in order to hold him his contract must have been to pay the mortgage debt.—Winsor v. Ludington, 77 Mich. 215.

¶ 495. A purchaser of real property subject to a mortgage does not ratify a clause assuming the payment of the mortgage, inserted in his deed by fraud or mistake, by offering for the purpose of procuring an extension of time, to pay an instalment due on the mortgage, and the interest, after he has recorded an instrument repudiating the assumption clause.—Bogart v. Phillips, 112 Mich. 697.

¶ 496. A grantee purchasing mortgaged premises subject to the encumbrance does not become personally responsible for the debt, and only loses the premises in case of foreclosure; but a grantee who assumes the encumbrance is presumably responsible for the debt.—Winans v. Wilkie, 41 Mich. 264.

¶ 497. Whether on mortgage foreclosure a personal liability can be enforced against one who is not a party to the mortgage but has bought the land subject thereto, and without making anything more than a parol agreement with the grantor to pay it, quære. —Gage v. Jenkinson, 58 Mich. 169.

¶ 498. One who has only purchased mortgaged land subject to the encumbrance is not personally liable, though, if he has promised to pay the mortgage, he may be made a defendant in foreclosure if he can be found in the jurisdiction, and a decree may be rendered against him for any deficiency after sale.—Booth v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 299.

¶ 499. The statement in a deed from an intermediate holder of mortgaged premises that the grant is subject to the mortgage does not, in the absence of language expressing or implying an assumption by the grantee of such mortgage, or an intention that the interest granted should be charged with the whole amount of the mortgage, make the mortgage a specific charge upon such interest so as to influence the equities between second and third mortgagees as to other portions of the premises.—Slater v. Breese, 36 Mich. 77.

¶ 500. Where a purchaser buys mortgaged premises from the mortgagor subject to the mortgage and agreeing to pay it as part of the purchase price, and his deed is expressly made subject to it, though it does not in terms bind him to pay it, he is to be treated, as between himself and the mortgagor, as having assumed the mortgage, and is personally liable for whatever deficiency there may be after foreclosure sale.—Canfield v. Shear, 49 Mich. 313.

¶ 501. A deed containing a covenant of warranty "against all lawful claims whatsoever subject to a certain mortgage given by the parties of the first part for one thousand dollars" merely leaves the title subject to be defeated by a failure to pay the mortgage debt, but does not bind the grantee to pay it. And the exception is not such a written contract as will exclude evidence to show that, in addition to the consideration expressed, the grantee had also agreed to pay off the mortgage. The exception and the agreement are distinct.—Strohauer v. Voltz, 42 Mich. 444.

See also ante ¶ 493.

Construction and effect of covenants in mortgage in general, see ante § 42.

Suits to establish or enforce liability, see post § 119.

¶ 502. One who takes a deed of mortgaged land will be personally liable on the foreclosure of the mortgage if his deed expressly binds him to pay it (How. St. § 6704); but a covenant to do so cannot be implied by either deed or mortgage (How. St. § 5655).—Gage v. Jenkinson, 58 Mich. 169.

¶ 503. The right to recover upon a grantee's covenant to pay a mortgage given by his grantor is not affected by the subsequent value of the land or of an oil-well upon it, and evidence as to such facts would be irrelevant and inadmissible in an action to establish a claim under such covenant against the grantee's estate.—Comstock v. Smith, 26 Mich. 306.

§ 116. Covenants or agreements by strangers to mortgage.

Construction, validity and effect of covenants in mortgage in general, see ante § 42.

¶ 504. A mortgagee of land cannot avail himself of an agreement made with a third party by a mere owner of the equity of redemption to pay the mortgage, where such owner was not a party to the mortgage nor in any way liable for the debt secured by it.—Stuart v. Worden, 42 Mich. 154.

§ 117. Nature of assumed liability.

Effect of retransfer after assumption of liability, see ante ¶ 491.

¶ 505. Where a portion of mortgaged property is transferred to one, subject to the entire mortgage debt, the grantee assuming the mortgage as a part of the consideration, the grantee becomes the principal debtor as to the grantor, and the grantor becomes his surety.—Pease v. Warner, 153 Mich. 140.

§ 118. Estoppel of purchaser to contest mortgage.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

Inurement of title to benefit of mortgagee which accrues to assuming transferree of land after transfer, see Estoppel § 20, ¶ 49.

¶ 507. Where a grantee has assumed a mortgage made by the grantor, and the amount thereof has been deducted from the purchase price, he cannot dispute the legal execution of the mortgage or its amount as specified in the deed; and after he has paid interest on the mortgage for eighteen months without complaint he cannot be heard to complain that the clause subjecting his deed to the mortgage was fraudulently inserted.—Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10.

¶ 508. One who has bought lands subject to a mortgage, and has subsequently expressly recognized it by an agreement with the mortgagee for forbearance, cannot thereafter dispute its existence or validity.—Smith v. Graham, 34 Mich. 302.

¶ 509. One who buys land and receives a conveyance subject to a mortgage thereon cannot afterwards contest the validity of the mortgage on the ground of defect in the formalities of execution.—Disbrow v. Jones, H. 48.

¶ 511. One who purchases a parcel of land subject to a mortgage upon that and other property, and with full record notice of a conveyance of the other property, gets no greater rights by virtue of such purchase than his grantor had; and in a suit for the foreclosure of the prior mortgage, and to marshal the securities, he is not in a position to attack such deed for want of consideration.—Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 463.

¶ 512. The vendee of an equity of redemption stands in the place of the mortgagor, and holds the property subject to all encumbrances; and where there were two mortgages, and the mortgaged premises had been sold on foreclosure at law of the first mortgage, it was held that the vendee of the equity of redemption could not, by paying the redemption money, and taking an assignment from the purchaser of all his interest in the land, claim the rights of such purchaser for the purpose of defeating the second mortgage.—Johnson v. Johnson, W. 331.

¶ 513. Where a grantee has assumed a mortgage made by the grantor, and the amount thereof has been deducted from the purchase price, he cannot dispute the legal execution of the mortgage or its amount as specified in the deed; and after he has paid interest on the mortgage for eighteen months without complaint he cannot be heard to complain that the clause subjecting his deed to the mortgage was fraudulently inserted.—Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10.

¶ 514. A grantee who assumes and agrees to pay a mortgage upon the property conveyed waives all defenses except payment, and cannot set up against an assignee of the mortgage that the assignment was without consideration.—Terry v. Durand Land Co., 112 Mich. 665.

¶ 515. One who accepts a deed assuming to pay a mortgage cannot resist the mortgage by showing that it was without consideration, or that by reason of a mistake in the description he acquired no legal title, where he obtained possession under his deed of the proper premises, and the right to have the mistake corrected.—Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354.

¶ 516. The mortgagee of land cannot sue on a promise made to the mortgagor by the latter's grantee to pay the mortgage, because it is a promise to a third person.—Booth v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 299.

¶ 517. Defendants accepted a deed of realty which provided that the grantee should assume and pay specified incumbrances. Defendants conveyed the property to complainant. Defendants failed to pay off the incumbrance and complainant, to avoid a foreclosure, paid the same and took an assignment from the mortgagee. Complainant filed a bill in equity to have defendants declared a trustee of the amount of the mortgage but did not ask foreclosure. Comp. L. 1897, § 519, provides that where the mortgage is secured by the obligation of any other person besides the mortgagor, the complainant may make such person a party to the foreclosure bill and the courts may decree payment against such person for any deficiency. Held, complainant could not maintain his bill.—Kollen v. Sooy, 172 Mich. 214.

Subrogation to mortgage lien on redemption, payment or discharge, see post §§ 155-158.

General principles of subrogation, see Subrogation.

¶ 518. A mortgagee may, on foreclosure, be so far subrogated to the mortgagor as to have the benefit of a subsequent grantee's obligation to pay the mortgage assumed by such grantee's deed.—Hicks v. McGarry, 38 Mich. 667.

§ 121. Presumptions and evidence.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Proof of agreement to assume mortgage debt by parol, see Evidence § 161, ¶ 851.

¶ 519. It may be shown by parol that as part of the consideration for a deed, the grantee agreed to pay an existing incumbrance.—Swarthout v. Shields, 185 Mich. 427.

¶ 520. Where it is doubtful whether a deed of mortgaged premises binds the grantee to pay existing encumbrances, evidence of the value of the premises or of the agreed consideration for them, and as to whether the grantee retained any of the consideration to pay the debt, is admissible to aid in construing the deed.—Winans v. Wilkie, 41 Mich. 264.

¶ 521. Assumption denied by a quitclaim grantee is not shown by a statement by him that he would "settle with" the mortgagor, where it appears that already the mortgagors had made a quitclaim deed of the lands to the mortgagees with an understanding that it should not be recorded for a time during which mortgagors might redeem and if not redeemed the mortgage should be discharged, where the later quitclaim grantee knew of this arrangement and that the mortgagors could not redeem and the land was not worth as much as the incumbrances, and the evident purpose of the later deeds was to enable the grantee to redeem by a compromise if he could negotiate one.—Grover v. Bishop, 138 Mich. 505.

¶ 522. The grantee of land could not be required to pay complainant's mortgage, of which such grantee had no actual knowledge and which he never assumed; where, in an action to foreclose such mortgage, it appeared that complainant had discharged of record such mortgage by reason of a misunderstanding, and that subsequently such grantee acquired title to the land by a clear warranty deed; and that subsequently thereto, grantee obtained of complainant a loan, giving as security therefor a mortgage on such land, at which time an abstract of title was furnished at the request of complainant, who thereupon declared the title to be good; and that defendant used the money so obtained to pay the balance of the purchase price to his grantor.—Mesmore v. Maerz, 149 Mich. 331.

¶ 523. Where a grantee of land agreed to pay a mortgage on it, but did not do so, and the land was sold for less than the mortgage debt, the fact that the foreclosure decree does not show how much was due as principal and how much as interest is immaterial in an action against the grantee for damages resulting from his failure to pay the debt. He is liable for what he agreed to pay and no more, and evidence of the foreclosure is only important as showing that the land, which was a fund in his hands from which the mortgage might have been paid, had been exhausted without satisfying the debt.—Strohauer v. Voltz, 42 Mich. 444.

¶ 524. A decree discharging a mortgage is erroneous and the mortgage should be enforced where the evidence is conflicting as to whether or not the defendant in exchanging his property with the complainant for mortgaged premises assumed the mortgage or merely took the property subject to the mortgage and the question of whether the mortgage in suit was given by the complainant on the property he received, to secure the defendant for back taxes and interest on the mortgage on the property the defendant received, which taxes and interest the defendant failed to pay, or given to cover the difference in the trading value of the equities, where the evidence shows that the complainant knew the difference between a deed subject to a mortgage and one assuming a mortgage, but took one subject to a mortgage only, where subsequently the complainant loaned his abstract to the defendant to enable him to sell the mortgage now desired to be discharged, and other evidence indicates that the trade was made without the defendant's assuming the mortgage.—Waters v. Gillies, 128 Mich. 608.

C. CONVEYANCE OF PARCELS AND COVENANTS TO RELEASE THEM.

Partial or pro tanto discharge or release of lien, see post § 149.

Covenants for release of parcels, see post § 151.

Partial satisfaction of debt by release of parcel, see post § 141.

Effect of release of one parcel from mortgage on statutory foreclosure of other parcels, see Foreclosure ¶ 90.

¶ 525. Where a mortgage covering several lots provides that the mortgagee will release from the lien of the mortgage, without consideration, a certain number of the lots as fast as sold, and "at such time or times as" the mortgagor may request, the latter is entitled to the release of lots that are within the terms of the stipulation upon making demand therefor at any time.—Commercial Bank v. Hiller, 106 Mich. 118.

¶ 526. A mortgagee who releases several parcels of land from the mortgage does not thereby release a parcel sold by the mortgagor prior to such releases but of which sale the mortgagee has no notice.—Balen v. Lewis, 130 Mich. 567.

§ 123. Agreements with grantee for extension or release.

¶ 527. Mortgagor held to have assented to an agreement between mortgagee and subsequent grantee for extending time of payment and releasing part of premises.—Griffin v. Walter, 74 Mich. 1.

D. CONVEYANCE OR RELEASE TO MORTGAGEE AND MERGER OF MORTGAGE.

See also post ¶ 610.
Effect of outstanding claims and junior liens, see post § 125.
Merger in tax title, see post § 126.
Estoppel to deny or question merger, see post § 127.
Assignment after merger, see post § 128.
Merger in general, see Real Property.

¶ 527a. A mortgagor may release to the mortgagee the equity of redemption for a valuable consideration, when it is done voluntarily and there is no fraud, and no undue influence is brought to bear upon him for that purpose by the creditor.—Batty v. Snook, 5 Mich. 231.

¶ 528. A mortgagee cannot remain so after acquiring the fee unless the mortgage needs to be kept alive to protect his rights.—Jackson v. Evans, 44 Mich. 510.

¶ 529. It may be stated as a general rule that merger does not take place when there is none in fact by a union in the same person of the title and the mortgage interest.—Ten Eyck v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co., 114 Mich. 494.

¶ 530. A mortgagee's equitable title is merged in the legal title, if he acquires it, unless he intends otherwise, or unless his acceptance of the legal title is brought about by fraud or deceit; and his intent is a question of fact.—Ann Arbor Sav. Bank v. Webb, 56 Mich. 377.

¶ 531. In determining whether a mortgage is merged in the fee when the mortgagor deeds to the mortgagee the intent controls; and if it is for the interest of him in whom the estates are united to keep the mortga alive, the law will not imply an intent merge.—Cook v. Foster, 96 Mich. 610.

¶ 532. A quitclaim deed from a mortgag to his mortgagee does not cause a merger the mortgage so as to deprive the mortgag of his right of priority, where the intenti and the mortgagee's interests are otherwi —Tower v. Devine, 37 Mich. 443.

¶ 533. It may be stated as a general r that merger does not take place when the terest of the mortgagee does not require and when there is no intent that the should be a merger.—Ten Eyck v. Ponti O. & P. A. R. Co., 114 Mich. 494.

¶ 534. It is the rule in equity that a mo gage is not merged by a purchase by t mortgagee of the equity of redemption wh the interest of the mortgagee requires t titles to be kept separate.—Quick v. R mond, 116 Mich. 15.

¶ 535. The holder of a mortgage loses substantial rights by becoming owner of t equity of redemption.—Snyder v. Snyder, Mich. 470.

¶ 536. The conveyance of the equity redemption to the assignee of the mortga is such a merger as authorizes him to sta in the position of an assignee of the mo gagor satisfying it, under Comp. L. 18 § 2777, How. St. § 5738; and such merg does not give any greater rights of dower the widow of the mortgagor.—Snyder v. S der, 6 Mich. 470.

¶ 537. A mortgagor and his grantees h ing deeded the mortgaged premises and ot property to the mortgagee and others, in c sideration of the mortgage debt and ot debts, and taken back a contract for rec veyance on certain specified conditions, t mortgage debt was held to be thereby ext guished.—McCabe v. Farnsworth, 27 Mi 52.

¶ 538. Where a sale is made subject t mortgage and the mortgage is owned by t purchaser at the sale, the mortgage is, effect, cancelled.—Lynch v. Kirby, 36 Mi 238.

¶ 539. A woman mortgaged land to l mother, and afterwards deeded it to a ba to secure loans made by the latter to her s In order to obtain a first lien for the ba and get rid of the prior lien held by t mother, the daughter and the bank ga simultaneous warranty deeds to the moth the bank at the same time taking from l her personal note and mortgage to secure t debt to it. The mother did not know t the effect of this, if so intended, would be merge her equitable title and destroy h prior lien, and was left to think that it wo not affect such lien. She had no counsel, a the only lawyer who took part in the tra action acted in the bank's interest, whether employed by it or not. Held, that equity would not permit the merger, and that if the bank sought to avoid the prior lien it should have required the mother, in giving her mortgage to it, to discharge the former mortgage.—Ann Arbor Sav. Bank v. Webb, 56 Mich. 377.

¶ 540. Where one, by purchasing at an invalid foreclosure sale, becomes the owner of a mortgage while also owning the land from which it should be satisfied, his purchase is to be deemed a payment and satisfaction of the mortgage if the land is sufficient for the purpose.—Carley v. Fox, 38 Mich. 387.

¶ 541. An accommodation indorser, who was secured by mortgage, was called upon by a bank at which the note had been discounted for its payment. He paid the amount due, and received from the bank an assignment of whatever rights it had acquired as purchaser of the mortgaged premises at a sale made under an execution issued on a judgment rendered against the maker in a suit on the note, and then filed a bill to foreclose his mortgage. Held, that the assignment did not affect the mortgage, there being nothing to indicate such an intention, and that the law does not require the application of the doctrine of merger.—Burt v. Gamble, 98 Mich. 402.

¶ 543. If a mortgagee bids in the premises on foreclosure sale for an instalment due, and afterwards gives a warranty deed of the land, the warranty deed discharges the mortgage and releases indorsers of such notes as may be secured by subsequent instalments thereof.—Bridgman v. Johnson, 44 Mich. 491.

¶ 544. The purchase, by a mortgagee, of the equity of redemption will not merge the mortgage where there are intermediate rights, or the interest of the mortgagee requires that the titles should be kept separate.—Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 463.

¶ 545. Where one owning the equity of redemption of lands which are subject to two mortgages buys in the first, and takes an assignment thereof to himself, such mortgage is not thereby merged in the fee.—Dutton v. Ives, 5 Mich. 515.

¶ 546. Where, upon the purchase by a mortgagee of the equity of redemption, it is agreed between mortgagor and mortgagee that the latter shall retain possession of the note and mortgage for the purpose of cutting off by foreclosure a subsequent levy made upon the mortgaged premises, equity will treat the estates as separate, and after foreclosure, will, at the mortgagee's suit, set aside said levy and a sale made thereunder as a cloud upon his title.—Gibbs v. Johnson, 104 Mich. 120.

Assignment after merger, see post § 128.

¶ 548. A mortgage is not merged in a tax title acquired by the mortgagee after the mortgage was given and for the purpose of protecting it.—Baker v. Clark, 52 Mich. 22.

¶ 549. A man after giving a mortgage upon certain described lands agreed to get a tax-deed thereto from the state to the mortgagee, whose name was Hurst, and who was to reconvey on the repayment of moneys advanced by him to the mortgagor. The tax-deed was accordingly obtained, but as it was made out in the name of Hunt, the mortgagee quitclaimed to the mortgagor under that name, and the latter gave him back a warranty deed, this being done to save the expense of a foreclosure. Held, that this transaction should be treated as intended to confirm the mortgage title and not destroy it: and that the mortgage was to be regarded as continuing for purposes of security, and open to foreclosure.—Hurst v. Beaver, 50 Mich. 612.

§ 127. Estoppel to deny or question merger.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 550. A second mortgagee, who was the grantee in a deed executed by his mortgagor, and which includes, by the grantor's fraud, a provision that the grantee shall assume a first mortgage and also a third mortgage of which she knows nothing, is not estopped, where such deed is not delivered but is put on record by the grantor, from denying merger, as against an assignment of the third mortgage, where his own mortgage appears of record undischarged.—Cook v. Foster, 96 Mich. 610.

¶ 551. Where the owner of lands treats a mortgage thereon that has been assigned to him as a valid instrument, and transfers it as such, he is estopped from insisting, as against his assignee, or anyone claiming under him, that in his hands it had merged and disappeared in the fee. And after he has recorded the assignment a purchaser from him is also estopped from insisting on such merger.—Powell v. Smith, 30 Mich. 451.

§ 128. Assignment after merger.

¶ 552. If a grantee of mortgaged premises assumes the encumbrance and afterwards takes an assignment of the mortgage, he extinguishes the debt, and cannot afterwards give any right to foreclose the mortgage by assigning it.—Winans v. Wilkie, 41 Mich. 264.

Persons to whom payment or tender may be made, see post §§ 131, 132.

Proper persons to pay or tender, see post § 133.

Application of payments, see post § 134.

¶ 554. Where it is agreed between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the mortgagee is to board with the mortgagor and allow the value of such services to be applied upon the mortgage debt, a claim for services of the mortgagor's wife in nursing and otherwise caring for the mortgagee cannot be applied against the mortgage debt in the hands of a third person assignee.—Wright v. Hubbard, 126 Mich. 239.

¶ 555. The maker of a negotiable note secured by mortgage cannot discharge his liability by payment to one not the holder, or authorized by the holder to receive payment.—Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580.

¶ 556. Voluntary payment of a mortgage to one not entitled to collect it, after notice from the real owner not to do so, and after suit brought by such owner to foreclose the mortgage, is no protection to anyone.—Chase v. Brown, 32 Mich. 225.

¶ 557. Payment of an intestate's mortgage, if made by the mortgagor in good faith to the person to whom the administrator tells him it belongs, is good.—Reynolds v. Smith, 57 Mich. 194.

¶ 558. A mortgagor in a mortgage securing negotiable paper is not justified in dealing with the mortgagee upon the assumption that he is still the owner of the securities, unless he produces them.—Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562.

¶ 559. One who pays a mortgage should ascertain who has the note secured by it, as he is chargeable with notice that the note may have been transferred, and may belong to another than the mortgagee, although there is no assignment of the mortgage on record.—Babcock v. Young, 117 Mich. 155.

¶ 560. Upon a bill to compel the discharge of a mortgage if the note and mortgage are shown to be, and to have been, in the hands of a person other than the mortgagor, that this person has collected the interest from time to time, and the mortgagee has accepted from him money so collected without ever questioning his authority, then such person should be regarded as having had authority from the mortgagee to collect it, and on its being further shown that the indebtedness has been fully collected by this person, the mortgage should be released.—Donaldson v. Wilson, 79 Mich. 181.

Assignment of mortgage debt or interest of mortgagee, see ante, VI.

¶ 561. How. St. § 5687, which provides that the recording of an assignment of a mortgage shall not, in itself, be deemed notice to the mortgagor so as to invalidate any payment made by him to the mortgagee, is construed to mean that the mortgagor shall not be required to search the records before making payment to one prima facie entitled to receive it, who, in case of negotiable securities, is the holder alone.—Williams v. Keyes, 90 Mich. 290.

¶ 562. Where a mortgagee assigned the mortgage and accompanying negotiable note by delivery, and before maturity, as collateral security to his note, and where the mortgagor, in ignorance of such assignment, paid the mortgage debt to the administrators of the mortgagee, who did not produce or have in their possession the note or mortgage, such payment was held no defense to the foreclosure of the mortgage by the holder of the securities.—Williams v. Keyes, 90 Mich. 290.

¶ 563. A mortgagor who, without knowledge that the mortgage has been assigned, pays the debt to the mortgagee is entitled to have the mortgage cancelled.—Ingalls v. Bond, 66 Mich. 338.

¶ 564. Where a mortgagor pays the mortgage to one who has never held the legal title thereto, either as mortgagee or assignee, and who does not have the mortgage papers in his possession, it is immaterial, in a suit brought by an assignee to foreclose the mortgage, that the mortgagor, at the time of such payment, had no notice of the assignment.—Joy v. Vance, 104 Mich. 97.

¶ 565. Where a mortgage given to secure a note made payable at a bank has been assigned without the indorsement of the payee upon the note, the officers of the bank holding the mortgagor's money for payment of the mortgage are not justified, when the note and mortgage and the assignment are presented by the assignee for payment, in declining payment upon the objection that the note is not indorsed by the payee; the formal assignment, duly acknowledged and recorded, would be the best possible evidence of ownership, and the real owner would be entitled to demand and receive payment whether the note is indorsed or not.—Pease v. Warren, 29 Mich. 9.

¶ 566. Notwithstanding the fact that a mortgagor has no actual knowledge of the transfer of the mortgage, payment of the mortgage will not be good, made to a person not in possession of the securities, unless there is an agency in fact to receive the payment, or such facts as estop the assignee from denying the authority of such person to receive the payment.—Bromley v. Lathrop, 105 Mich. 492.

Right of life tenant to pay incumbrance and have contribution therefor from remainderman or reversioner, see Life Estates § 14.

¶ 567. A mortgagee has a right to refuse any tender of the amount due on the mortgage if made by one who, as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, is a stranger to their dealings, and therefore has no right of redemption; so held where tender was made by one who was neither mortgagor nor mortgagor's grantee, and who did not act in the interest or at the request of the mortgagor and had himself no interest in the equity of redemption, but only held some tax-titles which were not subject to the mortgage.—Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 335.

Application of payments in general, see Payment, III.

¶ 568. A mortgagor owing other debts to the mortgagee may direct the application of a payment.—Van Sceiver v. King, 176 Mich. 605.

¶ 569. The application of payments upon a mortgage will be as justice and equity require, where no agreement controls, or where an agreement is unlawful. Scattering payments permitted by the mortgagee should, if not otherwise agreed, be applied (1) to the extinguishment of interest due; (2) to the payment of principal.—Morgan v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 57 Mich. 490.

¶ 570. Where a mortgagor and mortgagee agree that certain mortgaged property shall be sold and its proceeds applied on the general indebtedness after satisfying other claims, they still have power to make a different disposition of the proceeds, and may be bound thereby, if third persons interested in the premises do not insist that the proceeds shall be applied in reduction of the debt.—Perrin v. Kellogg, 38 Mich. 720.

¶ 571. Where a mortgagor gave a note for the whole amount of his debt, including sums for which he had become indebted before the mortgage was given and which were not secured by it, and the mortgagee applied payments made to him upon the note generally, it was equivalent to an application upon the new and old indebtedness pro rata, and a different application could not be made where it did not satisfactorily appear to have been directed or to have been for the interest of the parties.—Shelden v. Bennett, 44 Mich. 634.

¶ 572. A mortgagor who has paid interest upon ten per cent interest, when behind in his payments, is entitled to have it allowed on the principal, as ten per cent is the statutory maximum of interest that may be taken in Michigan.—Havens v. Jones, 45 Mich. 253.

¶ 573. A mortgagor paid a sum of money in settlement of a dispute which had arisen from the cutting of timber on the mortgaged land. The settlement left a large amount of timber on his hands ready for working up, and the settlement took account of the fact that it was cut without expense to him. Held, that in the absence of evidence of any understanding with the mortgagee that the amount paid might be applied upon his mortgage, it would not be assumed that the mortgagee had agreed to such an application of payments, nor would such application be decreed.—Hart v. Carpenter, 36 Mich. 402.

¶ 574. A creditor of a corporation, who held its bonds as collateral security, guaranteed its performance of a contract, and the corporation contracted with him to carry on its business and apply the proceeds to that purpose and to its current working capital, and agreed that any surplus might be applied to the payment of current indebtedness. The bonds were secured by mortgage. Held, that this did not fix the character of his possession of the corporate property as that of the mortgagee, and that the proceeds received by him did not apply as payment on the mortgage, and could only be so applied as set-off.—Beecher v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co., 45 Mich. 103.

¶ 575. Where a mortgagor pays money to the administrator of the mortgagee, with distinct reference to the ownership of the mortgage by the estate, and in the expectation and understanding on both sides that on the settlement the sums of money paid are to be taken into account against the mortgage, either as payment or by way of set-off, it is not important that they should have been regarded as payments at the time they were made; nor will it necessarily affect the right of the mortgagor to have them so applied that he took, from time to time, as evidence of the sums of money paid, notes reserving annual interest.—Jones v. Smith, 22 Mich. 360.

¶ 576. Where the evidence fails to show that a mortgagee has applied a payment on any of several secured and unsecured obligations of the mortgagor, and the mortgage being foreclosed is the only remaining secured loan owing, equity will apply the payment on the mortgage.—Van Sceiver v. King, 176 Mich. 605.

¶ 577. Insurance policies upon mortgaged property were assigned by the mortgagor to the mortgagee as additional security, and it was agreed that in case of loss the proceeds should be applied in payment of the mortgage indebtedness. Held, that the money collected upon them by the assignee should have been so applied, unless such a disposition of it would be contrary to the rights of a creditor of the assignee to whom the latter had assigned the notes and mortgage to which the policy was collateral; and if such creditor knew of the assignment of the policies and did not object, he was bound by the agreement, especially if he joined in notifying the assignor to pay the whole mortgage debt to the assignee.—Wilcox v. Allen, 36 Mich. 160.

¶ 578. The general rule of equity that the proceeds of a mortgage given to secure several items of indebtedness are to be applied to the debt, or part of the debt, first maturing, will not be applied where the effect would work injustice by depriving complainant of additional security. So held, where, after default in the payment of interest upon bonds, but before the maturity of the principal, a bill was filed in behalf of the bondholders to foreclose the mortgage securing the bonds, under a provision in such mortgage declaring that the principal should become due immediately upon default in payment of interest, and where guarantors of the payment of both interest and principal of the bonds, sought, having been made defendants, to have the proceeds of the sale applied to the interest before being applied to the principal.—Union Trust Co. v. Detroit Motor Co., 117 Mich. 631.

Keeping tender good, see post § 136.
Refusal of tender as discharge, see post § 137.
Treating payment tendered in full as partial payment, see post § 138.
Estoppel to deny tender, see post § 139.
Persons to whom tender may be made, see ante § 131.
Pleading and proof of tender, see Payment, V.

¶ 579. One who seeks to obtain the discharge of a mortgage lien, or an assignment of the mortgage, or subrogation to the mortgagee's rights, must tender not only the amount due on the mortgage but the necessary expenses already incurred in taking steps to enforce the security.—Shutes v. Woodard, 57 Mich. 213.

¶ 580. Where a mortgagee has taken no steps to entitle him to an attorney fee, if such a fee is recoverable at all, he is bound to accept such a tender as would be sufficient without it.—Canfield v. Conkling, 41 Mich. 371.

¶ 581. A tender by a mortgagor to an assignee of the mortgage, on condition that the latter, besides discharging the mortgage, should execute and deliver to him a quit-claim deed of the land described therein, is not such an unconditional tender as will cut off the mortgage lien.—Dodge v. Brewer, 31 Mich. 227.

¶ 582. An absolute tender by a subsequent mortgagee will discharge the lien of a prior mortgage; but a tender coupled with a claim of an allowance not lawfully demandable will not.—Sager v. Tupper, 35 Mich. 134.

¶ 583. Where a mortgagee refused a tender of an award and a sum of money simply on the ground that he was not bound to receive the award, an accidental deficiency in the amount of money offered, caused by an erroneous computation of interest, was held not to prejudice the mortgagor when the award had been held good on a bill to redeem.—Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305.

¶ 584. A mortgagor, by way of tender, made repeated offers of money to the mortgagee while they were riding together on the public highway. He involved it with other matters of dealing between them, and the settlement was interrupted by a quarrel, but before any costs were incurred the mortgagee offered to receive the amount due. Held, that no tender had been made that would discharge the mortgage lien.—Parks v. Allen, 42 Mich. 482.

¶ 585. The owner of the equity of redemption in property covered by successive mortgages, who was not made a party to proceedings foreclosing a first mortgage, but in which the subsequent mortgagees were made parties, could not profit by such proceeding to the extent of being relieved from all mortgages except such first, and could not discharge the property of all liens by a tender of the amount due on the first mortgage.—Walsh v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 16.

¶ 586. The holder of a mortgage to whom a tender is proposed is entitled to a reasonable opportunity to look over the mortgage and accompanying papers to calculate and ascertain the amount due, and if such papers are not present, he must be allowed a reasonable time in which to get them and make the calculation; he is not bound, at the risk of losing his entire debt, to carry in his head at all times the precise amount due on any particular day.—Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 149.

¶ 586a. A tender of payment of a mortgage should be absolute and unconditional, not dependent on the mortgagee's first executing a receipt or discharge.—Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 149.

¶ 586b. Complainant in a suit to redeem, being unable to find defendant, tendered to his son in the presence of his solicitor the amount due. The son was authorized to inform complainant that his father would not execute a deed until he had received a receipt in full of all demands, and such statement was made in the presence of defendant's solicitor. Held, that the tender was sufficient to excuse complainant from paying interest upon the amount after that date.—Crawford v. Osmun, 94 Mich. 533.

¶ 586c. Where the discharge of a mortgage is demanded on the ground of a tender, it should be fair and distinct, without mystery or ambiguity, and should not be so made as to lead the mortgagee to believe that the purpose is to buy up the security.—Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284.

the amount was recoverable under the common counts.—Fry v. Russell, 35 Mich. 229.

¶ 586f. Tender of performance of an agreement will not operate to extinguish the lien by which the agreement is secured if it is not unequivocal and reasonably capable of being understood by the other party as a bona fide tender of the requisite thing, act or service; and the offer itself should be accompanied by circumstances fairly implying control of the necessary means, and possession of the necessary ability to fulfill it.—Selby v. Hurd, 51 Mich. 1.

Effect of failure to keep tender good on suit to redeem, see post ¶ 806.

¶ 587. There is no equity in seeking to avoid both lien and debt. One who attacks a mortgage lien on the ground that it was discharged by tender must pay or offer to pay the debt.—Waldron v. Murphy, 40 Mich. 668.

¶ 588. A tender was abruptly made upon the street to the owner of some overdue mortgages, and who was known to be sick and nearly blind, and who declined to transact the business until the next morning. The next morning he offered to receive the money, but reliance was then had on the tender and it was not paid. Held, that the tender did not discharge the lien of the mortgage.—Waldron v. Murphy, 40 Mich. 668.

¶ 589. A tender of the amount due upon a mortgage, if made so that the holder of the mortgage understands it at the time as a present, absolute and unconditional tender thereof, operates ipso facto to discharge the lien of the mortgage, though the tender itself be not thereafter kept good.—Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 149.

§ 137. Refusal of tender as discharge.

Necessity of keeping tender good to effect discharge thereby, see ante § 136.

What constitutes discharge generally, see post §§ 142-147.

¶ 590. Where a mortgagor, after the mortgage has become due, but before foreclosure, tenders to the holder the full amount due, which the latter refuses to receive, the lien of the mortgage is thereby discharged, and if a bill is afterwards filed by the holder to foreclose it is not necessary for the mortgagor to bring the tender into court or to show that it has been kept good.—Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 270; Van Husan v. Kanouse, 13 Mich. 303.

¶ 591. A tender of the full amount due upon a mortgage will operate to discharge its lien if the tender is refused without adequate excuse.—Renard v. Clink, 91 Mich. 1.

¶ 592. The refusal, by the assignee of a mortgage, who has foreclosed by advertisement before recording the assignment, to accept a tender of the amount due without costs does not disable him, if the refusal was based on a belief in his right, from proceeding to foreclose in equity, the lien not having been discharged.—Renard v. Clink, 91 Mich. 1.

¶ 593. Where tender and refusal are set up as a defense to foreclosure they must be very clearly proved. One who means to make a fair offer of the amount due on a mortgage by way of tender and payment, and with the purpose of insisting, if such tender is refused, that the lien is discharged, is bound to be straightforward and disclose his purpose and give the holder of the mortgage a reasonable chance to act intelligently.—Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284.

¶ 594. Where tender is made to the holder of a mortgage there should be clear evidence that it was made in good faith and was understood by the holder to be a present absolute tender, intended to be in full payment and extinguishment of the mortgage without any condition.—Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 149.

¶ 595. Where the discharge of a mortgage is demanded on the ground of a tender the evidence of tender must be clear and put defendant plainly in the wrong, especially where demand is made for the statutory penalty.—Engle v. Hall, 45 Mich. 57.

¶ 596. A tender of the amount due on a mortgage must be open, fair and reasonable, and made at the right time and place, and to the proper person; and the refusal of such a tender must be without justifiable excuse to warrant the forfeiture of the mortgage security.—Post v. Springsted, 49 Mich. 90.

¶ 598. Unless refused in bad faith, a tender of the amount due on a mortgage will not discharge the lien thereof.—Hayward v. Chase, 181 Mich. 614.

¶ 599. Courts will hesitate to enforce the forfeiture of mortgage security for the refusal of a tender when its apparent purpose is to force the mortgagee to accept with no opportunity of determining whether it is the proper amount.—Post v. Springsted, 49 Mich. 90.

¶ 599a. A tender of the amount due on a mortgage is properly refused if made by one who is a stranger to the transaction between the parties, who has no rights therein and who does not act in the interest or at the request of the debtor or obligor.—Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 335.

¶ 599b. A mortgagee may refuse a tender made by one who merely holds by a tax-deed not subject to the mortgage.—Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 335.

§ 138. Treating payment tendered in full as partial payment.

¶ 600. After accepting a tender made by a mortgagor in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt, interest and accrued costs of a pending statutory foreclosure as understood by the parties at the time of such acceptance, the mortgagee cannot treat the transaction as a partial payment and proceed with his foreclosure; and a sale made thereunder will be treated as absolutely void.—Fisher v. Holden, 84 Mich. 494.

§ 139. Estoppel to deny payment or tender.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 601. A mortgagee under an unrecorded mortgage is estopped to assert its existence where she had stated, to one who advanced money upon the strength of such statement, that she had no claim upon the property and that the mortgage was paid and also testified in a subsequent creditor's suit, that it was paid, though she now swears that nothing was ever paid on it.—Peirson v. Peirson, 137 Mich. 180.

§ 140. Discharge of personal liability or debt.

Effect of discharge of junior mortgage on right to enforce lien for redemption money paid on foreclosure of prior mortgage, see Foreclosure ¶ 799.

¶ 602. A quitclaim deed of mortgaged premises executed by a mortgagor to the mortgagee's brother, held to have been made in consideration of the mortgagor's discharge from personal liability for the debt, rather than in consideration of an agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee that the mortgage debt should thereby be paid and the mortgage discharged.—Slayton v. Slayton, 99 Mich. 35.

§ 141. Partial satisfaction of debt by release of parcel.

Conveyance of parcels and covenants to release them from lien, see ante, VII, C.

¶ 603. Where mortgaged property has been wrongfully released to the prejudice of subsequent purchasers and the value of the parcel paid to the mortgagor, the purchasers are equitably entitled on foreclosure to have the amount for which the parcel was released deducted from the mortgage debt before their parcel is sold.—Hall v. Edwards, 43 Mich. 473.

¶ 604. Where a mortgagee at the time the mortgage was given owed certain open accounts which he subsequently requested the mortgagor to pay, and agreed to allow the amounts so paid on the mortgage, and the accounts were paid by the mortgagor, who took assignments of the same in his own name, which assigned accounts he tendered to the assignee of the mortgage,—who took it subject to all existing equities,—and offered to pay him any balance due for principal and interest on the mortgage, which was refused, the amount of the accounts should be applied as payment pro tanto on the mortgage.—Castle v. Castle, 78 Mich. 298.

¶ 605. By the discharge of a mortgage—as the term is commonly understood—something that relieves the land from the apparent lien is intended; not a mere payment.—Blackwood v. Brown, 29 Mich. 483.

¶ 606. Mortgages may be paid and extinguished without making use of any writing.—Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45.

¶ 607. The lien of a mortgage is not discharged as to a purchaser of the mortgaged premises by the mortgagee's ineffectual attempt to release the mortgagor.—Johnson v. Bratton, 112 Mich. 319.

¶ 609. A husband and wife executed a mortgage to secure the former's note. Later a second mortgage was executed between the same parties but before execution the husband quitclaimed his interest to the wife for an expressed consideration equal to the amount of the note, and she later died. In an action to foreclose by the assignor of the two mortgages to foreclose it appeared that the original mortgagees assigned the mortgages to K. with a covenant that there was $450.00 due with interest. Thereafter the husband paid K. the principal and interest with the understanding that K. would return the money to him on the mortgages if he so desired. Later the husband reassigned them to K., who returned the money. Subsequently K. assigned the mortgages to complainant. Under these facts, the transactions between the mortgagor and K. cannot as a matter of law have the effect of discharging the mortgages where it appears that there was no such intention. The payment and taking the assignment did not discharge the first mortgage. The effect of the quitclaim was to convey the property to the wife subject to the mortgage, there being no obligation as between the spouses for the husband to pay the mortgage and he had a right to purchase the mortgage and compel the land to discharge the mortgage.—Scribner v. Malinowski, 148 Mich. 446.

§ 143. ——By quitclaim or other deed from mortgagee to owner of equity.

Effect of reconveyance to husband and wife on satisfaction of debt secured by his deed, she joining, see Deeds ¶ 96.

¶ 610. Where the holder of a mortgage executes a quitclaim deed of the premises to one who has received a deed thereof, under an agreement that he shall pay the mortgage, the effect is to discharge the lien of the mortgage; and a subsequent assignment of the mortgage to a third person will not entitle the latter to enforce it.—Jerome v. Seymour, H. 357.

¶ 611. A deed by a mortgagee may operate as a release at the option of the grantee, and if the interest of the grantor is such as to require a deed of bargain and sale to convey it as a reversion, that effect will be given to the quitclaim under How. St. § 5653.—Thayer v. McGee, 20 Mich. 195.

¶ 612. Where a lot of land was conveyed by complainant, subject to the payment of a mortgage on certain other lands, and proceedings were had in chancery to foreclose the mortgage, and the decree became the property of one of the defendants, who also purchased the lot on which payment was charged, it was held that such purchase amounted to a satisfaction of the mortgage to the value of the lot so purchased.—Mason v. Payne, W. 459.

¶ 613. A quitclaim obtained by the mortgagor from the mortgagee of premises, for the purpose of perfecting title by redeeming from a sale on partial foreclosure, cannot be construed as discharging the entire mortgage.—Mable v. Hatinger, 48 Mich. 341.

§ 144. ——By alteration or destruction of paper evidence of lien.

Alterations in papers and effect thereof, see Alteration of Instruments.

¶ 614. A lien holds if not discharged, surrendered, waived or extinguished; the destruction of the paper evidence of it, which in this case was an unrecorded purchase-price mortgage, does not annihilate it so far as the parties and all persons claiming with notice are concerned.—Sloan v. Holcomb, 29 Mich. 153.

¶ 615. A debtor cannot be relieved in equity of a mortgage debt he honestly owes by reason of his creditor having made such an alteration in the note as may prevent his enforcing it according to its terms.—Goodenow v. Curtis, 33 Mich. 505.

§ 145. ——By extinguishment of debt.

¶ 616. Payment, release, or anything that extinguishes the debt, ipso facto extinguishes the mortgage.—Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380.

¶ 617. A mortgage cannot survive the debt secured by it where that debt has been paid by the debtor to the holder of the mortgage.—Byles v. Kellogg, 67 Mich. 318.

¶ 618. Two judgment creditors hold mortgages to secure their respective judgments, and the debtors then executed a third mortgage to a trustee for the creditors conditioned for the payment of the two judgments, but the judgments remaining unpaid, one who had acquired an interest in the lands covered by the mortgage given to the trustee and in certain parcels covered by the others, negotiated with the judgment creditors for the release of certain described land of the trustee's mortgage and paid them the amount agreed upon. The release which was drawn purported to discharge the lands from the two first mortgages only, the interested person being assured that it was sufficient to release the land which he thought was being released and mortgaged under the trustee's mortgage. Held that the judgment creditors who later obtained an assignment of the trustee's mortgage cannot maintain an action to foreclose the mortgage, inasmuch as the release by the trustee was good in equity, and the mortgage was discharged.—McBride v. Wright, 46 Mich. 265.

§ 146. ——By renewal, assignment or change in form of debt or parties.

Subrogation on substitution of mortgages or obligations, see post § 157.

Effect of extension to assuming party as a discharge of mortgagor, see also Contracts ¶ 1089.

¶ 619. A mortgage sought to be foreclosed was held to have been satisfied by the assignment and subsequent payment of another mortgage.—Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 398.

¶ 620. Mortgagor's liability held not to have been released by agreement or understanding substituting for him one to whom he had assigned certain collateral interests.—Wineman v. Phillips, 93 Mich. 223.

¶ 621. Where a mortgagor's debtor had agreed with him to pay the mortgage, an arrangement between the debtor and the mortgagee by which the time of payment was extended from time to time for twenty years—the debtor paying interest and the mortgagor supposing the mortgage to have been paid—was held to have discharged the mortgage lien and to have released the mortgagor's personal liability.—Dedrick v. Den-Bleyker, 85 Mich. 475.

¶ 623. A wife lent money and had the note and mortgage made to her husband, who afterward cancelled and surrendered the mortgage, and a new mortgage was executed to the wife, no change being made in the note. The wife dying, the husband sued her executor for the conversion of the note, claiming that the note was a gift to him, and that the change in the mortgage was made in order that the mortgagor, a married woman who had signed by her maiden name, might sign properly. Held, that the note was not extinguished by the discharge of the first mortgage for such purpose, and that plaintiff might recover.—Oldenberg v. Miller, 82 Mich. 650.

¶ 624. A mortgage was taken which, by mistake, omitted certain property it was intended to cover. A third person authorized to procure its correction secured for himself a mortgage upon the whole, cancelling the original mortgage note, and offered the original mortgagee an interest in this mortgage to the amount of the former one. The offer was declined. Held, that the original mortgage remained in force and a decree was made rectifying and foreclosing it.—Hunt v. Hunt, 38 Mich. 161.

¶ 625. Where assignees advanced to a partnership association the money to pay for certain mortgages, under an agreement that they should be secured by an assignment from the mortgagees, the legal force and effect of the mortgages purchased and assigned under this agreement was not impaired.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

§ 147. ——By resort to chattel mortgage or pledge for same debt.

Exhaustion of chattel security before recourse to wife's mortgage to pay husband's debt, see Marshalling Assets ¶ 6.

¶ 626. A mortgagee whose mortgage covers real and personal property, forecloses it by advertisement, as to the real estate, and bids in the property for a sum sufficient to pay the entire mortgage debt. A judgment creditor of the mortgagor has, at the time, a lien upon the property, subject to the mortgage lien. Later, during the period of redemption, the mortgagee forecloses his lien on the personal property, bids for it a sum sufficient to pay the entire mortgage debt, takes possession, and disposes of the property. Held, that the bidding in of the personal property for a sum sufficient to pay the entire debt was equivalent to a payment of the debt by the mortgagor, and that the lien of the judgment creditor remained a first lien on the real estate.—Webster v. Ypsilanti Canning Co., 149 Mich. 489.

§ 148. Discharge of collateral or indemnity mortgage by release or recourse to principal security.

¶ 627. Where notes of three persons are given in payment and a mortgage is also given as security, the mortgagor is to be held for payment upon the mortgage only and under its conditions. And if the mortgagee, without the mortgagor's consent, extends the time for payment of a note, the mortgage lien is discharged.—Metz v. Todd, 36 Mich. 473.

¶ 628. Where a vendor appropriates and sells the chattels without regularly foreclosing a mortgage thereon executed to him to secure the purchase price, his rights under a land mortgage given by a third person as collateral security are not extinguished, but he is accountable to such third person for the value of the chattels.—Drayton v. Chandler, 93 Mich. 383.

¶ 629. Where a mortgage was given to secure the payment of a promissory note, and to indemnify the mortgagee as accommodation indorser, and at the maturity of the note the mortgagor procured the mortgagee's indorsement to a second note for a larger amount, with a portion of the proceeds of which the first note was retired, and which itself was met at maturity by renewal by a third note with the same indorsement, it was held that the mortgagee, having, as indorser, been compelled to pay the third note after protest, the mortgage was not in equity satisfied as between the parties, it having been given to secure not the particular note only, but the debt itself.—Boxheimer v. Gunn, 24 Mich. 372.

Covenants for release of parcels, see post § 151.

Notice to mortgagee of outstanding equities and effect of record of subsequent titles and incumbrances, see Notice and Record of Title.

¶ 630. A mortgage cannot be discharged piecemeal on the record.—Collar v. Harrison, 28 Mich. 518.

¶ 631. Where a cotenant, whose duty it is to pay his share of a mortgage debt, purchases the mortgage, he discharges the land from the mortgage pro tanto.—Damm v. Damm, 91 Mich. 424.

¶ 632. A. bought from B. a piece of land which B. had mortgaged to C. to secure a note for $500. C. owed $450 to D., to whom he assigned B.'s note and mortgage to secure that debt. A. then paid D. the amount of C.'s debt, took an assignment of B.'s note and mortgage, and claimed that he had thereby discharged the mortgage and cleared the land of any lien. C., however, still claimed an interest in the mortgage to the extent of the surplus over his own debt, and assigned such interest to E., who assigned it to F., and F. proceeded to foreclose against A. Before the period of redemption ran out A. filed a bill against C., E. and F. to annul the foreclosure proceedings. Held, that A.'s payment to D. discharged the lien of the mortgage only pro tanto, and that A. thereafter held the mortgage in trust for C.'s assignee for the balance secured by it; also, that a lien remained upon the land for the amount of such balance.—Olcott v. Crittenden, 68 Mich. 230.

¶ 633. Under a mortgage upon two pieces of land, one of which is a homestead, providing that upon payment of the three first notes in a series of eight the homestead should be released, the mortgagee is entitled to the whole mortgaged property as security and upon foreclosure the homestead does not stand released if the amount of the first three notes is realized at a sale of the other property leaving the others unpaid.—Stephens v. Leonard, 122 Mich. 125.

Covenants for release of parcels, see post § 151.

Penalty for failure to discharge, see post § 159.

¶ 634. A provision in a contract that a party shall discharge his mortgage "at the expense" of the mortgagor imports, in the absence of explanation, that he is to do it on being reimbursed the expense attending the drawing, execution and recording of the discharge, and not that he is to do it only on being paid the amount called for by the mortgage, as well as being reimbursed such expense.—Vary v. Shea, 36 Mich. 388.

¶ 635. One holding such a lien as a purchase-price mortgage can contract to release the lien and hold only the personal security to which it is collateral, and such an arrangement may be proved by circumstantial evidence, but not by careless expressions and dim inference.—Sloan v. Holcomb, 29 Mich. 153.

¶ 636. Where a mortgage was given to secure a loan and there was no agreement that it was not to be paid according to its terms, evidence of subsequent statements by the mortgagee that he did not expect the mortgagor to pay the principal secured and that the mortgagor would be his heir and have the money after his death, and that he would make a will to that effect, does not show a valid agreement not to enforce the mortgage and to release it at death of the mortgagee, since even if such promise was made it was without consideration.—Trombly v. Klersy, 139 Mich. 209.

¶ 637. Damages for failure to perform a contract to procure the discharge of a mortgage cannot be claimed if it does not appear that the mortgage was foreclosed or the claimant damnified.—Rose v. Jackson, 40 Mich. 30.

Construction and effect of covenants in mortgage in general, see ante § 42.

¶ 638. An agreement executed on the same day with a mortgage, and providing for partial release on payment of proportionate value, is a part of the mortgage and must be construed with it.—People's Savings Bank v. Nebel, 92 Mich. 348.

¶ 639. An agreement to release from the operation of a mortgage a parcel of land described therein upon payment at any time of a sum equal to such parcel's value means the value at the time of the release.—People's Savings Bank v. Nebel, 92 Mich. 348.

¶ 640. Under a stipulation in a mortgage that the mortgagee will, "on demand," release from the lien of the mortgage a certain number of the lots covered thereby, "upon the payment" of a specified sum for each lot so to be released, the same to be applied upon the indebtedness secured, payment and demand must be concurrent, and the mortgagor, having made merely the payments that he was bound to make by the terms of the mortgage, cannot afterwards demand the release of a proportionate number of lots.—Commercial Bank v. Hiller, 106 Mich. 118.

¶ 641. The holder of a mortgage covering two parcels agreed in writing that when he should obtain deeds of them, i. e., on foreclosure, he would convey one of them to the mortgagor's wife; the mortgagor was to continue in possession of the other parcel until the mortgage-holder should sell it, and should meanwhile pay ten per cent interest on the face of the whole mortgage. Held, that this amounted to an agreement that in consideration of the change in security the first parcel should be released from the mortgage lien.—Clark v. Stilson, 36 Mich. 482.

¶ 642. A mortgage for $3,000 covering various property contained a stipulation that when $2,000 should be paid the mortgagee was to release a certain portion of the premises mortgaged; $1,000 was paid and nearly all the rest of the premises was released, but it afterwards became necessary to foreclose. Held, that the foreclosure could not be limited to $1,000, as the security on the premises that had not been released had not been confined to $2,000, nor had the mortgage provided for a release in any case in which it would be necessary to foreclose.—Vary v. Chatterton, 50 Mich. 541.

§ 152. Burden of proof and presumptions as to discharge or payment.

Presumptions from lapse of time, see post § 153.

¶ 643. In an action on the mortgage debt where there was some evidence tending to show that certain property had been sold under foreclosure it devolves upon plaintiff to show that there had been no such sale.—Hamilton Provident & Loan Soc. v. Northwood, 86 Mich. 315.

¶ 644. The burden of proving payment of a mortgage and notes is upon a complainant seeking redemption in equity proceedings.—Millard v. Truax, 73 Mich. 381.

¶ 645. In a foreclosure case involving the amount due upon a note and mortgage, the burden of showing payments is upon defendant, and if, as claimed, the mortgagee's books would have shown such payments, defendant should have compelled their production.—Coon v. Bouchard, 74 Mich. 486.

¶ 646. A mortgage debt may be deemed not to have been settled where it appears that the mortgagee always claimed it as an existing obligation, as the mortgagor well understood; that, although years had elapsed, no steps had been taken to procure its surrender or cancellation; and that the mortgagor had recognized its existence.—Lyon v. McDonald, 51 Mich. 435.

¶ 647. Where a note accompanying a mortgage is not produced or accounted for, it must be presumed paid, as against the party setting up the mortgage.—Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 Mich. 28.

¶ 648a. Land was mortgaged to secure three notes payable at different times. The mortgagee foreclosed to obtain payment of the first two notes and sold the land subject to the third note not yet due. Held, that it is a conclusive presumption in such a case that the price obtained is less by the amount of the remaining encumbrance than it would otherwise have been.—Shermer v. Merrill, 33 Mich. 284.

¶ 649. In a suit to remove the cloud upon complainants' title to one of several mortgaged lots, caused by the record of the mortgage, the administrator of the estate of the mortgagee, in his answer, claimed the benefit of a cross-bill, and prayed for a decree of foreclosure of the mortgage. On the hearing the mortgage, which contained a stipulation for the release of the lots as sold by the mortgagor, was put in evidence. Several of the lots had been sold, and the indorsements upon the mortgage related to said lots, and the balance of the mortgage debt was claimed by defendant to be a lien upon complainants' lot. The mortgage bond was not produced, and defendant's counsel stated to the court that it was lost. Held, that the law would presume, in the absence of proof to the contrary by the production of the bond, or other evidence repelling such presumption if the bond could not be produced, that the debt was paid when due.—Ward v. Munson, 105 Mich. 647.

¶ 650. Twenty years from maturity a mortgage will be presumed paid.—Curtis v. Goodenow, 24 Mich. 18.

¶ 651. Payment of a mortgage debt is not conclusively presumed from the lapse of many years, but there must be decisive proof that it is an existing lien to warrant a decree of foreclosure.—Cowie v. Fisher, 45 Mich. 629.

¶ 653. June 18, 1789, defendants' ancestor gave a mortgage payable Aug. 28, 1790. The mortgagee died in 1790, but administration on his estate was not granted until 1835, and the year following a bill was filed to foreclose the mortgage. Held, that the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of time was overthrown by the fact that there was no one from the death of the mortgagee until the granting of administration, who could receive payment of the money and discharge the mortgage.—Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 Mich. 178.

¶ 654. When a creditor by mortgage receives from his debtor property to near the amount of his claim, and surrenders the obligations, and the evidence leaves it in doubt whether it was the understanding of the parties that the property should be received in payment, it will be presumed in favor of a subsequent purchaser of the property mortgaged that such was the intent.—Ormsby v. Barr, 21 Mich. 474.

¶ 655. Payments upon a mortgage are presumed, in the absence of a finding, to have been made at or near the time they fell due.—Albright v. Cobb, 34 Mich. 316.

§ 154. Evidence as to payment, application, tender, and discharge.

Parol evidence as to details of obligation or payment, see Evidence, V, A.

¶ 656. A discharge upon the record of a mortgage is not an absolute bar to a foreclosure, unless there has been actual satisfaction. The facts may still be investigated. Such discharge is evidence of a high character, and sufficient to sustain the rights of all persons interested, unless the person setting up the discharged mortgage shows some accident, mistake or fraud; and this must be shown satisfactorily, and, if not, the discharge is conclusive proof of payment in favor of third persons, who have a right to look to the record for protection.—Ferguson v. Glassford, 68 Mich. 36, and see Saginaw Building & Loan Ass'n v. Tennant, 111 Mich. 515.

¶¶ 657, 658. A bill to enjoin a foreclosure at law and to compel a discharge of the mortgage was sustained where the weight of evidence tended to show that the mortgage debt had been satisfied by offsetting it against a counterclaim, and that written evidence of this fact was destroyed by fire, the mortgagors being afterwards left to deal with the mortgaged premises undisturbed for years during which the lands were being sold and built upon.—Green v. Engelmann, 39 Mich. 460.

¶ 660. The deed to the person through whom complainants derived their title was a full warranty deed, except as against the mortgage sought to be foreclosed, which was excepted from the operation of the covenants of warranty. The grantee and his family occupied the premises under said deed up to the time of his death, a period of sixteen years, after which, and up to the time of the commencement of suit, complainants remained in actual and open possession. No proof was offered to show that the grantee, or any of his family, were ever called upon, during all of that time, to pay said mortgage. Held, that, while the exception in the deed was evidence that the mortgage was not paid at the time the deed was executed, and that the grantee took the propery subject to it, yet taken in connection with the facts above stated, the presumption of payment of the mortgage arising from the nonproduction of the bond was not rebutted.—Ward v. Munson, 105 Mich. 647.

¶ 661. On a cross-bill to foreclose in a quiet title suit, the nonproduction of the mortgage bond was not sufficiently explained by the testimony of one of the counsel for defendant administrator that the witness advised said administrator, as also the executor in his lifetime, and his son after his death, to make a search for the bond, it not appearing that such search was ever made.—Ward v. Munson, 105 Mich. 647.

¶ 661a. Negotiations were had during the lifetime of the grantee for a compromise of the claim under the mortgage, and at one time the parties agreed upon the amount to be paid when the proper papers were executed, but did not agree upon what the nature of the papers should be, the grantee or his wife, one of the complainants, insisting that an administrator de bonis non should be appointed, and a conveyance made by him. Such administrator was appointed, and a contention then arose over the question of costs of those proceedings, the grantee and his wife refusing to pay the same, and the negotiations came to an end. Held, that they had a right to buy their peace, and did not thereby recognize an existing and unpaid lien.—Ward v. Munson, 105 Mich. 647.

¶ 662. A finding of payment of the earlier of two mortgage debts cannot be sustained on evidence that there were two mortgages, one for $1000 evidenced by five notes and one for two later notes of $361 and $775, and that there were payments enough to discharge more than was due on the earlier; where it appears that defendant husband, a codebtor with his wife the other mortgagee, had received possession of the $361 and the $775 notes with indorsement of full payment on the smaller and indorsements of all but the last payment on the larger, that the signatures were cut from these two notes and they were filed with his papers, that he was methodical and a man of some business though neither he nor his wife could read or write English except their own names; and where also most of the payments were made in merchandise or produce of which no regular book accounts were kept, though mortgagor's husband testified to making indorsements about the time of payment on the later mortgage at mortgagors' direction, to controvert all which mortgagors denied in an unsatisfactory way that they had ever made the later mortgage.—Wood v. Genett, 120 Mich. 222.

¶ 663. Testimony of the plaintiff's husband, her son and the son's wife that a mortgage was paid in 1890 by inclusion in a new mortgage on the land is overcome by an indorsement in 1896 on the former mortgage signed by the husband, then owner of the land, admitting that a sum was due thereon and a similar indorsement on the other mortgage acknowledging a different amount then due on it, though the husband testified that these indorsements were not read to him and that he signed them supposing that they related to the new mortgage, the holder of them having been plaintiff's brother who died in 1894.—York v. West, 147 Mich. 549.

¶ 665. The only question in a foreclosure proceeding was whether the date of a receipt had been changed from April 1, 1874, to Sept. 23, 1871, and it was determined from inspection and from facts bearing upon the probabilities that the date had not been so changed, and that a payment had been made at the apparent date of the receipt which ought to have been credited upon the mortgage.—Hazen v. Phillips, 39 Mich. 667.

¶ 666. Evidence respecting a mortgage held by defendant under assignment held sufficient to show that he paid it as part of the consideration for a deed by complainant to him expressing a nominal consideration, they being son and father respectively and the deed having been made on agreement that it should be paid out of the receipts from working two parcels of land together, though defendant's son claimed that he was driven away and not allowed to work the land as agreed.—Flynn v. Flynn, 68 Mich. 20.

¶ 667. Upon the evidence under a bill for foreclosure it was held that the note and mortgage had been paid, though the holder denied that an indorsement of payment was by him, where if he was believed perjury must be imputed to four other witnesses and forgery to some one.—Baird v. Abbey, 73 Mich. 347.

¶ 668. A mortgage made by the owner's father and sheriff's deed on foreclosure thereof decreed cancelled on the ground as shown by the evidence, in addition to other reasons, that the obligation had been paid by a conveyance of land to the mortgagee.—Fyfe v. English, 116 Mich. 21.

¶ 669. A decree dismissing a foreclosure bill, on the ground that defendants had established their claim of payment, was affirmed upon a review of the evidence in which defendant's overbalanced plaintiff's.—Uhl v. Faas, 115 Mich. 377.

¶ 670. Evidence held sufficient to support a decree canceling and discharging a mortgage from record.—Williams v. Hammond, 182 Mich. 285.

¶ 672. An alleged settlement of the debts secured by the mortgages sought to be foreclosed was not shown where a writing was introduced, signed by both parties, stating that all differences had been settled in full between them, and all claims and counterclaims of every kind and description, the same as if therein particularly described and mentioned, but where complainant and the attorneys for both parties testified that such mortgages were not embraced in such settlement, and produced a memorandum of items entirely apart from such mortgages, which they testified was the basis of such settlement, and where a note of defendants held by complainant was surrendered, but defendants did not receive such mortgages and the bonds they secured, nor demand them or their discharge.—People's Savings Bank v. Galvin, 81 Mich. 11.

¶ 673. Where a mortgage securing the sum of $1,500 bearing the condition that it was to stand discharged when the mortgagor's indebtedness to the mortgagee was reduced to a sum less than $3,500, the evidence was held to show that at no time had the mortgagor's indebtedness been reduced below that sum.—Commercial State Savings Bank v. Stevens, 180 Mich. 35.

¶ 674. On a bill by a father against his son to cancel two mortgages which were given by the father to procure funds for the defense of the son, who was charged with murder, and to procure his release, and which were, some time after the pardon of the son, bought by the son with money earned by working the mortgaged farm of the father, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that a contract was made pursuant to which the son agreed, in consideration of his being allowed to work the farm for his own benefit, out of the proceeds thereof to pay and secure the discharge of the mortgages.—Swartz v. Swartz, 194 Mich. 617.

¶ 675. Complainant alleged in her bill that she went to a notary's office to execute a power of attorney to defendant to enable him to collect a certain mortgage debt for her; that she held two mortgages against defendant; that he fraudulently presented at the notary's a discharge of the two mortgages, and an assignment of another; and that complainant, being without her glasses, executed these papers, thinking they were the power of attorney. Defendant, the notary and his son, and one Annis, who was present at the time, denied the truth of these allegations, and stated that the transaction was one in which defendant was paying off the two mortgages and taking an assignment of the third. Held, that complainant had failed to establish her allegations, and the bill should be dismissed.—Watrous v. Kenyon, 156 Mich. 404.

¶ 676. In the foreclosure of a mortgage by the mortgagee's administrator the evidence showed that a part of the payments made by the mortgagor were indorsed on the note; that the mortgagor held receipts for some payments not so indorsed; and that there remained some seven hundred dollars due as shown by such indorsements and receipts. The last receipt given for one hundred dollars purported on its face to be for payment in full. The ten-year-old boy of the mortgagor testified that he was present at said last payment and the mortgagee agreed to hunt up the papers and have the mortgage discharged. Held, the evidence was not sufficient to prove payment by defendant of the full mortgage debt.—Chamberlain v. O'Leary, 161 Mich. 670.

¶ 677. Evidence held not to show that a tender sufficient to discharge the lien of mortgage had been made; where it was always conditioned on having a title clear of tax liens and was made prior to another suit which did not claim it.—McLelland v. Cook, 94 Mich. 528.

¶ 678. In a particular case it is proper to decide upon the evidence that a loan made by complainant to the owner of land under and agreement that it should be applied on a mortgage upon the land was so applied, rather than that a part was in fact applied on a chattel mortgage held by the same mortgagee, if the latter contention be supported by evidence no stronger than hearsay.—Lewis v. Noble, 93 Mich. 345.

¶ 678a. The evidence in support of a tender should be very clear and satisfactory, and should place the other party distinctly in the wrong where the discharge of a mortgage is demanded on the ground thereof.—Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 149; Engle v. Hall, 45 Mich. 57.

¶ 679. One who, being entitled to do so, redeems from a statutory foreclosure sale, is entitled to be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights in the premises, with a lien thereunder to the extent of the mortgage interest.—Moore v. Smith, 95 Mich. 71.

¶ 680. Persons equitably entitled to land on paying a mortgage taken in good faith by another should be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights against the mortgagor.—Warner v. Hall, 53 Mich. 371.

¶ 681. A court of equity will not subrogate to the rights of a mortgagee one who, having no title or interest in the premises, has voluntarily paid the mortgage.—Smith v. Austin, 9 Mich. 465.

¶ 682. A stranger to the title cannot become subrogated to the mortgagee's rights by paying the whole or any part of the mortgage.—Desot v. Ross, 95 Mich. 81.

¶ 683. Where, as between two mortgagors of joint property, it is the duty of one to pay it, but the other pays on condition that it shall inure to his benefit, the latter is entitled to indemnity through the mortgage.—Laylin v. Knox, 41 Mich. 40.

¶ 685. Defendants accepted a deed of premises which recited that the grantee should assume and pay specified incumbrances. They conveyed the premises to complainant. Defendants failed to pay the mortgages and complainant, to prevent foreclosure, paid them off and took an assignment from the mortgagee. Held, complainant had the benefit of the mortgages and could enforce them within the scope of the powers which they gave to his assignor.—Kollen v. Sooy, 172 Mich. 214.

¶ 686. Where, in order to save costs, a mortgage was released as to some land already encumbered to more than its value and under foreclosure, it can hardly be said that the security of those who claimed subrogation was decreased.—Perrett v. Yardsdorfer, 37 Mich. 596.

¶ 687. Complainant's husband bought a lot from defendant's wife and assumed payment of a mortgage thereon securing a note endorsed by defendant. Upon foreclosure of the mortgage a deficiency was reported and a few days thereafter complainant's husband conveyed to her another lot and later they gave a mortgage thereon to secure the deficiency upon the first foreclosure and $700 used to pay off an existing mortgage on the lot. Upon foreclosure of this mortgage, defendant became the purchaser and the sale was duly confirmed. Complainant brought action to redeem by paying the $700 borrowed, on the ground that by the foreclosure sale defendant's debt was paid by her and hence she was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee for reimbursement. Held, that the claim showed want of equity since she was surety for her husband who had assumed to pay the debt.—Dunning v. Gaige, 137 Mich. 122.

¶ 688. Where A. is fraudulently persuaded by B. to advance money to him to discharge a mortgage by the promise to give security upon the land for the loan, which promise is not fulfilled, A. is subrogated to the mortgagee's rights.—White v. Newhall, 68 Mich. 641.

¶ 689. Complainant was fraudulently induced to advance money to defendant upon certain worthless land as security and the money was used to pay off a mortgage upon land received by the mortgagor in exchange for the land mortgaged. Held that complainant was subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in the mortgage discharged by the money so received.—Coulter v. Minion, 139 Mich. 200.

¶ 690. The purchaser during the pendency of a suit in aid of execution, of the exempt homestead interest in the premises in question, who redeemed from a mortgage foreclosure against the entire premises and paid the full amount, was entitled to subrogation to the extent of the amount so paid, as against a purchaser at the execution sale.—Wolcott v. Tweddle, 133 Mich. 389.

¶ 691. Parties who, acting in good faith and under color of authority, have lent money to an estate, under security that turns out to be invalid, for the purpose of paying a mortgage binding the estate, may be subrogated to such mortgage as if it were in force and assigned to them.—Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Aspinwall, 48 Mich. 238; Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Aspinwall, 45 Mich. 330.

¶ 692. Where a person purchased mortgaged land to which he thought he was obtaining a good title, but which was in truth defective, after he had paid the mortgage he became the equitable owner thereof and could enforce it as a lien on the land, when ejected.—Taylor v. Roniger, 147 Mich. 99.

¶ 693. The fact that a mortgagee had foreclosed his mortgage did not affect his right to subrogation, to a mortgage paid off by the loan he made and prior by operation of estoppel to a first mortgage where such action was taken in the belief that the first mortgage had been paid, induced by misrepresentation of the mortgagor.—Palmer v. Sharp, 112 Mich. 420.

¶ 694. A mortgagor who had been secretly married, and whose wife did not join in the mortgage, used part of the proceeds to pay off mortgages existing before the marriage. In an action to determine the rights of the wife, the mortgagor having died, held that the mortgagee was subrogated to the rights under the former mortgages and that she was entitled to dower in the surplus arising after the amount of such prior mortgages had been paid.—Hall v. Marshall, 139 Mich. 123.

¶ 695. Where third persons pay mortgages against an estate and certain legacies which are a charge thereon and receive certain conveyances to portions of the estate through an innocent misunderstanding by all the parties as to the condition of titles, it being the belief that the land was held in fee by those who made the conveyances when they were only life tenants, such persons may be subrogated to the amount of the liens against the estate which they paid, less the value of benefits received therefrom, but the subrogation must be in lieu of what was received through the mistake.—Stroh v. O'Hearn, 176 Mich. 164.

¶ 696. A life tenant, who makes a payment out of her own money on an overdue mortgage given by the testator, under the erroneous belief that she is the holder of the fee, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee, to the extent of the payment, deducting interest for the duration of the life tenancy, as against the remaindermen, since the latter would have been bound to pay the mortgage to protect their estate.—Detroit & North Michigan Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Oram, 200 Mich. 485.

¶ 697. Where a mortgagee takes a mortgage in ignorance of the fact that the mortgagor is only a life tenant and not the owner of the fee, and part of the proceeds of the loan are used in paying an earlier mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled, as against the remaindermen, to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee to the extent of the amount of the loan used to satisfy the mortgage, there being no intervening incumbrances or equities.—Detroit & Northern Michigan Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Oram, 200 Mich. 485.

¶ 698. Where land is deeded to secure the repayment of money borrowed from the grantee to pay off existing encumbrances, and it is applied to that purpose, the grantee, if the deed is adjudged invalid, can claim subrogation to the rights of the mortgagees whose liens have been discharged; and he would be entitled to a decree of foreclosure against the land so deeded as security.—Lockwood v. Bassett, 49 Mich. 546.

¶ 699. A mortgagor's agreement to pay a certain sum to his daughter who advanced a like amount to pay an instalment of interest on the mortgage stated that the design was "to secure the payment of said money, it being for money paid by her as aforesaid." Held, that such agreement did not entitle the payee to the lien of the mortgage to the amount of the interest so paid.—Desot v. Ross, 95 Mich. 81.

¶ 700. On a judgment for a third note not due when the foreclosure took place for the other two of the notes secured by mortgage and the payment of the judgment by the mortgagor, he would be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights so as to obtain repayment, it being presumed that the foreclosure price was lessened by the amount of the unpaid and outstanding third note.—Shermer v. Merrill, 33 Mich. 284.

¶ 701. Where property owned by two partners is subject to a mortgage, and as between the two it is the duty of one to discharge it, and the other pays the debt on condition that the mortgage shall inure to his benefit, an equity arises in his favor entitling him to indemnity through the mortgage.—Laylin v. Knox, 41 Mich. 40.

¶ 701a. A purchaser at an administratrix' sale of land pursuant to leave of court, to pay a mortgage and other debts, is presumed to know that the administratrix, who was the widow of the deceased, had no right to dispose of the homestead rights of minor children, and is not in position to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.—Gerber v. Upton, 123 Mich. 605.

§ 156. ——On redemption or payment by junior lienor.

Redemption in general, see post IX.

Subrogation for redemption money, see Foreclosure § 191.

¶ 702. A second mortgagee is entitled to redeem from a prior mortgage and have the benefit of an assignment of the mortgage.—Lamb v. Jeffrey, 41 Mich. 719.

¶ 703. In order of time there were three mortgages on land. One H., as agent for B., advanced money to discharge mortgage number 2, and took as security mortgage number 3 upon the same property. H. had acted in the same capacity for mortgagee number 2, whose lien was discharged, and had at that time been assured by the assignee of mortgage number 1, which was then of record, that such mortgage was paid, and would be promptly discharged; and H. believed that he was acquiring for his principal, B., a first lien upon the land, none having been created since the prior transaction. Held, that B. was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of mortgagee number 2 whose lien he had satisfied, and therefore to take precedence over the assignee of the original mortgage, whose misrepresentation estopped him from claiming priority as to mortgagee number 2.—Palmer v. Sharp, 112 Mich. 420.

Discharge by change in form of debt, see ante § 146.

¶ 704. A creditor named in a trust mortgage as one to be secured thereby if certain conditions were met, among them the substitution of new notes for outstanding indebtedness so as to consolidate it, having refused to accept the provisions of the mortgage has no interest therein, which may be the subject of subrogation affording equities on foreclosure.—Gillam v. Barnes, 123 Mich. 119, per Moon, J., others concurring in the result.

¶ 705. K. paid off and discharged the first two out of three mortgages on certain property, and then took a new mortgage for the amount paid. Held, that this was subsequent to the one left unpaid, and that K. was not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the first two mortgagees.—Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 Mich. 81.

¶ 706. One who advances money to a married woman to pay off an existing mortgage and to receive a new mortgage is entitled to be subrogated to the original mortgagee on discovering that the borrower does not have title to the land in question notwithstanding the land is her homestead.—Sproal v. Larsen, 138 Mich. 142.

¶ 707. An administratrix who petitions the probate court to be allowed to make a third mortgage for $1,500 and subsequently is authorized to make a mortgage for $3,000 on the same petition on a showing that she can pay off the two prior mortgages amounting to $1,700 and have the balance for the purposes specified in the petition is subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagees upon a subsequent holding of the mortgage void.—Russell v. Wheeler, 129 Mich. 41.

¶ 708. A first mortgage was foreclosed in chancery without making the second mortgagee a party. The land was bid in by the first mortgagees, one of whom conveyed his interest to his co-mortgagee, and he in turn quitclaimed the land to the mortgagor, who had remained in possession upon an understanding giving him an opportunity to secure money to redeem. The consideration was $2,500 due upon the first mortgage, $2,250 of which the mortgagor secured by mortgaging the land to a loan association, which supposed from the report of its attorney, who had examined an abstract of the title to the land, that it was securing a first mortgage. Held, that to avoid letting the second mortgage into a priority not intended in equity the making of the deed to the mortgagor and the mortgage to the loan association should be regarded as one transaction, and that the association is entitled to be subrogated to the rights which the first mortgagee had when the loan was made, at which time the second mortgagee had the right to redeem from the foreclosure of the first mortgage, or to foreclose his own mortgage, subject to the lien of the first mortgage.—Draper v. Ashley, 104 Mich. 527.

§ 158. ——To relieve person prevented from redeeming.

¶ 709. Assignment of foreclosed mortgage may be compelled in equity in behalf of person who had been entitled to redeem, but who had been fraudulently prevented from raising money necessary for tender.—Moore v. Smith, 95 Mich. 71.

§ 159. Penalty for failure to discharge.

Penalty for refusal to discharge, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11745.
Action against mortgagee for refusal to discharge, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11745.

¶ 710. How. St. § 5704, in imposing a penalty for neglecting to discharge a mortgage "after full performance of the condition," means so far as the condition is legal and binding; the amount of consideration may therefore be disputed.—Wilber v. Peirce, 56 Mich. 169.

¶ 711. The purpose of the penalty imposed by statute for refusing to discharge a mortgage on tender of the amount due is not only to indemnify the mortgagee for his trouble but to act as a punishment.—Engle v. Hall, 45 Mich. 57.

¶ 712. The statutory penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage cannot be recovered of one who has no interest in the mortgage or the debt, and has no means of knowing himself to be in default for not giving a discharge.—Murphy v. Fleming, 69 Mich. 185.

¶ 713. The statutory penalty is imposed only for a wrongful refusal, and not for one made in good faith by advice of counsel and under a mistake as to one's legal rights.—Myer v. Hart, 40 Mich. 517.

¶ 714. Counsel's advice may show good faith absolving a mortgagee from the penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage.—Myer v. Hart, 40 Mich. 517.

¶ 715. The statutory penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage (How. St. § 5704) will not be imposed if the mortgagee refused in good faith and in reliance upon supposed legal rights.—Parkes v. Parker, 57 Mich. 57.

¶ 716. The penalty is not imposed when there has been an honest and reasonable difference between the parties as to their right.—Burrows v. Bangs, 34 Mich. 304.

¶ 717. The court declined to impose the statutory penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage on tender of the amount due or to order the cancellation of the lien, where the case was such that the mortgagee might in good faith have been mistaken as to what he had a right to exact.—Canfield v. Conkling, 41 Mich. 371.

¶ 718. The statutory penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage should not be enforced where the refusal was not manifestly unreasonable and the mortgagee honestly believes that his claim is not satisfied.—Huxford v. Eslow, 53 Mich. 179.

¶ 719. An instruction in substance that the honesty of a mortgagee in believing that the mortgage has not been satisfied is a sufficient defense to an action for the penalty for not discharging it if it has been, in an action for the statutory penalty for failing to discharge a satisfied mortgage, was as favorable as the defendant was entitled to.—Wilber v. Peirce, 56 Mich. 169.

¶ 720. Where payments of annual interest upon a mortgage have been received shortly after due, with the understanding between the parties that they should be accepted in full satisfaction of the yearly interest, a subsequent assignee, who purchased after maturity of the mortgage, is liable to the statutory penalty for refusing to release the mortgage upon a tender of the amount due computed upon that basis, although the tender was insufficient by strict computation, applying the payments at large.—Barnard v. Harrison, 30 Mich. 8.

¶ 721. A mortgagee made an irregular attempt to foreclose by advertisement, and his notice, which was imperfect, was withdrawn after a single publication; held, that he could not demand the attorney fee provided for in case of foreclosure, and having declined the tender of the full amount due because such fee was not paid, and having refused to discharge the mortgage, he was liable to the statutory penalty.—Collar v. Harrison, 30 Mich. 66.

¶ 722. One who gives an invalid mortgage has nevertheless the right to pay it off, and consequently the right to have it discharged; its invalidity therefore cannot be pleaded as a defense to an action for the penalty for refusing to discharge it.—Wilber v. Peirce, 56 Mich. 169.

¶ 723. The statutory penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage is recoverable in equity on a bill to redeem.—Cowles v. Marble, 37 Mich. 158.

¶ 724. Equity has jurisdiction upon a bill seeking to have a mortgage which constitutes an apparent lien on complainant's title declared satisfied.—Ormsby v. Barr, 22 Mich. 80.

¶ 725. A bill filed to compel discharge of a mortgage, and to collect the statutory penalty, should be treated as one to remove cloud from title, if the mortgage has merely the effect of such a cloud.—Bush v. Freer, 91 Mich. 315.

¶ 726. A grantee of premises covered by a mortgage which is alleged to have been paid may maintain a bill against the mortgagee for its discharge without proving any other interest in the premises than the grant from the mortgagor. If the mortgage has been paid, the mortgagee will not be allowed to dispute the mortgagor's title or that of his grantee as a reason for refusing to discharge it.—Ormsby v. Barr, 22 Mich. 80.

¶ 727. A bill for discharge of mortgage on ground of tender of amount due was retained, where tender was found insufficient, as a bill to redeem under general prayer for relief, the bill having offered to pay whatever might be found due.—Dayton v. Dayton, 68 Mich. 437.

¶ 728. In a suit on a bill to obtain a discharge of a mortgage a decree should be given as prayed, where the only reasons for refusal to discharge urged by the real party in interest related to the land itself and not to his separate interest as owner of the mortgage, and where the mortgage was in fact paid, though an assignment had been made to harass complainant.—Bush v. Freer, 91 Mich. 315.

¶ 729. An outlawed mortgage given before complainant bought the encumbered land by one who then owned an equitable interest, and of which complainant had no actual knowledge, will be discharged in chancery without proof of actual payment.—Kingman v. Sinclair, 80 Mich. 427.

¶ 730. The fact that a judgment has been recovered on a note secured by mortgage is no answer to a suit by the mortgagors to have the mortgage set aside on showing that the note has been paid.—Rickle v. Dow, 39 Mich. 91.

¶ 731. Where the discharge of a mortgage was sought on the ground that payment had been tendered, the court declined to consider the question of usury, but held that complainant must abide by his tender.—Canfield v. Conkling, 41 Mich. 371.

§ 162. Reinstatement and revival of lien.

Necessity of verification of bill to reinstate discharged mortgage, see Equity ¶ 234.

Restoring discharged mortgage to defeat dower, necessity of resort to equity, see Dower ¶ 125.

¶ 732. Where a mortgage has been discharged from the record through mistake, equity will restore it and give it its original priority as a lien, when the rights of innocent third parties will not be affected.—Ferguson v. Glassford, 68 Mich. 36.

¶ 733. A mortgagee discharged mortgages on certain lands in consideration of a deed of a portion of them which he understood to be otherwise unencumbered, but on which, in fact, an attachment of which he had no notice had been levied since the mortgages were given, though the land had not been sold on execution. Held, that it was within the jurisdiction of equity to set aside the discharge; and that the attachment creditor was not deprived of rights thereby, but the equities were adjusted between the parties. —French v. De Bow, 38 Mich. 708.

¶ 734. Where a discharge of mortgage is given on the receipt of less than is due, by reason of an erroneous computation of interest, it is not a matter of course for equity to interfere afterwards to correct the error; and it will be done only when equities appear.—Wright v. Garrison, 40 Mich. 50.

¶ 735. Where a circumstance appeared in the case which would render it inequitable for the holder of the mortgage to collect the full amount of interest, a court of equity, irrespective of strict legal rights, will decline to interfere on his behalf to give relief because an error was made in the computation of the amount of interest due.—Wright v. Garrison, 40 Mich. 50.

¶ 736. A party seeking to restore and foreclose a mortgage that has been discharged by mistake and without any fault of the mortgagor cannot have it reinstated to secure any extortionate sum made up by semi-annual computations of compound interest, even where the mortgage discharged was made up in that way and had been given to take up a previous mortgage.—Sheldon v. Holmes, 58 Mich. 138.

¶ 737. A mortgage debt having been extinguished by a deed of the premises to the mortgagee, who contracted to reconvey the remainder after satisfying the indebtedness out of the property, it could be revived as a lien upon the property only by a mutual rescission of the deed and contract, which would imply a reconveyance so far as to put all parties in statu quo, or by a new subsequent agreement founded upon a new and sufficient consideration; it would be idle to talk of the abandonment of the contract under the circumstances.—McCabe v. Farnsworth, 27 Mich. 52.

¶ 738. Where, after foreclosure, the mortgagor's title turns out to have been invalid, and he, taking advantage of a curative act, obtains a confirmatory patent from the state, the mortgagee may have his lien reinstated in equity.—Toms v. Boyes, 50 Mich. 352.

¶ 739. A release with a proper acknowledgment is not open to impeachment of the certificate of acknowledgment except by clear, convincing, and satisfactory proof that it is false and fraudulent.—Saginaw Building & Loan Ass'n v. Tennant, 111 Mich. 515.

¶ 740. Upon a bill to restore a mortgage the discharge of which has, it is alleged, been procured by fraud, the fraud is not established by facts that raise the inference of full payment.—Beal v. Congdon, 75 Mich. 77.

¶ 741. A discharge of mortgage obtained from a dying mortgagee was set aside on appeal upon the grounds of mental incapacity and undue influence and the cause was remanded for foreclosure.—Worthington v. Major, 94 Mich. 325.

¶ 742. One whose son had executed to him a mortgage devised it to the son on condition that the latter should pay $400 to his sister. By arrangement the sister gave the executor a receipt "in full for the legacy" to her on his surrendering a note of similar amount against her husband, and the son gave the executor his note for the amount that he was to pay his sister together with $20 due from him to the executor, the latter agreeing to discharge the mortgage. Held, that the executor, on the son's failure to pay his note, could not revive and foreclose the mortgage to enforce payment of the sister's legacy, since that was discharged.—DeCoo v. Woodworth, 96 Mich. 362.

¶ 743. A conveyance by a husband to his wife and also a subsequent conveyance by the wife were set aside in an action by the husband's heirs. The second grantee had given a mortgage on the land, the proceeds of which were used to pay off a mortgage on a parcel of land conveyed to his grantor. Held, that the latter lien should be revived in favor of the heirs who should be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee. —Markillie v. Allen, 120 Mich. 360.

¶ 743a. Mortgages discharged by a trustee out of the proceeds of land unlawfully sold by him should be revived in favor of the defeated purchaser, the trustee's deed being annulled and the right of subrogation established.—Curran v. Bartlett, 165 Mich. 205.

¶ 743b. A bill to revive mortgages will lie where they were released on the execution of a new mortgage, supposed to have been signed by the wife of the mortgagor but in fact forged as to her name, and where the new mortgage was foreclosed and the property bid in upon the belief that the claim of forgery was a pretense but afterward the claim of the wife was legally established as superior to the foreclosure.—Linn v. Linn, 122 Mich. 130.

IX. REDEMPTION AND ACCOUNTING.

§ 163. Equity and right to redeem in general.

[Note. The distinction between the common law equity of redeeming from the mortgage by paying the debt according to the condition and the statutory or decretal right of redemption from foreclosure decree has been observed. Redemption from foreclosure decrees is treated in Foreclosure, VII, and the equity of redemption, proper, is treated here.]

¶ 745. Equity is jealous of all contracts between mortgagor and mortgagee by which the equity of redemption is to be shortened or cut off.—Batty v. Snook, 5 Mich. 231.

¶ 746. An agreement contemporaneous with or subsequent to a transaction that is in effect a mortgage is void if it stipulates to give up the equity of redemption on default.—Batty v. Snook, 5 Mich. 231.

¶ 747. The equity of redemption is not an equitable, but is practically a legal estate.—Gorham v. Arnold, 22 Mich. 247; Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

¶ 748. The equity of redemption is an interest in land such as can only be conveyed by writing.—Cowles v. Marble, 37 Mich. 158; Rawdon v. Dodge, 40 Mich. 697.

¶ 749. The equity of redemption is an interest entirely distinct from that of the mortgage, and the mortgagee acquires no interest in it except by foreclosure.—Crow v. Conant, 90 Mich. 247.

¶ 750. A mortgagee cannot transfer title to any part of the mortgaged premises free and clear of the right to redeem.—Gorham v. Arnold, 22 Mich. 247.

¶ 751. A second mortgagee's right to redeem a prior mortgage cannot be cut off or prejudiced by arrangements between the mortgagor and the holder of the first mortgage for an extension of the time in which to pay it.—Sager v. Tupper, 35 Mich. 134.

To redeem from statutory foreclosure, see post § 165.
Bills to redeem and procedure thereunder, see post §§ 170-177.
Bills to redeem from defective foreclosures, see Foreclosure, V.

¶ 752. Relief in equity against forfeiture is founded upon the principle that the possessor of a legal right shall not be allowed to use it to work oppression or injustice; and when a mortgagor not guilty of laches brings himself within this principle, and it can be applied without injustice to others, the court should administer the proper relief.—Sandford v. Flint, 24 Mich. 26.

¶ 753. Courts of equity cannot extend the time for redemption on a statutory foreclosure where redemption within the time limited has been prevented by accident and misfortune, or by an unavoidable mental and physical disorder.—Cameron v. Adams, 31 Mich. 426.

¶ 754. The right to redeem from a mortgage executed prior to 1843 could not affect the right of possession, and could only be asserted by bill.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

¶ 755. The remedy of one who by fraud of the holder was induced to rely on a promise of money to redeem until it was too late, whereupon the promisor bought in the mortgages and liens which he holds, is to redeem from such holder.—Wilson v. Eggleston, 27 Mich. 257.

¶ 756. Where one whose land had been sold in statutory foreclosure was induced by the acts and conversation of one who had bought the land from the foreclosure purchaser to believe that the title had been taken for his own benefit, and to give up efforts to get from other quarters the money to redeem until it was too late, he is entitled to a decree for a redemption, and an accounting.—Newman v. Locke, 66 Mich. 27.

¶ 757. Where, pending the year of redemption from a statutory foreclosure, the owner of the equity of redemption is induced by the acts and statements of the foreclosure holders and of their grantee to give up efforts to raise the money in time, and to believe that he will be allowed further time, the title will be considered as taken for his benefit.—Newman v. Locke, 66 Mich. 27.

¶ 758. Where the mortgagor of property has been induced to refrain from redeeming from foreclosure sale by fraudulent conduct and misrepresentation, equity will interpose and grant relief by extending the time of redemption, but, in order to warrant the interference of equity, fraud must be clearly proved.—Palmer v. Palmer, 194 Mich. 79.

¶ 759. Transactions between the parties with reference to a sale by the defendant to the complainant of a mortgage interest cannot have any force as the foundation for a bill to redeem from the mortgage.—Harwood v. Underwood, 28 Mich. 427.

¶ 760. The president of a bank, which had foreclosed a mortgage on complainant's property for more than the amount legally due, could not, by refusing to furnish complainant information as to how much was actually due upon the mortgage, defeat her of her right to redeem, nor by paying over more than was legally due to the bank compel her to pay him a like sum, where upon his agreement that, if complainant would send him $100 before the period of exemption expired, he would redeem the property for the amount legally due and sell it to complainant on contract, complainant sent the $100 as agreed, and the president used the money together with his own funds in purchasing the property; since equity will not permit him to take advantage of his own wrong.—Cusick v. Spencer, 149 Mich. 434.

¶ 761. Where a mortgage of indemnity was foreclosed at law before the mortgagee had been damnified the mortgagor was held entitled to redeem.—Thurston v. Prentiss, W. 529.

§ 165. ——To redeem from statutory foreclosure.

¶ 762. A bill to redeem is the appropriate remedy where the foreclosure is by advertisement.—Dodge v. Northrop, 85 Mich. 243.

¶ 763. An offer to redeem held not indispensable to a bill for relief from a statutory foreclosure.—Sanford v. Flint, 24 Mich. 26.

¶ 764. A wife's homestead and dower rights in land mortgaged by the husband before the marriage and afterwards occupied by the parties as a homestead entitle her to redeem from statutory foreclosure a mortgage executed by her husband, and to have the benefit of an assignment of the mortgage.—Moore v. Smith, 95 Mich. 71.

¶ 765. Where a mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement and the real owner was not made a party, and the mortgagee by a bill in chancery sought to quiet title as against the claim of the owner, and the latter by cross-bill asked leave to redeem upon the ground that before the equity of redemption expired he had offered to redeem, held, that a decree providing for redemption was proper.—Northern Michigan Building & Loan Ass'n v. Fors, 190 Mich. 69.

Laches, delay and estoppel, see post § 167.

¶ 766. To bar the equity of redemption the mortgage should be foreclosed by advertisement or in equity.—Comstock v. Howard, W. 110.

¶ 767. While a statutory foreclosure sale satisfies the debt and thus far releases the personal obligation it does not so far extinguish the mortgage that a person entitled to redeem and redeeming thereunder is not protected; and accordingly a defective foreclosure is no bar to a bill by a wife to redeem and have homestead assigned to her after statutory time to redeem from foreclosure.—Moore v. Smith, 95 Mich. 71.

¶ 768. The right of a second mortgagee to redeem from the foreclosure of the prior mortgage is barred if he allows the foreclosure to become absolute.—Gantz v. Toles, 40 Mich. 725.

¶ 769. The mere assumption of a mortgagee, evidenced by his giving a deed, that he has title in fee, cannot bar the equity of redemption; neither can an occasional occupation under such deed, or any occupation short of a continuous and notorious one adverse to the right to redeem.—Humphrey v. Hurd, 29 Mich. 44.

¶ 770. A mortgagee cannot avoid redemption on bill in equity to redeem by setting up that he and the mortgagor have made false representations to third parties.—Crawford v. Osmun, 70 Mich. 561.

¶ 771. Where a second mortgagee asked to redeem in equity, and more than twenty years had elapsed since the right to redeem accrued, it was held the right was barred by lapse of time, whether the premises had been occupied under the first mortgage for twenty years or not.—Cook v. Finkler, 9 Mich. 131.

¶ 772. Where no steps have been taken to redeem a mortgage for nearly forty years after its maturity, and more than thirty after an open attempt to foreclose, it requires a very strong showing to authorize a bill to redeem.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

¶ 773. A delay of seven years is not such laches as will defeat a mortgagor's right to redeem, where neither the mortgagee nor his assignee, treated the mortgagor frankly and openly, but withheld from her the true facts in regard to the payments made upon her mortgage, and, knowing, of her claims, acted in open hostility and defiance thereof and were themselves in no way misled.—Cusick v. Spencer, 149 Mich. 434.

¶ 774. A wife in 1892, as surety for her husband, gave an absolute deed as security for a mortgage executed previously by him. In 1896 the husband, without authority, assumed as his wife's agent to treat the deed as a payment on the mortgage debt. Held, the wife was not, in 1906, precluded by laches from bringing a bill to have the deed declared a mortgage and to redeem.—Miller v. Peter, 158 Mich. 336.

¶ 775. Plaintiff's father bought land and had the title thereto put in the name of his brother who mortgaged same to defendant bank. At the death of his father plaintiff was twelve years old and for sixteen years was familiar with the facts about his father's property. Upon becoming of age he was advised as to his interest in the land in question but did not start suit until he was twenty-eight years old. Held, he was barred by laches from the right to redeem.—Beidler v. City Bank of Battle Creek, 172 Mich. 381.

¶ 776. Fourteen years' delay in seeking to redeem from statutory foreclosure claimed to be void because including in sum for which land was sold an attorney fee and certain unpaid taxes, held gross laches.—Emmons v. Van Zee, 78 Mich. 171.

¶ 777. A mortgagee whose fraudulent conduct in hindering the raising of the necessary money has prevented a tender of the amount due him is estopped in a suit brought against him to redeem from a statutory foreclosure and to compel an assignment of the mortgage from setting up the want of tender.—Moore v. Smith, 95 Mich. 71.

§ 168. Amount and terms of payment to redeem and offsets and deductions.

Method of computation of interest, see also post ¶ 819.

Valuation of mortgage for tax assessment as evidence of amount of interest due thereon, see Foreclosure ¶ 362.

Arbitration of amount necessary to redeem, see also Arbitration ¶ 37.

¶ 778. The redemption of a mortgage will not be decreed on any terms other than the payment of the mortgagee's claim.—Cowles v. Marble, 37 Mich. 158.

¶ 779. A., the holder of the first of five mortgages on a piece of land, took proceedings in chancery to foreclose it, making all the subsequent mortgagees parties except D., the last. Decree for the sale was obtained, and a sale made at which B., the administrator of C., the second mortgagee, became the purchaser for a few dollars over the amount of the first mortgage. B. bought in his own name, but stated at the time that he bought to protect the interests of the C. estate. He then filed his bill against D., setting up all the facts and praying that D. be decreed to redeem by paying the amount of both the A. and C. mortgages and costs, or be foreclosed. D. filed a cross-bill, claiming the right to redeem on paying the amount of B.'s bid, with interest. The mortgaged premises were shown to be worth at least the amount of the A. and C. mortgages. Held, that D. could not be permitted to redeem without paying the amount of both.—Baker v. Pierson, 6 Mich. 522.

¶ 780. A claim that complainant's husband, who attended to the business for her, knew the facts as well as the president of the bank, which had foreclosed a mortgage on complainant's property for more than the amount legally due, and which land such president bought at such sale, and that therefore complainant on redemption was bound to pay such president the amount he paid the bank, is not supported by the facts where, though her husband knew that payments had been made upon the mortgage and the amount of them, the computation and just what made up the total amount for which the place was sold were arbitrarily withheld from him by the bank and its president.—Cusick v. Spencer, 149 Mich. 434.

¶ 781. Where a bill to enforce the discharge of a mortgage had been filed before the time for redemption had expired, but after foreclosure was begun, and it was held that the complainant mortgagor was not entitled to a discharge, he was allowed to redeem on paying the amount of the debt with interest at the stipulated rate, and the costs of foreclosure, with interest, but without the attorney fee provided for in the mortgage.—Parks v. Allen, 42 Mich. 482.

¶ 782. Complainant was the owner of a parcel of land covered by two mortgages, the first of which also covered two adjoining parcels, and both mortgages were being foreclosed. Defendant under an agreement with complainant that if he would bid in her land at the foreclosure sale under the second mortgage and also bid the amount of the mortgage on the three parcels she would repay him, became the purchaser at both sales. Complainant on bill to redeem sues to compel him to convey to her the parcel purchased under the second mortgage. Held, that in order to have such conveyance she must repay him the amount paid for the three parcels in which case she would be subrogated to his rights in all the parcels. —Dayton v. Stahl, 132 Mich. 360.

¶ 783. A grantor redeeming property conveyed by deed, which is absolute in form only, should be allowed credit for the purchase-price of a part of the land that has been sold by his grantee.—Clark v. Landon, 90 Mich. 83.

¶ 784. Where redemption was decreed as against a party in possession under an irregular statutory foreclosure, which he supposed to be regular, and under which title he had made improvements and paid taxes on the land, such taxes were allowed to him on the accounting, but he was charged with rents and profits.—Millard v. Truax, 73 Mich. 381.

¶ 785. Defendant Miller and his wife owned, separately, each four lots. Mrs. Miller was in jail for failure to pay a fine of two hundred dollars. She told her husband that if he would raise two hundred dollars to pay her fine she would deed him absolutely her four lots. Miller went to one Cronks and borrowed $270, on security of the eight lots, deeding him his four lots, and out of the money paid the said fine. In order to save expense, Miller had his wife deed her four lots directly to Cronks. He paid her nothing for this conveyance. Cronks gave back a land contract to defendant Miller, on all eight of the lots, which called for a conveyance of the lots upon payment by defendant of the $270. Complainant Ferry purchased of Mrs. Miller two of the four lots belonging to her, and brought a bill to redeem. Held, she could not redeem without paying the entire debt of $270, but by so doing she would be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights and might redeem.—Ferry v. Miller, 164 Mich. 429.

Parties and joinder in suit, see post § 172.

¶ 786. One who shows no subsisting legal or equitable right in the property, nor any lien or charge upon it, cannot maintain a bill to redeem from a mortgage.—Harwood v. Underwood, 28 Mich. 427.

¶ 787. No one has any right to redeem from a mortgage who has no existing interest in the land; but the tender of redemption money is construed as the claim of such an interest, and if the mortgagee receives and retains the money tendered he cannot repudiate the claim.—Millard v. Truax, 50 Mich. 343.

¶ 788. The mere levy of an execution upon lands to which the judgment debtor never had any title, and in which he never held any leviable interest, does not constitute any lien or charge upon the lands, or invest the execution creditor with any right or title on which to found a suit for the redemption of a mortgage upon them.—Harwood v. Underwood, 28 Mich. 427.

¶ 790. One whose sole interest in lands is under a trust deed, by virtue of which he is to be entitled to the lands after payment of the mortgages upon it and certain other specified demands, is not entitled, if he repudiates the trust, to file a bill to redeem from the mortgages.—Smith v. Austin, 11 Mich. 34.

¶ 791. A bill to redeem, filed by several persons jointly, cannot be maintained if the ground of their joint claim fails, whatever any one of them, claiming title from another source, might be entitled to in a separate proceeding.—Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622.

¶ 792. A bankrupt had a mortgage on certain property. Sale being had under a later mortgage, his assignee, who had not been impleaded in foreclosing it, took from the mortgagor an order for the surplus, but only with the idea of using it to procure redemption of the bankrupt's mortgage without litigation. Held, that his taking the order did not preclude his bringing suit to redeem, and such a defense could not be heard if not asserted in the answer.—Avery v. Ryerson, 34 Mich. 362.

¶ 793. A mortgagor's administrator being entitled by statute to the possession of his intestate's lands may file a bill to redeem, or to compel the release of a satisfied mortgage.—Enos v. Sutherland, 11 Mich. 538.

¶ 794. One who files a bill to redeem from a mortgage must show by his bill that he has an interest in the equity of redemption. —Lamb v. Jeffrey, 47 Mich. 28.

¶ 795. Where any other person than the mortgagor files a bill to redeem the bill must show that complainant has some title or interest in the land derived through the mortgagor, or in some way springing out of his general equity of redemption. And it must show the nature or derivation of the title or interest so claimed.—Smith v. Austin, 9 Mich. 465.

¶ 796. Where a bill to redeem only stated that complainant, after the giving of the mortgage, became interested in the land by contract, but without setting out the contract, or stating the parties, or its terms, or the interest contracted, it was held insufficient.—Smith v. Austin, 9 Mich. 465.

¶ 797. Recitals in exhibits attached to the bill, and which the bill prays may be made a part of the bill with all their averments, which recitals speak of complainant as having "become the purchaser" of the mortgaged premises, cannot aid the bill in this particular; the recitals not showing from whom the purchase was made, nor the interest purchased, nor whether it was subject to the mortgage or not.—Smith v. Austin, 9 Mich. 465.

¶ 798. Bill to redeem from a conveyance claimed to be a mortgage. The bill was not filed until thirty-four years after the maturity of the mortgage, which the bill alleges to have remained unpaid, and twenty-four years after the grantee had sold and conveyed the land. A party seeking to redeem after such a lapse of time is bound to show affirmatively in his bill such facts as will establish the instrument as continuing in force and subject to redemption.—Reynolds v. Green, 10 Mich. 355.

¶ 799. The bill showed that the grantee in the mortgage conveyance, and those claiming under him, had claimed and disposed of the premises as absolute owners for more than twenty years, and that possession had been had under them. It averred that the possession had not been continuous and adverse for twenty years, but did not show that it was taken within that time. No excuse was shown for the delay in applying to redeem, and it was held that the averments in the bill were too uncertain to found a right to redeem upon.—Reynolds v. Green, 10 Mich. 355.

¶ 800. Where an assignee in bankruptcy files a bill to redeem, the objection that it is not shown that the assignee obtained permission from the court of bankruptcy to bring the suit will not be considered unless it is pleaded, if at all.—Avery v. Ryerson, 34 Mich. 362.

¶ 801. If one who files a bill to redeem avers that he owns a certain mortgage which is a subsequent mortgage to that of defendant, and his bill is not demurred to, it may be sustained notwithstanding he fails to set forth such facts as shown that his mortgage and that from which he seeks to redeem are mortgages in the same chain of title. Especially is this so when it appears that defendant has recognized his right to make payments by receiving interest from him.—Lamb v. Jeffrey, 47 Mich. 28.

¶ 802. A bill, by a plaintiff under a purchase-money mortgage to foreclose an installment thereof against the purchaser which bought in at its own foreclosure of a later mortgage, which was superior in equity, may be treated as a bill to redeem on its appearing that the present plaintiff was omitted from the former foreclosure suit and that the equities require it.—Pritchard v. Kalamazoo College, 82 Mich. 587.

¶ 803. A bill to vacate foreclosure of a mortgage and praying general relief may be sufficient as a bill to redeem.—Drayton v. Chandler, 93 Mich. 383.

¶ 804. A bill by the receiver of a copartnership to recover property conveyed by it to the defendant and by him mortgaged to obtain money for the firm, held not a bill to redeem.—Security Trust Co. v. Dinsmore, 186 Mich. 273.

§ 171. ——Offer or tender of payment.

Necessity of tender or offer before suit in order to have costs on decree for redemption, see Costs § 33.

¶ 805. In a bill by a mortgagor for relief against a statutory foreclosure for a sum larger than was due upon the mortgage, an averment of an offer to redeem is not an indispensable requisite in a case where there is no reason to believe the defendant has been misled, and the case shows that the parties have gone into the merits fully as upon a bill to redeem.—Sandford v. Flint, 24 Mich. 26.

¶ 806. Where one who seeks to enforce a right to redeem from a prior mortgage omits to keep good his tender in his bill, the omission, as in cases of specific performance, only raises a question of costs.—Lamb v. Jeffrey, 41 Mich. 719.

Persons entitled to sue, see ante § 169.

¶ 807. Suit to redeem having been brought by the administrator of the grantor in a deed absolute that was in fact a mortgage, it was for the first time objected at the hearing on pleadings and proofs that the heirs of the mortgaging grantor should have been joined as complainants. Held, that as the heirs were nowise prejudiced, and the administrator, under the statute, had such an interest in the real estate as entitled him to redeem, and complete justice could be done to the parties in the case as it stood, the objection was not well taken.—Enos v. Sutherland, 11 Mich. 538.

¶ 808. A joint bill to redeem cannot be maintained if the ground of complainants' joint claim fails.—Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622.

¶ 809. The husband should be brought in as party to a deserted wife's bill to redeem homestead from his conveyance intended to operate as a mortgage.—Sanborn v. Sanborn, 104 Mich. 180.

¶ 809a. A bill to redeem from a mortgage securing a note made payable to the mortgagee's heirs four years after his death, which mortgage had been foreclosed for the interest by the mortgagee, may interplead the heirs and the mortgagee's administrator so as to ascertain to whom the money is payable.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

¶ 810. If one has acquired possession of lands under a mortgagee, but asserts a paramount title, the assignee of the mortgagor who files a bill to redeem is not obliged to show that the mortgagor had title when he gave the mortgage, but the defendant must take upon himself the burden of showing that the title he sets up in opposition to the mortgage title is valid and paramount.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

¶ 811. Where a bill for relief against a mortgage neither counts upon nor mentions an alleged assignment to the complainant of a right to redeem, such assignment is outside the issue.—Glass v. Glass, 50 Mich. 289.

¶ 812. Upon a bill to redeem defendant will not be allowed to increase the amount apparently due by showing an agreement, not stated in either the bill or the answer, to pay extra interest on the mortgage.—Fosdick v. Van Husan, 21 Mich. 567.

Burden of proof, see also ante ¶ 810.

Sufficiency of evidence on appeal from redemption suit, see Appeal § 431.

§ 175. ——Decree and terms of relief.

Declination of equity to impose forfeiture on redeeming party, see Penalties and Forfeitures.

Treating general prayer as prayer to redeem, see also Equity ¶ 344.

Rules for awarding costs on bill to redeem, see Costs, II, B.

Equity decrees in general, see Equity, X.

¶ 814. Upon a bill filed to set aside a statutory foreclosure sale, the decree should provide for redemption on payment within a specified time of the amount actually due, and in case of default that the mortgaged premises should be sold as in foreclosure cases.—Huyck v. Graham, 82 Mich. 353.

¶ 815. Where the decree on a bill to redeem provided that, if redemption were not made within three months, defendant should have strict foreclosure, it was modified on appeal so as to permit defendant to proceed to sale.—Newkirk v. Newkirk, 56 Mich. 525.

¶ 816. It is proper, on bill to redeem, where a deed absolute in form is adjudged to be a mortgage to direct a sale of the premises to satisfy the amount due in default of payment by the time fixed, instead of decreeing a strict foreclosure.—Emerson v. Atwater, 12 Mich. 314.

¶ 817. Where, on bill to redeem, a deed absolute in form is adjudged to be a mortgage, and the mortgagee had, before the bill was filed, conveyed to one of the other defendants, the decree should direct the amount due to be paid to such grantee instead of the mortgagee.—Emerson v. Atwater, 12 Mich. 314.

¶ 818. On a bill to redeem in a case where a controversy exists as to the amount due upon it, the mortgagee having proceeded to foreclose by advertisement, if the court allows the redemption the proper decree is that, unless the redemption money is paid within a specified time, the premises be sold as in foreclosure cases, and not that the title shall be absolute in the mortgagee.—Fosdick v. Van Husan, 21 Mich. 567.

¶ 819. On a bill to redeem from an irregular foreclosure, if the foreclosure proceedings are found invalid the decree should provide for redemption from the mortgage as an unforeclosed security, and not for redemption from the void sale, and in fixing the amount to be paid on such redemption it is erroneous to make a rest in computing interest at the date of the sale, and the decree should provide for a sale as on foreclosure to produce satisfaction in case of failure to redeem.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461.

¶ 820. The complainant procured the defendant to advance the purchase price of realty, the deed being taken in the name of the defendant, and an agreement made whereby the complainant was appointed agent for the property, with an option to purchase. The complainant later surrendered the property upon the unauthorized promise of an agent of the defendant to buy his equity. Held, upon action to redeem or establish a lien on the land, that the defendant should have an option of discharging complainant's claim or of an accounting and sale to satisfy defendant's lien, unless complainant shall redeem.—Leach v. Grube, 147 Mich. 348.

¶ 822. Where, as preliminary to a bill to redeem from a prior mortgage, the amount necessary for redeeming from an irregular statutory foreclosure thereof was deposited with the register of deeds, the court on granting leave to redeem stopped interest on the deposit during the time it remained in the register's hands and while the adverse party refused to receive it and contested the redemption.—Sager v. Tupper, 35 Mich. 134.

¶ 823. The proper decree on a bill to cancel a past-due mortgage sought to be foreclosed is one for redemption if the mortgage is found to be valid.—Goodenow v. Curtis, 33 Mich. 505.

¶ 824. On a bill in effect a bill to redeem from a deed given as security, plaintiff, a wife in possession of the property occupied as a homestead, is entitled to retain possession pending a postponement to bring in as a party the husband, who was the nominal grantor; and it is error to decree possession to the grantee-mortgagee.—Sanborn v. Sanborn, 104 Mich. 180.

¶ 825. At a statutory foreclosure sale of two lots the mortgagee's agent having bought both honestly believing a house to be on each, whereas both houses are on one lot, which is worth $1,000, while the other is only worth $100, the mortgagor's subsequent grantee with notice and without consideration, who seeks to redeem the lot on which both houses stand, should not be permitted to do so; but the foreclosure sale should be set aside and the mortgage foreclosed in chancery.—Root v. King, 91 Mich. 488.

¶ 826. Where a second foreclosure by advertisement was begun pending a suit in equity to redeem from the mortgage and to enjoin a sale under a prior proceeding, it was held that as the court of equity could take complete jurisdiction upon the bill then pending, and as the dispute between the parties could only be adequately dealt with in equity, the new proceeding by advertisement was unnecessary and was taken subject to the final action of the court in the equity suit, and should be set aside.—Louder v. Burch, 47 Mich. 109.

§ 176. ——Accounting incident to redemption suit.

Accountability of mortgagee in possession in general, see ante § 75.

Bills for accounting, see post § 180.

¶ 827. In a suit to redeem from a mortgage where the mortgagee was in possession collecting rents, it was proper to direct an accounting, that the balance above expenses might be applied to the discharge of the mortgage.—Shouler v. Bonander, 80 Mich. 531.

¶ 828. Where an assignment of a land contract has been taken as a security, and the assignee, a mere mortgagee, has wrongly procured a deed and taken possession, redemption may be decreed against him on payment of the amount of his claim and reimbursing him for taxes he has paid, less the rental value of the premises during his unlawful occupancy.—Meigs v. McFarlan, 72 Mich. 194.

¶ 829. The practice on bills to redeem is against strict foreclosure in case of default, and sale as on foreclosure is ordered should the redemption money not be paid as agreed.—Meigs v. McFarlan, 72 Mich. 194.

See also ante ¶ 784.

Accountability for land held under mortgage, see post § 179.

Accountability of mortgagee in possession, see ante § 75.

Accountability for land held under absolute deed, see post § 179.

¶ 830. A. assigned to B. a mortgage for $150 on lands of which A. owned the title and guaranteed the payment thereof. Subsequently B. agreed for the sum of $250, payable in instalments, to reassign the mortgage and to convey another parcel of the land. A. paid $200 on the contract and the last-mentioned parcel of land was by his consent sold by B. for $500. Held, that on receiving this sum B. was bound to reassign the mortgage and account for the balance not necessary to pay up the contract.—Wing v. Railey, 14 Mich. 83.

¶ 831. A mortgagee on statutory foreclosure sale bid in the premises for a sum which included the amount he was entitled to claim and also the greater part of an illegal attorney's fee. Held, that the surplus could be recovered from him by the mortgagor who failed to redeem; it not having been paid over to the sheriff.—Kennedy v. Brown, 50 Mich. 336.

¶ 832. On adjusting the equities between a mortgagee and a subsequent purchaser the mortgagee should be allowed to charge a sum paid to relieve the land from an equity in favor of third persons to which the subsequent purchaser was subject.—Montague v. Haviland, 101 Mich. 80.

¶ 833. In an accounting by a mortgagee in possession of a hotel property he cannot be held for the larger rent that he might have realized had he permitted his lessee to keep a bar for the sale of liquors; prior to 1875 such sale would have been unlawful, and since 1875 no duty to lease property for saloon purposes is imposed by the law.—Curtiss v. Sheldon, 91 Mich. 390.

¶ 834. Defendant bought of complainant for $1,983 a note for $300 and another for $2,000, both secured by a mortgage on a farm. Complainant indorsed the notes. Defendant agreed to apply the proceeds of the $300 note, when paid, to the payment of a debt owed by complainant. Defendant foreclosed the mortgage, and bought the farm in without taking any steps to hold complainant on his indorsement. In a bill to compel defendant to account for proceeds sufficient to pay the $300 note, held, that defendant could not set up complainant's indorsement as a defense.—Holmes v. Huizenga, 160 Mich. 344.

¶ 835. Defendant bought of complainant for $1,983 a note for $300 and another for $2,000, both secured by a mortgage on a farm. Defendant agreed to apply the proceeds of the $300 note, when paid, to the payment of a debt owed by complainant. Defendant foreclosed the mortgage and bought the farm in. Held, defendant must account for a sufficient part of the proceeds to pay the $300 note.—Holmes v. Huizenga, 160 Mich. 344.

¶ 836. Complainant mortgaged his land to one Van Der Meulen, and transferred the promissory notes secured thereby, one for $300 and the other for $2,000, to defendant for $1,983. Defendant agreed to apply the proceeds from the $300 note, when paid, to a debt owed by complainant. The farm buildings were insured and complainant represented that the insurance protected the mortgage. No such clause was in the policy. The buildings burned, and the insurance was paid to Van Der Meulen. Defendant foreclosed the mortgage. Held, in a bill for accounting that defendant was not compelled to account for his failure to collect the insurance money.—Holmes v. Huizenga, 160 Mich. 344.

¶ 837. An assignee for creditors, whose assignors held land taken subject to a mortgage and situate in another state, cannot maintain a bill against the mortgagee to ascertain the amount due and to adjust the sum distributable; since, because there was no contract by the assignors to the mortgagee, the mortgage debt or the deficiency was not a debt owing by them. The proper practice for the assignee would be to make distribution without regard to the mortgage, and if sued to charge his costs incurred as an item in his accounting.—Booth v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 299.

¶ 838. Where possession of land has been taken under color of right, and honestly, as where one holds under an irregular statutory foreclosure which he believes to be regular, it seems that in a court of equity, on bill to redeem from a mortgage, the tenant need not account for actual or possible rents and profits on the footing of a wrongdoer.—Millard v. Truax, 73 Mich. 381.

¶ 839. On a bill to redeem from a mortgage where improvements were made by a grantee in the honest belief that he had acquired title, he was allowed, in an accounting with those who had equities against the land for the increased value of the land by reason of such improvements, against which were offset the rents and profits of the land, but not the increase of rental value due to the improvements.—DeMey v. Defer, 103 Mich. 239, writ of error dismissed in 168 U. S. 703, 42 L. ed. 1211, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 941.

¶ 840. A mortgagor, who gave a mortgage to secure the debt of a third person and to release property of such person from a claim and incumbrances, is entitled to accounting from the mortgagee, who misapplied the proceeds of the mortgage to the payment of other debts and suffered the incumbered property to be consumed by the application of it to the satisfaction of the specific debt.—Bullis v. State Bank of Deckerville, 143 Mich. 632.

¶ 841. Where a mortgagee has property in his hands for which he is accountable to the mortgagor, the latter, in suing him for refusing to discharge the mortgage, can insist that the property be accounted for upon it by way of determining whether it has not been satisfied.—Wilber v. Peirce, 56 Mich. 169.

§ 179. Accountability for land held under absolute deed.

¶ 842. If a creditor, who has taken a deed absolute as security, conveys the land to a bona fide purchaser, he must account to the debtor for its value at the time of the sale, whether he received that amount or not.—Enos v. Sutherland, 11 Mich. 538.

Accounting incident to redemption suit, see ante § 176.

Right to accounting under mortgage void in hands of illegal corporation, see Corporations ¶ 899.

Supplemental pleading to bring in payment after accounting bill filed, see Equity ¶ 565.

¶ 843. On a bill for an accounting, based on a claim that the mortgage was given to secure a specific debt and that the proceeds were diverted, the mortgagor's wife, who joined in the mortgage, and his mother, who released her life estate in the premises to make the mortgage realizable, are not necessary parties in the absence of any further specific allegations showing their rights and interests in the matter litigated.—Bullis v. State Bank of Deckerville, 143 Mich. 632.

¶ 844. On a bill for an accounting and to have a deed declared a mortgage and the amount due ascertained, where the presumption that the sum mentioned in the mortgage as the consideration is correctly stated has been overthrown by evidence, and it is claimed that the mortgage was not given to secure an ascertained indebtedness but to secure the payment of such a sum as should be later found due on an accounting, the burden of proof is upon the grantee, the grantor being dead.—Cady v. Burgess, 144 Mich. 523.

¶ 845. In an accounting, where the difference between the parties in a large part, if not wholly, is accounted for by the defendant's claim that a large interest rate was exacted and agreed upon by the complainant than that claimed by complainant, the account will not be disturbed after a great lapse of time.—Ruloff v. Hazen, 124 Mich. 570.

¶ 846. On a bill by the widow of an intestate and co-heirs against a mortgagee who had taken a deed for an accounting of transactions between the intestate and the mortgagee a decree for the complainants is reversed where, under the evidence and upon a fair accounting for the value of the land and charging the mortgages and proper payments against it there is nothing due complainants.—Morris v. Anderson, 142 Mich. 279.

¶ 847. In a bill to restrain the foreclosure of a renewal mortgage given in 1891 and for an accounting, where the complainant claimed that various mortgages prior to the last one had been paid, for which the defendant should account, and where the defendant was a man 82 years old and nearly blind, and the only memorandum he had throwing any light on the subject was an entry showing a balance on July 1, 1876, which with interest added would substantially represent the amount of a mortgage given in 1877, renewing one of 1869, and where both parties appealed from the decree, the finding of the lower court fixing the 1877 mortgage settlement as the starting point was sustained.—Ruloff v. Hazen, 124 Mich. 570.

¶ 848. In a suit to have a deed declared a mortgage and for an accounting where the defendants concede the land to the complainants upon payment of the amount due, a decree finding an amount due should deduct the amount of a mortgage placed on the land by the defendants.—Lindow v. Webber, 125 Mich. 641.

¶ 3. A motion in the circuit court to dismiss an appeal from the decision and report of commissioners on a claim, grounded on the insufficiency of the certified copy of the order of the commissioners as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 9390, is a special motion within 1897 C. C. Rule 19, requiring four days' notice; and accordingly, both parties having announced "ready" on the docket as called, an oral motion made when the case is reached cannot be entertained against objection for want of the notice.—Pruden v. Clark, 148 Mich. 163.

¶ 4. The four days' notice required of special motions, under 1897 C. C. Rule 19, is not waived, where upon the making of an oral motion at the trial of an appeal from the allowance of a claim against an estate the appellant called attention of the court to the want of a notice and asked leave to rectify the defect in the record of the commissioners on which the motion was grounded.—Pruden v. ¶ 7. On a motion to compel a complainant to elect between prosecuting his suit in the court of chancery and proceeding on a writ of error in the supreme court, it is not necessary to serve a copy of the proceedings in that court.—Webb v. Williams, W. 452.

¶ 8. A motion cannot properly be overruled because the grounds on which it is based are not stated, when they sufficiently appear from the record.—Shaw v. Hoffman, 21 Mich. 151.

¶ 9. Circuit Court Rule 35, providing that "a defendant who has appeared by notice of retainer or appearance shall be entitled to notice in advance of all future proceedings in the cause, although he may not have followed his appearance by plea or demurrer," defines the practice in the single case where a party has appeared, but has not pleaded, and does not require the giving of notice in advance in any case where, under the old rules of practice, it was not necessary to apprise the opposite party in advance of the proceedings about to be taken. So held, where the principal defendant sought to have a writ of garnishment dismissed because he was not served in advance with notice of an intention to issue the same, or of the subsequent proceedings thereunder.—Ketcham v. Kent Circuit Judge, 115 Mich. 60.

¶ 10. Notice of a motion to expunge from a report of a grand jury matter reflecting on the integrity and conduct of the prosecuting attorney need not be served on the members of the jury.—Bennett v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 200.

¶ 11. A special motion to quash a writ of attachment was noticed Sept. 14 for hearing on Sept. 18. Held sufficient, unless the motion had to be heard upon an issue framed.—Stringer v. Dean, 61 Mich. 196.

¶ 12. Where the jurat of an affidavit was omitted in a copy served with a notice of motion, held, that copies of affidavits so served must be true and complete.—Chesebro v. Chesebro, 21 Mich. 506.

¶ 13. Where the notice of a motion for a change of venue was dated March 5th, the motion dated March 7th, the affidavit upon which it is claimed the motion was based dated March 12th, but all were filed upon the 12th with the clerk, they may be properly treated as one proceeding.—Moreland v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 144 Mich. 329.

¶ 14. Against objection to hearing the cause for want of notice of argument an affidavit of the service of regular notice of hearing in the supreme court, and of the filing of proof thereof with the clerk, is sufficient evidence of those facts until denied by affidavit, though the proof so filed cannot now be found in the clerk's office.—In re Robinson's Estate, 6 Mich. 137.

¶ 15. Proof of service of a motion, as for leave to appeal, must be made by copy sworn to or officially certified; an affidavit of service showing the substance or purport of the notice is insufficient.—McCaslin v. Camp, 26 Mich. 390.

[Note. The propriety and occasion for a motion as distinguished from some other form of appeal to the court is a question of procedural law, while the propriety and occasion for the relief sought by the motion is a question of remedial law or even of substantive law. Thus the question whether a continuance ought to be allowed, or a new trial granted, or the venue changed pertains to the specific topics, e. g., Continuances; New Trial; Venue. Only the practice on the motions in their general aspect is treated in Motions and Orders.

In addition to the foregoing it has been deemed necessary to treat in other specific topics the question whether motion, plea, or demurrer is the proper mode of attacking a pleading (see Pleading, III, IV; Equity, VII, C; Indictment, I, D) or motion, plea, petition, or bill in equity is proper in seeking for relief from a judgment or attacking a writ (see Judgments, V, VI; Equity, XI; Injunctions, I; Attachment § 109 et seq.; Executions § 117; Process, III). See further cross-references following.]

Rule for allowing stay to make motion, see 1916 C. C. Rule 16.

¶ 16. Legal claims cannot be finally determined on motion and affidavit.—Lyon v. Smith, 66 Mich. 676.

¶ 17. Generally, no matter can properly be tried upon mere affidavit, except such as depends upon the discretion of the court; and the supreme court cannot control such discretion. When an alleged compromise and payment are contested, a question is raised upon the rights of the parties which cannot properly be tried upon affidavits.—People ex rel. Parker v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 24 Mich. 408.

¶ 18. It was error to dismiss a writ of replevin on motion based upon affidavits, on the grounds that the defendant was a deputy sheriff and the writ was directed to the sheriff and served by another deputy; that the writ was issued without authority of law, and that the service was unlawful and irregular and gave the court no jurisdiction; the questions sought to be determined were not properly triable on affidavits, but should have been in some way brought to trial on evidence upon an issue of fact. Whether they could have been tried under the general issue, or would more properly be the subject of a plea in abatement, quære.—Jewell v. Lamoreaux, 30 Mich. 155.

¶ 19. The charge that defendant secured by fraud the settlement and discontinuance of the action against him is not triable upon affidavits on a motion to vacate it.—Voight Brewery Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 103 Mich. 190.

¶ 20. If any part of the ground of a motion consists of facts not apparent on the face of the proceedings, an affidavit or other competent evidence of its existence must be presented.—Storey v. Child, 2 Mich. 107.

¶ 21. It is proper to permit affidavits to be read on the hearing of a motion for a receiver in a judgment creditor's suit to meet matters set up in avoidance in defendant's answer.—Rankin v. Rothschild, 78 Mich. 10.

§ 5. Pleadings or record to show grounds.

¶ 22. On a motion based on the record and proceedings in the cause, whereby the facts appear as well as by a petition on which it is also based, the fact that the copy of the petition served omitted the jurat thereto is immaterial.—Graham v. Elmore, Harr. 265.

¶ 23. For the purposes of proof on a motion a copy of a petition served on the opposite party without the jurat attached is binding evidence, the motion being based thereon. —Graham v. Elmore, H. 265.

¶ 24. On a motion and rule to open a decree pro confesso taken against one of the defendants, the motion being based on the record and proceedings in the cause, the papers in the cause entitled in the names of the two defendants cannot be used in or with respect to a separate creditors' suit against the other defendant based on the decree, he also having moved to set it aside.—Graham v. Elmore, H. 265.

¶ 25. It is no objection to an order that it purports to be made on the application of one who is not the solicitor in the cause. It is not necessary that an order should show on whose motion it is made.—Graham v. Elmore, H. 265.

¶ 26. An order nunc pro tunc will not relieve a proceeding from an irregularity in the matter of service.—Dewey v. Dewey, 151 Mich. 586.

¶ 27. A nunc pro tunc order cannot be had except for the purpose of supplying an omission or mistake in the record, or to secure the entry of an order which should have been made as a matter of course, and as a legal duty.—City of Grand Rapids v. Coit, 151 Mich. 109.

¶ 28. It is not within the purview of an order nunc pro tunc to operate ex post facto to give force to a chamber order which was void for want of jurisdiction, or to give validity to proofs taken under such void order, in a chancery cause without authority of law.—Eslow v. Township of Albion, 32 Mich. 193.

¶ 29. An order in part erroneous is not void so far as relates to matters properly contained in it.—Howard v. Palmer, W. 391.

¶ 30. A rule entered by consent will not be vacated unless fraud or misrepresentation is made to appear.—Hammond v. Place, H. 438.

¶ 31. Consent orders and decrees are binding upon the parties consenting, and cannot afterwards be controverted so long as they remain in force.—Russell v. White, 63 Mich. 409.

¶ 32. Parties to a suit for a mutual accounting construe their arrangement and relation when they unite in a consent order.—Wyatt v. Sweet, 48 Mich. 539.

¶ 34. Where in an action at law a party makes a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, coupled with a motion to amend his declaration so as to set out such evidence, and the motion for a new trial is denied while the other motion is not directly passed on, the denial of the motion for a new trial in effect denies the motion to amend where one of the grounds for the motion for a new trial sets up the facts which it is sought by the amendment to include in the declaration.—American Fidelity Co. v. R. L. Ginsburg Sons Co., 192 Mich. 693.

¶ 35. An order upon motion was presumed to have been made in and not out of court, although not entered on the daily journal, where the judge appended to the motion in the motion book the certificate "Granted, B. F. G., Circuit Judge."—Merrill v. Montgomery, 25 Mich. 73.

Estoppel or bar by order on motion, see Former Adjudication.

Statutory provisions as to new application after refusal, see Jud. Act, chap. II. §§ 104, 105; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12173, 12174.

¶ 36. An ex parte order extending the time to settle a bill of exceptions or move for a new trial, though void as to settlement of the bill because offensive to 1897 Cir. Ct. Rule 47 in that it was more than 60 days, is valid as to time for moving for new trial; since the statutes and rule as to time for moving for new trial give five days but allow it to be done within "such further time as shall be allowed by the court," making no restriction on ex parte allowances.—Hayes v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 277.

¶ 37. After a motion has been denied on its merits it should not be renewed, without leave of the court, on the same facts, or on any new facts which might have been included in the first motion. The party must present all of his case at once, whether he have several grounds or not.—Johnson v. Johnson, W. 309.

¶ 38. The action of the lower court in vacating a leave to amend a plea by adding thereto an affidavit denying execution of instruments sued on, such action being obedient to a mandamus, is not stare decisis on a second motion addressed to the proper judge, where the former order was unwarranted because the granting judge could not hear it, not having been the trial judge.—Portsmouth Savings Bank v. Gratiot Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 646.

[Note. Because of the great variety of statutes, including the local acts, which bear on the subject of municipal and public bonds, it would be impossible to make references to the statutes without producing a confusing mass of them. It has not been attempted, but the reader is cautioned to examine the indices to the published statutes and particularly to search the charter of the city in question.]

I. POWER TO ISSUE, AND PRECEDENT ACTS AND CONDITIONS.

§ 1. In general; power to issue.

Constitutional right to vote, see Constitutional Law § 252.

¶ 1. Neither townships nor their officers have any power to borrow money, or to issue bonds, except as that power is conferred by the legislature.—Bogart v. Township of Lamotte, 79 Mich. 294.

¶ 2. The municipal corporations of Michigan cannot exercise the power of taxation in aid of private corporations building or proposing to build railroads to be owned and controlled by their corporators; and bonds issued by way of such aid, being incipient steps leading to taxation, are unauthorized. People ex rel. Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 499.

¶ 5. Local Acts 1903, No. 534, authorizing the issuing of bonds for paving and providing for an assessment to pay interest and principal, necessarily implies in the township board the right to pledge the township credit.—Township of Grosse Pointe v. Finn, 134 Mich. 529.

¶ 6. Local Acts of 1889, No. 455 (Saginaw Charter § 25), authorizing city to issue bonds for $125,000 to construct bridges, was not impliedly repealed by Local Acts of 1891, p. 839, authorizing issue of bonds for $75,000 by city, but the later act is auxiliary to the charter and the issue of bonds for $200,000 is authorized.—Tillotson v. City of Saginaw, 94 Mich. 240.

¶ 7. A charter provision empowering the common council to "issue new bonds for the refundings of bonds and evidences of debt already issued," authorizes the issue of refunding bonds for railroad-aid indebtedness that has passed into judgment.—City of Port Huron v. McCall, 46 Mich. 565.

¶ 8. Under charter power "to issue new bonds for refunding evidences of indebtedness already issued" council may issue bonds to pay judgments.—City of Port Huron v. McCall, 46 Mich. 565.

¶ 9. A charter provision empowering a city to construct electric light works, limited by a proviso that the power shall not be construed to authorize the incurring of any indebtedness against the city unless by vote of the electors, does not, by implication, confer the power to borrow money and issue bonds for such purpose; especially if, in other sections of the charter containing provisions for issuing bonds, such powers are expressly conferred under carefully-defined limitations as to the manner in which they shall be exercised.—Farr v. City of Grand Rapids, 112 Mich. 99.

¶ 10. The City of Detroit cannot issue bonds for a hospital site and building under charter authority to issue public building bonds.—Common Council of City of Detroit v. Engel, 187 Mich. 88.

¶ 11. Bonds for a garbage reduction plant cannot be issued by the City of Detroit under a charter provision authorizing the issuance of public building bonds.—Common Council of City of Detroit v. Engel, 187 Mich. 88.

¶ 12. Bonds cannot be issued by the City of Detroit for a hospital site and building until authorized by a charter amendment.—Common Council of City of Detroit v. Engel, 187 Mich. 88.

¶ 13. The City of Detroit cannot issue bonds for a garbage reduction plant until authorized to do so by a charter amendment.—Common Council of City of Detroit v. Engel, 187 Mich. 88.

¶ 14. Pub. Acts 1915, No. 150, providing that any school district within the state whose population shall exceed 15,000 and be less than 100,000, shall have power and authority to borrow money and issue bonds to an amount not greater than 5 per cent of the total assessed valuation of such district and requiring a submission to the electors of such district of questions relative to such borrowing of money and issuing bonds therefor, precludes a city of such population from exercising the right to borrow money and issue bonds of such district.—MacQueen v. Port Huron City Commission, 194 Mich. 328.

¶ 14a. While the same strictness is not, perhaps, required in construing statutes authorizing the issue of bonds for paving, erection of markets and the like, as in those authorizing bonds for gifts or grants to railroads and similar purposes, still the general rule is that they must be strictly construed.—Stebbins v. Grand Rapids Superior Court Judge, 108 Mich. 693.

¶ 15. Section 5e of the Home Rule Act, as amended by Act No. 203, Pub. Acts 1911, § 5442n, How. St., 2nd Ed., restricting the bonding limit of cities, except as to issues authorized by a three-fifth majority of the electors, is unconstitutional.—Common Council of City of Detroit v. Engel, 187 Mich. 88.

¶ 16. Section 7 of chapter 11 of the charter of the City of Detroit, increasing the bonding limit of the city from two to four per cent of its assessed valuation, does not contravene the Constitution or any general law of the state.—Common Council of City of Detroit v. Engel, 187 Mich. 88.

¶ 17. Bonds for public lighting cannot in the absence of a charter amendment, be issued by the City of Detroit in excess of the limit fixed for such purpose by its charter. Common Council of City of Detroit v. Engel, 187 Mich. 88.

§ 3. Special public utility bonds.

General law of elections of voters, see Elections.

¶ 18. Under P. A. 1913, Act No. 5, § 4, subd. b, a municipality after proper vote may bond itself for but two per cent of its assessed valuation for the purpose of acquiring public utilities, so that the limit of the total bonded indebtedness may be ten per cent of its assessed valuation. Attorney General ex rel. Barbour v. Lindsay, 178 Mich. 524.

¶ 19. Under the Michigan Constitution of 1909 a city may issue both bonds which create a general indebtedness and those which create no indebtedness but are based on the security of the general utility alone.—Attorney General ex rel. Hudson v. Common Council City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 369.

¶ 20. A city may under §§ 23 and 24 of the Constitution of 1909, issue bonds to acquire a public utility in excess of the limit of general indebtedness prescribed by its charter, so long as such bonds are issued on the security of the general utility alone and do not create a general indebtedness.—Attorney General ex rel. Hudson v. Common Council City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 369.

¶ 21. Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, which empowers a city to issue special nonliability bonds based on the security of the public utility alone, after the city has created a general bonded indebtedness up to the limit of its borrowing power, is constitutional.—Attorney General ex rel. Hudson v. Common Council City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 369.

Departure from authorized terms as voted, see post § 7, ¶ 40.

Vote to authorize creation of sinking fund, see post ¶ 111.

Order of business of councils in considering bond issues, see also Municipal Corporations ¶¶ 145, 146.

Effect of later resolution to rescind earlier, see also Municipal Corporations § 67.

¶ 22. Under a Muskegon Charter, tit. 9, §§ 5, 12 (Local Acts 1889, No. 304), prohibiting the council from raising money by tax or loan in any one year in an amount exceeding three per cent of the assessed valuation unless authorized by a majority vote of the electors, the council may issue bonds without such vote where the total amount of the bonds and of the general tax levy for the year is less than three per cent of such valuation.—Common Council of City of Muskegon v. Gow, 94 Mich. 453.

¶ 23. Resolutions of common council relating to issue of bonds were sustained notwithstanding seeming inconsistencies arising from an attempt to follow language of two different statutes.—Tillotson v. City of Saginaw, 94 Mich. 240.

¶ 24. Local Acts of 1893, No. 235, entitled an act to reincorporate the city of Ironwood and to add territory thereto, and providing in chap. 9, § 9, for the borrowing of money for public improvements and the issue of bonds as evidence of indebtedness signed "by the mayor and city clerk and countersigned by the controller" and for the submission of the question of making any loan "to the qualified voters of said city at some annual or special elections called for that purpose in the same manner as other special elections are called" in the act, and that, before any loan shall be voted upon the clerk shall post specified notices in at least three public places, and that the council may provide by ordinance the manner of voting upon any questions of borrowing money but the votes should be canvassed as provided by the act, and construed, although going into effect on the day that it was passed, and although continuing the old organization until qualifications of new officers elected under the statute, not to warrant the submission by the old council of the question of incurring a bonded indebtedness at the first election specified under the act, at which time the old council ceased to exist, since it could not have been the intention of the legislature that the old council should have the right to call the election and confine the powers of the new council to the issuance of the bonds voted for.—Manhattan Co. v. City of Ironwood, 74 Fed. 535.

¶ 25. Where a statute authorizing a vote in a certain village upon a bonding proposition did not prescribe the notice to be given, the notice prescribed for general elections by the general act for the incorporation of villages was held sufficient.—Village of Highland Park v. McAlpine, 117 Mich. 666.

¶ 26. Upon a village election held to determine whether improvement bonds should be issued, ballots containing distinguishing marks are absolutely void, and cannot be used in determining whether or not the proposition was carried by the required two-thirds of the votes cast.—Wightman v. Village of Tecumseh, 157 Mich. 326.

¶ 27. Failure of the ballot used at a village election for the purpose of authorizing a bond issue to construct a sewer system to state the purpose of the vote does not invalidate the election, where a notice of the time, place, and purpose thereof was published as required by resolution of the council, the proposed loan had been fully discussed prior to the election, and there was no possibility or claim that any voter was misled or prejudiced by the omission.—Wightman v. Village of Tecumseh, 157 Mich. 326.

¶ 28. Where a proposition to bond a city is submitted to the electors at a general election, under a charter providing for an issue of bonds when "the qualified electors of said city, voting in their respective wards, shall have authorized the issuing of said bonds by a majority of their votes cast at any regular election, or at a special election called for the purpose of voting upon such question," a majority of all the votes cast at the election, and not merely a majority of those cast on the bonding question, is essential to authorize the issue of the bonds.—Stebbins v. Grand Rapids Superior Court Judge, 108 Mich. 693.

¶ 29. Township bonds, if legally issued, are fixed charges against the township, and the record of the meeting of the township board at which money is voted to be raised to pay such bonds need not show the neglect or refusal of the electors to vote money for that purpose.—Newaygo County Mfg. Co. v. Echtinaw, 81 Mich. 416.

¶ 30. How. St. §§ 739, 740, 748, imposing the duty on the township clerk to keep the record of the proceedings of the township board, and also of the township meetings, does not make the recording of proceedings a condition precedent to their validity, and, under such statutes, creditors of a township holding its bonds cannot be defeated because of the neglect of the clerk properly to record the evidence of the orders and resolutions constituting the contract on the faith of which they have rendered service or advanced money to the township.—Rondot v. Rogers Tp., 99 Fed. 202.

¶ 30a. How. St. § 492, as to form of ballots in voting upon proposed loan for purchase of site and erection of county buildings is directory in so far as the precise words "For the Loan" and "Against the Loan" are prescribed.—Thomas v. Kent Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 106.

¶ 31. The issuance of bonds by the common council of the city of Detroit to raise money to pay for lands purchased or condemned by the commissioners of parks and boulevards under Local Acts of 1889, No. 388, § 15, need not be approved of by the board of estimates of the city.—Commissioners of Parks of Detroit v. Rush, 84 Mich. 154.

¶ 32. Under Laws 1873, Act No. 224, abolishing citizens' meetings and substituting in their place a board of estimates, it was held essential that the question of the purchase of lands for a park, and of the issue of park bonds under the legislation relating to the Detroit park, should be submitted to and receive the approval of the board of estimates as well as the common council, and that when the council authorized the issue of the bonds without the submission of the question to the board of estimates, the mayor was justified in declining to execute the bonds, since their issue was not lawfully authorized.—People ex rel. Board of Park Com'rs v. City of Detroit, 29 Mich. 343.

¶ 33. Conceding that consent to the building of it as well as the approval by the secretary of war of the location and plans of a bridge to be constructed by a city over a navigable river is a condition precedent to the issue by the city of bonds to raise money for building such bridge, correspondence with him indicating his approval if the city would assent to a condition imposed by him that a government engineer should superintend the construction of the bridge and tendering a formal written approval lacking only the respective signatures was held sufficient to warrant such issue.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 34. Where an issue of bonds is authorized for the purpose of raising money with which to construct a bridge and to procure the right of way therefor, it is no objection to the issue of such bonds that the right of way has not been obtained.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

§ 6. Form and requisites of bonds.

Recital as to character of bond and fund charged, see also post ¶ 60.

Addition of judgments against city to next tax levy, see Municipal Corporations § 138.

¶ 35. The word "bond" imports a seal, and, when used in a statute authorizing the issue by a municipal corporation of written obligations negotiable in character, means specialties or writings under seal.—Rondot v. Rogers Tp., 99 Fed. 202.

¶ 36. Officers issuing bonds as evidence of township indebtedness under Pub. Acts 1867, No. 98, relating to the authorizing of townships to raise money by tax, or to borrow money, to build or repair bridges, must be presumed to have intended to issue sealed instruments.—Rondot v. Rogers Tp., 99 Fed. 202.

¶ 37. It will be deemed that negotiable bonds were intended when a statute authorizes the issuing of bonds running for a long period of time, and bearing interest, and it appears on the face of the act that the bonds may be put upon the market and sold.—Ashley v. Board of Supervisors of Presque Isle Co., 60 Fed. 55.

¶ 38. Under How. St. § 2717, authorizing a city to issue "bonds" for loans negotiable bonds may be issued.—City of Cadillac v. Woonsocket Inst. for Savings, 58 Fed. 935.

¶ 39. How. St. § 483, subd. 8, which provides that the several boards of supervisors shall have power to provide for the payment of any loan made by them by a tax upon the county, which shall in all cases be within 15 years from the date of such loan, limits the issue of all county bonds to 15 years.—McMullen v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 102 Mich. 608; Alpena County Sup'rs v. Simmons, 104 Mich. 305.

¶ 40. A board of supervisors adopted a resolution authorizing the borrowing of $35,000 upon the credit of the county, for the purpose of erecting a court-house, and the issue of the bonds of the county for that sum, payable in ten instalments, within 30 years of the date of their issue, the first instalment to be made payable 10 years from said date. The loan was adopted by the electors, and the board of supervisors passed a resolution authorizing the issue of the bonds, to be payable in 15 years from the date of issue. Held, that the voters were clearly given to understand that the entire loan would not be payable in 15 years, but would be extended over a period of 30 years; that no such loan is authorized by law, and it was therefore void; but that, if the resolution were valid, the board disregarded the instructions of the electors, by making the entire amount payable at one time, and that for this reason the proposed issue of bonds is void.—McMullen v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 102 Mich. 608.

¶ 41. Laws 1893, Act No. 149, which provides for a county road system, and authorizes the issue of bonds upon a vote of the electors of the county to raise money to be expended in the construction and maintenance of such roads, is silent as to the time of the maturity of said bonds, which is therefore limited by How. St. § 483, subd. 8, a general law, to 15 years.—Alpena County Sup'rs v. Simmons, 104 Mich. 305.

Issuance and delivery of bonds proper, see post § 9.

Proposals for contracts generally with the public, see Public Contracts, II.

¶ 42. Where a bid for the issuance of county bonds is not conditioned on the approval by the bidder's attorney of the validity of the issue, the bidder cannot afterwards assert that such condition entered into his bid.—Finn v. Board Sup'rs Bay Co., 167 Mich. 166.

¶ 43. A transaction between a city and a bank for the disposal of park bonds whereby the bank agrees for a specific sum to take such bonds at par with accrued interest from date of bonds up to and including a specified date, less a specified commission, construed as an absolute sale and purchase of the bonds.—City of Bay City v. Lumbermen's State Bank, 193 Mich. 533.

¶ 44. An objection that a direction by the common council of a city to the mayor, controller, and clerk to accept bids and make sale of bonds is an illegal delegation of power is sufficiently answered by the fact that, within two days after a bill was filed by the objectors to restrain the issue of the bonds, the officers named reported their action to the council, and the same was ratified and confirmed by that body.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 46. Under the act of March 22, 1869, providing that a municipality voting aid to any railroad "shall, within sixty days after the question of aid is determined, issue its coupon bonds for the amount so determined," bonds issued after the sixty days and antedated are not invalid; the statute is simply permissive.—Township of Chickaming v. Carpenter, 106 U. S. 663, 27 L. ed. 307, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600.

¶ 47. A village council authorized the president and clerk to sign water-works bonds, but gave no authority to deliver them. Held, that a delivery by the president would not entitle a holder to recover.—Portsmouth Savings Bank v. Village of Ashley, 91 Mich. 670.

¶ 48. Delivery of municipal bonds by an officer whose authority is limited to signing them does not authorize a holder to recover. —Portsmouth Savings Bank v. Village of Ashley, 91 Mich. 670.

¶ 50. Township railroad aid construction bonds issued by a township under the act of March 22, 1869, providing that such bonds, if issued by the township, shall be "executed" by the supervisor and clerk thereof and the seal affixed, if one is possessed by the township; that such bonds, when issued, shall be "delivered" to the state treasurer, who shall hold them as trustee for the township and railroad as provided by the act; that the treasurer, upon receipt of the bonds, shall register them and keep them safely; that, upon certificate from the governor that the railroad company has complied with the provisions of the act, the bonds shall be indorsed and delivered to the company, and the past due coupons returned to the township, and that if any bonds so deposited with the treasurer shall not, within three years from the time when the same were received by him, be demanded in compliance with the terms of the act, the same shall be cancelled and returned to the proper officers of the township, were not operative where they were not indorsed and delivered to the company by the treasurer, the "delivery" of the bonds giving effect to them as valid instruments being a delivery by the state treasurer and not a delivery by the township officers to the state treasurer.—Young v. Township of Clarendon, 132 U. S. 340, 33 L. ed. 356, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; affirming 26 Fed. 805.

¶ 51. Under the railroad aid act of March 22, 1869, the governor's certificate was a condition precedent to the state treasurer's power to deliver such bonds to the company, so that title to such bonds did not vest in the company merely by delivering them to the treasurer and by the company's compliance with the provisions of the act. —Young v. Clarendon Tp., 132 U. S. 340,

¶ 52. Township bonds delivered to the state treasurer under the railroad-aid act of March 22, 1869, as trustee for the township and for the railroad company for which they were issued, but which were never indorsed and delivered by him to the company as required by the statute, never became operative.—Young v. Clarendon T'p, 132 U. S. 340, 33 L. ed. 356, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; affirming 26 Fed. 805.

¶ 53. The provision in the act of March 22, 1869, relating to the issuance of township railroad aid construction bonds, that if any township votes aid to railroads, which are authorized, it shall, within sixty days after the question of aid is determined by vote of the electors, issue its coupon bonds for the amount so determined to be granted, gives the township the whole of the sixty days in which to issue the bonds, but it does not prevent the issuance of valid bonds after such period, and the mere antedating of the bonds does not invalidate them.—Township of Cluckaming v. Carpenter, 106 U. S. 663, 27 L. ed. 307, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 620.

¶ 54. A village council entered into a contract with S to give him certain bonds as a bonus for establishing a factory. The issue of bonds for a public park was submitted to the electors and carried and the bonds were issued and deposited with a bank in escrow to be delivered to S upon the completion of his contract. The bonds were delivered to S who negotiated them to plaintiff. Held that there was a sufficient delivery.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 131 Mich. 197.

¶ 55. Where a village council agreed to give S village bonds as a bonus for constructing a factory, and then submitted to the electors a proposition to issue park bonds which was carried and park bonds issued and delivered in escow for S in pursuance of the agreement, no other bonds being authorized or talked of, it cannot be set up that the council had not authorized the deposit of park bonds but of other bonds.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 131 Mich. 197.

¶ 56. A prima facie delivery of a village bond is made out by evidence that it was authorized by the trustees, that it was given to the plaintiff's vendor and a part payment on the bond made subsequently by the village.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 127 Mich. 522.

¶ 57. Where a statute under which a city is authorized to secure a loan for park purposes by bonds of the city provides for the purchase at such rate of interest, not exceeding a specified rate per annum, as the common council shall determine, and that no sale of such bonds shall be negotiated at less than face value at par, the sale of such bonds to a bank for their face value and a subsequent payment of a certain sum out of the park fund as commission constitutes a discount, is illegal, and may be recovered back.—City of Bay City v. Lumbermen's State Bank, 193 Mich. 533.

Mandamus to compel delivery back to municipality for cancellation, see Mandamus ¶ 505.

Mandamus to redeliver void bonds to issuing municipality, see Mandamus ¶¶ 525a, 525b.

¶ 58. It is the duty of the state treasurer, having possession of railroad aid bonds of a city or township voted and executed under the unconstitutional act of 1869 (Laws 1869, Act No. 45), to redeliver them to the city authorities on demand.—People ex rel. Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 499; People ex rel. La Grange Township v. State Treasurer, 24 Mich. 468.

§ 11. Construction and effect of bonds and recitals.

Rights and liabilities consequent on annexation or division of territory after issuance of bonds, see Counties § 30; Municipal Corporations § 9; Townships, III.

Railroad aid bonds, see also Railroads, V.

¶ 59. A bond is the obligation of the village rather than the trustees of the village which is entitled "Public Improvements Bond of the Village of Mecosta" and refers to the act under which it purports to issue showing that it is to be paid out of funds raised by taxation on village property although it recites that the board of trustees acknowledges itself indebted.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 127 Mich. 522.

¶ 60. The statement on a municipal bond that it is a refunding bond constitutes a compliance with How. St. § 2717, requiring each bond to "show upon its face the class of indebtedness to which it belongs and from what fund it is payable."—City of Cadillac v. Woonsocket Inst. for Savings, 58 Fed. 935.

¶ 61. The security of county bonds is not affected by the fact that by a local act an attempt has been made to segregate a township from the county and add it to another county.—Finn v. Board Sup'rs Bay Co., 167 Mich. 166.

III. DEFECTIVE AND ILLEGAL BONDS, AND RIGHTS OF HOLDERS.

§ 12. Ultra vires or invalid bonds in general.

Bona fide takers and their rights, see post § 13 et seq.

Rights in bonds issued by irregularly formed county, see Counties ¶ 16.

¶ 62. A township board having taken up township orders, payable on presentation, and issued in lieu thereof a seven-year bond, drawing ten per cent interest, which action was not authorized by any existing statute, the principle of ultra vires applies.—Bogart v. Township of Lamotte, 79 Mich. 294.

¶ 63. Bonds issued by a village incorporated under the general law of this state in excess of the amount authorized by such incorporation act are issued without authority of law. So held, where bonds to the amount of $650 recited that they were issued in conformity with the general laws of the state under which the village was incorporated and were authorized by the board of trustees at a regular meeting thereof on a designated day for the purpose of purchasing certain fire apparatus, and were payable out of the general funds of the village. The bonds exceeded in amount the sum for which the council could incur indebtedness without a vote of the electors, which was not had, and were also in excess of the indebtedness which the electors could authorize the council to incur.—Spitzer v. Village of Blanchard, 82 Mich. 234.

¶ 64. The rights of the owner of municipal bonds issued in aid of the construction of a railroad under the general statute of March 22, 1869, relating to the giving of aid to a railroad by any city or township by vote of its electors by "loan or donation, with or without conditions," are to be determined under decisions rendered prior to the time that the railroad company, to whose rights such owner of bonds had succeeded, had earned the bonds under contract with the city in conformity with the statute.—Taylor v. Ypsilanti, 105 U. S. 60, 26 L. ed. 1008.

¶ 65. A bona fide holder of village bonds issued under a special statute authorizing their issue for the purpose of public improvements, and who had no notice that they were intended to aid in the construction of a railroad, may recover thereon.—Common Council of Village of Cedar Springs v. Schlich, 81 Mich. 405.

¶ 66. The purchaser of a school-district bond need look no further back than its face for the facts which show a compliance with the statute under which it is issued.—Gibbs v. Colfax Township Frac. School District No. 10, 88 Mich. 334.

¶ 67. A bank advancing money on municipal bonds payable to bearer which were stolen from the rightful holder by the person transferring same to the bank, held under evidence to have obtained same in due course.—City of Adrian v. Whitney Central Nat. Bank, 180 Mich. 171.

¶ 69. The federal courts hold that statutes authorizing municipal aid to railroads are constitutional, and those courts permit recovery upon bonds issued prior to the decision in People v. Salem, 20 Mich. 452, which denied power to issue them.—Township of Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (86 U. S.) 666, 22 L. ed. 227, affirming 1 Flipp. 120, Fed. Cas. No. 13735; Taylor v. City of Ypsilanti, 105 U. S. 60, 26 L. ed. 1008; Township of New Buffalo v. Cambria Iron Co., 105 U. S. 73, 26 L. ed. 1024.

¶ 70. One to whom negotiable bonds are transferred by indorsement in payment of antecedent debts is a holder for value.—Township of New Buffalo v. Cambria Iron Co., 105 U. S. 73, 26 L. ed. 1024.

¶ 71. Purchasers of bonds cannot be considered bona fide holders if after their purchase an action is brought upon the bonds and judgment recovered by the payees named in the coupons.—Hale v. Baldwin Tp. Board, 49 Mich. 270.

¶ 72. All persons dealing with municipal bonds are bound to take notice of the provisions of the statutes under which such bonds purport to have been issued.—Manhattan Co. v. City of Ironwood, 74 Fed. 535.

¶ 73. The rights of the holder of municipal bonds issued in aid of a railroad are not determined by the law as expounded by the supreme court of the state at the time he received them; even if not a holder for value, he is entitled to whatever rights the railroad company had by virtue of its contract with the municipality.—Township of New Buffalo v. Cambria Iron Co., 105 U. S. 73, 26 L. ed. 1024.

¶ 74. The rights of the holder of a municipal bond payable to bearer claiming to hold same in due course are governed by the Negotiable Instruments Act, Pub. Acts 1905, No. 265, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 2672-263.—City of Adrian v. Whitney Central Nat. Bank, 180 Mich. 171.

¶ 75. Municipal bonds, valid on their face, in the hands of innocent holders without notice, are collectible, and the city must pay them; even though such bonds were issued as part of a conspiracy on the part of officials of such municipality to use the money so raised illegally.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

§ 14. ——Effect of recitals in bonds.

Face of bond as protection to taker, see also ante ¶ 66.

Duty to take notice of statutory limitations, see also ante ¶ 72.

¶ 77. If the statute under which a village is incorporated creates conditions precedent upon which the right to issue bonds depends, and these conditions are not complied with —there being no board or officer to determine that they were—there can be no innocent holders of such bond, even though they contain a recital that they have been issued in accordance with law.—Spitzer v. Village of Blanchard, 82 Mich. 234.

¶ 78. Where there is no authority in a village council or in its president and clerk to issue the bonds of the village unless first authorized to do so by a vote of the electors, and the incorporation act does not make the president and clerk the judges to determine and certify to the fact of such election, a recital in bonds, signed by such president and clerk, that they had been issued in accordance with law, binds no one dealing with the bonds.—Spitzer v. Village of Blanchard, 82 Mich. 234.

¶ 79. In assumpsit on municipal bonds, on their face devoted to a public purpose, it is immaterial whether the factory for which they were in fact issued, was in operation at the time of their delivery.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 134 Mich. 619.

§ 15. ——Invalidities on face of bonds.

Duty to take notice of statutory limitations and conditions, see ante ¶ 72.

¶ 80. The doctrine of bona fide holding does not apply to a township bond that does not show on its face any authority to issue it, and such a bond is taken subject to the defense of entire illegality.—Bogart v. Township of Lamotte, 79 Mich. 294.

¶ 81. A township is estopped as against a bona fide purchaser of bonds to object that meetings of the electors for the purpose of voting on a bond issue for bridge building purposes was not properly called when the bonds recite that they were issued in conformity with Pub. Acts 1867, No. 98, and were authorized by the legal vote of the qualified voters of the township at a special meeting held on a certain date, and the statute requires the issuance of the bonds by the township board.—Rondot v. Rogers Tp., 99 Fed. 202.

¶ 82. A village bond properly signed and purporting to have been issued under authority of the statute designated and summarized and for the lawful purpose therein set out is good in the hands of a bona fide purchaser although in fact issued for an unlawful purpose other than the one set out. —Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 127 Mich. 522.

¶ 83. Where a township bond does not show, upon its face, any authority upon the part of the township to issue it, the doctrine of bona fide holder does not apply, but the holder takes it subject to the defense of entire illegality.—Bogart v. Township of Lamotte, 79 Mich. 294.

¶ 84. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show bona fides in the purchase of a village bond regular on its face but in fact issued for an unauthorized purpose.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 127 Mich. 522.

¶ 85. A bona fide purchase of a village bond good on its face but void because issued for an unauthorized purpose, is not made out by evidence tending to show that the bond was taken by a bank in the course of business where the employee who took it did not testify; as want of notice is an affirmative fact to be shown by the plaintiff. —Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 127 Mich. 522.

¶ 86. The fact that the purchasers of municipal bonds took a guaranty from the sellers does not indicate lack of bona fides.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 134 Mich. 619.

¶ 87. It is incumbent on the holder of municipal bonds that are concededly invalid otherwise to show that he is a bona fide holder for value.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 141 Mich. 291.

¶ 88. It was a question for the jury whether a purchase of bonds was bona fide where it appeared that the bargain was made for them on the 5th of June when some money was paid, that two days later the balance except $500 was paid, and that it was paid on the 22d, and where defendant village's claim was that the purchase was made on the 22d rather than the 5th, and there was evidence tending to show that letters passed evincing the fact that the bonds were bonus bonds, and that a guaranty of the payment of the bonds was delivered at the time of final payment on the 22d and that certain copies of records certified under date of June 18th was also delivered after the 5th and probably after the 18th, if not on the 22d, plaintiff offering evidence that the guaranty was promised on the 5th and executed on the 22d and that the perfection of the papers was promised then; since on the whole the taking of the guaranty and the letters, if received, might discredit plaintiff's claim that the sale was on the 5th.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 141 Mich. 291.

¶ 89. On the question whether bonds were purchased in good faith from a holder of them, it is competent for such holder to testify that he received a letter from plaintiff asking if he had any Frankfort bonds to sell, that he had lost it, that he replied in the affirmative stating that they were bonus bonds for building a factory, and that the reply was properly addressed and mailed to plaintiff.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 141 Mich. 291.

¶ 90. Testimony of the owner of a bonus bond that he sold it to the manager of the bank through which title came to plaintiff, and that he did not impart his knowledge concerning the character of the bond is sufficient to go to the jury as a prima facie case of bona fide purchase by the bank.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 141 Mich. 175.

¶ 91. On the question whether a purchase of a village bond was bona fide it is admissible to show either that the sale was a simulated one or to discredit the witness who testified that it was made by showing that he said or admitted that the sale was simulated.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 141 Mich. 175.

¶ 93. The fact, that one of the plaintiffs suing on a village bond given as a bonus without lawful consideration in aid of a mill had signed a bond to secure a contract to build the mill, is no evidence that a bank of which such person was a director had notice that the bond was invalid, there being an absence of evidence that he then was acting for the bank or that he knew that the authorities of the obligor village had anything to do with the transaction.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 141 Mich. 175.

¶ 94. The test for notice from facts challenging inquiry is whether it would be bad faith not to investigate, and not whether the fact "would naturally and reasonably lead an ordinarily careful and prudent man to make inquiry"; and an instruction in the quoted words is erroneous.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 141 Mich. 175.

¶ 95. Whether plaintiffs, suing upon certain village bonds, were bona fide purchasers is for the jury under evidence showing that they relied on the recitals in the bonds and on an accompanying letter from the prosecuting attorney that the proceedings were upon their face valid, and there is no evidence that they knew of the invalidity of the bonds.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 131 Mich. 197.

¶ 96. In assumpsit against a village on municipal bonds, it is error to instruct that the plaintiffs were not bona fide purchasers if they did not rely solely upon the recitals in the bonds, as such instruction is equivalent to saying that they could not rely upon external evidence of validity.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 134 Mich. 619.

¶ 97. On a bill by a village to enjoin the negotiation of bonds and to compel surrender and cancellation thereof, where it appeared that the bonds were valid upon their face, evidence that the defendants had no notice of invalidity of the bonds until it became necessary for them to forward the interest coupons for collection, establishes the character of the defendants as bona fide purchasers, against a claim that a letter was written apprising them of the real nature of the bonds, where the defendants denied that they received any such letter, and neither the original nor any copy thereof could be produced.—Village of Frankfort v. Schmid, 155 Mich. 313.

Ratification of unauthorized acts by delegates, see ante ¶ 44.

¶ 98. A township is not estopped, by paying interest on bonds, from disputing their validity.—Bogart v. Township of Lamotte, 79 Mich. 294.

¶ 99. Under Const. art. 4, § 49, forbidding counties to incur indebtedness for roads unless by a two-thirds vote of supervisors and a majority vote of electors, and Comp. L. 1897, § 4283 authorizing the issue of bonds for such purpose, an affirmative vote to issue bonds to run for 30 years when under Comp. L. 1897, § 2484 they can only be made payable within 15 years cannot be cured by subsequent legislation; (Local Acts 1901, No. 286 authorizing the board to issue 30 year bonds in accordance with the original proposition) as the electors voted for a proposition unauthorized by law and the curative act was beyond the power of the legislature.—Shearer v. Board of Supervisors of Bay County, 128 Mich. 552.

¶ 100. The fact that a city has received in exchange for void bonds, issued under a statute authorizing aid to railroads, the bonds of the railroad company in whose favor the city bonds were issued, does not make valid the unauthorized obligations of the city.—Thomas v. City of Port Huron, 27 Mich. 320.

¶ 102. A township is estopped, as against a bona fide purchaser of its bonds, to object that meetings of the electors for the purpose of voting on a bond issue for bridge building purposes was not properly called where it received the money paid for the bonds, used it for the public purpose designed, and paid the interest coupons for two years of the ten-year term.—Rondot v. Rogers Tp., 99 Fed. 202.

Rights of parties under executed illegal public contracts and rule of nonimplication of contract against the public, see Public Contracts, V.

General right to repayment of money paid by mistake or illegally, see Payment, VI; Implied Contracts.

¶ 103. A county may be compelled to pay back money which it has received for bonds illegally issued, when the purpose of the loan was lawful, and the creation of the debt not prohibited by law, and does not come within the exception exempting a county from liability where it has never received the benefit of the money, or the loan itself was in excess of its authority to create a debt.—Eaton v. Shiawassee County, 218 Fed. 588; writ of certiorari denied 239 U. S. 647, 60 L. ed. 484, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221.

§ 19. Injunctive or other relief.

General propriety of injunctions against action by public officers, see Injunctions, II, D.

Right of taxpayer to sue, see Injunctions § 21.

Injunction against discontinuance of public market while bonds outstand payable from proceeds of operation of market, see also Municipal Corporations ¶ 453.

Propriety of information by attorney general to prevent bond issue and diversion of funds, see also Municipal Corporations ¶ 619.

¶ 104. A resolution submitting to the electors the question of an issue of paving bonds provided that a certain percentage of the cost of the improvement should be paid according to frontage. The city owned a considerable extent of the frontage, and the amount apportionable to it by reason of such ownership was made a general charge, reducing the percentage of the total cost actually assessed upon private property. All of the bonds were issued before the roll for the first instalment of the assessment had been prepared, and the greater part, before the amount to be specially assessed upon individual property had been ascertained. Held, that a bill would not lie to restrain the city from paying the bonds, on the ground that they were issued in violation of the vote of the electors.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

¶ 105. In a suit by a taxpayer to rescind the sale of bonds for the construction of a public improvement, the mere fact that one of the contractors upon whom service of process may be made is absent from the state and cannot be served neither prevents the issuance of the injunction nor is a reason for its dissolution.—Village of River Rouge v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 204.

¶ 106. A case within the jurisdiction of equity, entitling the complainant to the relief sought, is stated, where a taxpayer's bill alleges that the officials of a municipality conspired to raise money by the sale of bonds, in proceedings ostensibly regular, and for a legal object, and after inducing innocent persons to purchase such bonds, intended to expend such money for private enterprises, and which prays that such officials be restrained from such illegal expenditure.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

IV. INDORSEMENT AND TRANSFER.

Authority to issue negotiable bonds, see ante § 6.

Bona fide takers and their rights against obligor, see ante § 13 et seq.

General law of negotiation and transfer of negotiable paper, see Negotiable Instruments.

Accounting between railroad corporation and officer for disposal of aid bonds placed in his hands, see Railroads, V; Corporations, XVII, G, H.

¶ 107. A judgment creditor, seeking by bill in the nature of a creditor's bill, to subject to the satisfaction of a judgment against a railroad company, township railroad aid construction bonds issued under the act of March 22, 1869, and returned to the township under the provisions of the act because of the failure of the company to obtain the certificate of compliance with the provisions of the act from the governor, stands exactly in the shoes of the railroad company and possesses no greater rights.—Young v. Township of Clarendon, 132 U. S. 340, 33 L. ed. 356, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107, affirming 26 Fed. 805.

V. SINKING FUNDS AND PAYMENT.

Power to issue refunding bonds, see ante § 1.

Original or inceptional delivery of bonds, see ante § 9.

Necessity of allotting portion of levy of tax specifically to payment of debt and interest, see Municipal Corporations § 140.

Effect of failure to keep up sinking fund for market bonds, see also Municipal Corporations ¶ 454.

Statutes regulating refunding and extending of county and township bonds, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2312 et seq.

Statutes for creation of county sinking fund commission and for management of sinking funds, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2386 et seq.

¶ 108. The resolution of a city council setting aside annually "not less" than a specified sum of money to create a sinking fund to pay bonds is not illegal on the ground that the words "not less" in the resolution enable the city to set aside more than the amount required to meet the bonds.—Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. v. City of Muskegon, 167 Mich. 331.

¶ 110. The act of a city in setting aside annually a sum of money to create a sinking fund to pay bonds is not illegal by reason of the fact that the sinking fund would exceed the amount of the bond issue if invested at 4 per cent interest, and if the city continued to set aside such annual sum up to the date of the maturity of the bonds.—Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. v. City of Muskegon, 167 Mich. 331.

¶ 111. Under section 42 of title 7 of the Charter of Muskegon as amended by Act No. 344, Loc. Acts 1901, it is not necessary that the city council submit to the electors for ratification its resolution providing a sinking fund to meet bonds issued to construct a municipal electric lighting plant, and such bond issue being approved by the electorate the council may at a later date provide for such sinking fund.—Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. v. City of Muskegon, 167 Mich. 331.

¶ 112. The resolution of a city council setting aside annually a specified sum of money for a sinking fund to pay bonds issued for the erection of a municipal lighting plant is not illegal in that it states said sum shall be made up in part from revenue derived from such plant and in part from the contingent fund of the city, without specifying how much is to come from each fund.—Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. v. City of Muskegon, 167 Mich. 331.

¶ 113. The county of C. issued bonds to aid in procuring enlistments in the army, and by resolution provided that each town might, if it saw fit, receive a number of the bonds proportioned to its quota of men to be raised. The towns took the bonds. Held, that each town must be regarded as borrowing the bonds, and must provide for the payment of those taken; and that any money paid by the county for principal or interest on a bond must be refunded by the township to which it was loaned.—People ex rel. Cass County Sup'rs v. Townships of Porter & Calvin, 18 Mich. 101.

¶ 114. Although as to the holders the county would be debtor in such bonds, yet as between the county and the towns the latter would be principal debtors.—People ex rel. Cass County Sup'rs v. Townships of Porter & Calvin, 18 Mich. 101.

¶ 115. In an action to compel the payment of a township bond issued in 1864 for volunteer bounty fund payable in one year upon which was indorsed that the interest was paid in full to Dec., 1865, and wherein the defendant denied liability and alleged payment, testimony that two former township officers into whose possession the bond had come had sought its payment was material to show that the bond had been paid and thereafter wrongfully taken from the township by its officers, and was admissible where it appeared that the officials who signed the bond were dead, that all the books and records had been destroyed by fire twenty-two years before, and that 40 years had expired after the issuance of the bond before this action had been brought. —Collier v. Township Board of St. Charles, 147 Mich. 688.

VI. ENFORCEMENT AND COLLECTION.

§ 22. In general; proper remedy and procedure.

General law of procedure on bonds and contracts, see Assumpsit; Bonds § 6 et seq.; Contracts, X.

General law of pleading, evidence and trial, see Pleading; Evidence; Trial; Instructions, etc.

Limitations applicable to action of assumpsit on sealed township bonds, see Limitations ¶¶ 75, 76.

Limitation of suit to reach bonds turned back to issuing township, see Limitations ¶ 93.

Adequacy of legal remedy against village and its officers for recovery of money paid on bonds fraudulently issued, see also Fraud ¶ 765.

Right of transferee of bonds or coupons to sue in federal courts, see Courts § 90. § 90.

Mandamus to compel levy of taxes, see Mandamus § 87.

¶ 116. Under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 927-936, authorizing the payment of bounties to volunteers, etc., the bonds provided for were on the footing of established liabilities against the township, and to be presented, like other claims for orders on the treasury, to the township board; and payment might be enforced, not by action against the township, but by mandamus against the town officers, in case of refusal to do their duty in this regard.—Township of Dayton v. Rounds, 27 Mich. 82.

¶ 117. Where the legal obligation of a township to pay bonds issued by it and the good faith of the holder thereof are disputed, it seems that the proper remedy against the township is by action; mandamus denied.—Loomis v. Rogers Township Board, 53 Mich. 135.

¶ 118. Payment of bounty bonds is to be enforced not by action against the township that issued them, but by mandamus against the town officers.—Township of Dayton v. Rounds, 27 Mich. 82.

¶ 119. That an amount sufficient to pay bonds issued by a city has been included in assessments which have failed of collection, or the proceeds of which have been misappropriated, does not bar the right of bondholders to sue for a money judgment against the city.—Hammond v. Place, 116 Mich. 628.

§ 23. Pleading and trial and judgment.

Sufficiency of plea of non est factum to put delivery in issue, see also Pleading, III, IX.

Addition of the amount of the judgment to the next tax levy, see Municipal Corporations § 138.

¶ 121. In an action on municipal bonds issued under authority of law, plaintiff need not aver performance of any of the requisites necessary to give them validity; but it is for the defendant to show, if it exists, the want of such validity.—Township of Lincoln v. Cambria Iron Co., 103 U. S. 412, 26 L. ed. 518.

¶ 122. In an action against a township by the holder of railroad aid construction bonds issued by the township under the act of March 22, 1869, on such bonds, a declaration stating that the defendant, acting under and in accordance with the authority conferred by the act, made a certain donation to the railroad company, and for that purpose did execute the bonds in question, that the bonds were afterward duly delivered to the company as provided in the act and that the plaintiff before maturity became the owner thereof for value, is good on demurrer, although containing no averment that an election was held, to authorize the issue of bonds, as required by law, and no averment as to various other prerequisites to such issue.—Township of Lincoln v. Cambria Iron Co., 103 U. S. 412, 26 L. ed. 518.

¶ 123. In a trial by the court without a jury of an action on a village bond, there is a sufficient finding of the fact of delivery of the bond where the court's findings refer to the authorization of the president of the village trustees to sign the bond and the giving of the bond to the plaintiff's vendor, speaks of the bond as issued by the village and says that it came into the hands of the plaintiff's vendor.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 127 Mich. 522.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

See the indices to the published laws.]

I. NATURE AND ATTRIBUTES, CREATION AND ORGANIZATION, AND TERRITORY AND BOUNDARIES.

§ 1. Nature and attributes in general.

[Note. The nature, corporate limitations, and attributes of public corporations are exemplified in the decisions upon their powers and functions throughout the body of this topic, and also in some of the other topics referred to. Many of the principles of municipal corporation law arise directly from the peculiar nature of a public corporation and their nature and attributes are seldom the subject of any direct decision.]

Constitutionally defined bodies "corporate" of a public nature, see Const. art. VIII, §§ 1, 16, 20.

¶ 1. The authorities are numerous that the word "municipal" has not a well-defined and technical meaning, and must be construed with reference to the evils to be prevented and the purposes to be accomplished, the history of the provision of the constitution in which it is used, and the practical construction that has been placed upon it.—Kent County Agricultural Soc. v. Houseman, 81 Mich. 609.

¶ 1a. The history of the system of incorporating cities and villages under general statutes, and the conditions and restrictions generally imposed upon the power conferred, and the principles that govern them, considered.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 2. A compulsory incorporation can only come from direct legislative action, or the action of such person or bodies as may, by the law of the land, be vested with sufficient delegated authority to bind the community. The limitations to this compulsion under the precedents of the common law of England and various states in this country considered.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 3. Laws 1873, Act No. 179, providing for the incorporation of villages is defective if it makes no provision for again appointing the first village election in case of a failure to hold it at the time first appointed.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 4. Until its officers have been elected and qualified, a newly-incorporated village is not deemed organized so as to be entitled to share of liquor tax.—Highland Park v. Wayne County Treasurer, July 10, 1889 (not reported).

§ 3. ——General enabling provisions.

History of the general enabling acts, see ante ¶ 1a.

Delegation by the legislature of power to form or change municipality, see Constitutional Law § 88.

Constitutional duty of legislature to enact general incorporation laws, see Const. art. VIII, § 20.

¶ 5. Article 8, section 20, of the new Michigan Constitution makes it mandatory on the legislature to pass a general village and city incorporation law.—Common Council, City of Jackson v. Harrington, 160 Mich. 550.

§ 4. Territory, limits, boundaries, and ward divisions.

Annexation and detachment of territory, see post § 5.

Extraterritorial powers, works and properties of municipalities, see post §§ 28, 29.

Representation of wards by aldermen, see post § 163.

Division of ward as affecting residence of alderman and vacating his office, see post ¶ 786.

Legislative power to change boundaries or territory, see Constitutional Law § 69.

Changing apportionment district by change of boundaries, see Constitutional Law § 260.

Territorial limits to jurisdiction of municipal courts, see Municipal Courts § 7.

Judicial notice as to ward divisions and local geography or locations, see Evidence §§ 9, 10.

¶ 6. Public corporations organized for the same purpose, with the same rights, powers and duties, cannot exist in the same territory; but where they are organized for different purposes, have different rights and duties relating to entirely distinct matters, they may and often do occupy the same territory, working in harmony, each within the scope of its authority.—Attorney General ex rel. McRae v. Thompson, 168 Mich. 511.

¶ 7. The power to enforce incorporation upon farming lands which are sparsely settled, if it can be delegated at all, must be given expressly, and will not be implied against private consent; the power is strictly construed; and the same is true of compelling the fusion of distinct villages without joint consent.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 8. An opportunity ought to be provided of being heard in every step of proceedings which determine the liability of individuals to be included with their territory in particular municipalities; and one of the most vital questions involved is that of boundaries; and its determination belongs to policy, rather than law, and is political and not judicial.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 9. Whether, under the constitution, a village lying partly in different towns and counties can, either by direct action or under delegated authority, be incorporated as a unit, quære.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 10. Benton Harbor was incorporated under general statute, Act No. 215, Pub. Acts 1895. By a special statute, Act No. 472, Local Acts 1903, the boundaries of the city were established, but no method was provided for changing them. The Act of 1903 stated that the city, except as provided herein, should be governed by the Act of 1895. Held, the rule that boundaries fixed by a special act should not be changed by the method provided by a general act did not apply in this case, since the special act clearly intended the general act to govern in this particular.—City of Benton Harbor v. Cutler, 159 Mich. 364.

§ 5. Annexation and detachment.

Submission of question to electors for vote, see post § 6.

Consequences of annexation or detachment, see post §§ 7-9.

Effect of detachment to dissolve corporation, see post ¶ 29.

Effect of statutory detachment to repeal charter, see post ¶ 50.

Vacation of office of councilman or trustee by loss of residence through change of boundary in course of detachment, see post ¶¶ 788, 789.

Right of officers to pay during time of unlawful annexation by other municipality, see post ¶ 887.

¶ 11. The general power conferred on boards of supervisors by Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, §§ 5447-5453, How. St., 2nd Ed., to annex territory to municipal corporations, carries implied power to make such incidental orders as may become necessary to effectuate the conferred powers.—Oakman v. Wayne County Board Sup'rs, 185 Mich. 359. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

in boards of supervisors discretion to pass upon petitions for the annexation of territory to a municipality, but leaves the determination of the question to the electors of the latter body and of the territory to be affected.—Oakman v. Wayne County Board Sup'rs, 185 Mich. 359. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 13. The fact that Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909 (§§ 5447-5453, How. St., 2nd Ed.), does not vest boards of supervisors, in annexing territory to municipal corporations, with express power to preserve the integrity of representative districts, does not render the act obnoxious to §§ 3 and 4 of Art. V of the Constitution, since power is implied to provide in the order submitting the question to the electorate, for the preservation of representative districts.—Oakman v. Wayne County Board Sup'rs, 185 Mich. 359. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

Effect of provision for submission to nullify power of supervisors, see ante ¶ 12.

General law of elections, see Elections.

¶ 14. Under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, § 9, How. 2nd. Ed., § 5450, relating to the annexation of territory to a city, where the territory consists of parts of two or more townships, a separate majority vote in favor of annexation in each of the portions of the respective townships is essential before annexation of the particular territory may follow.—Cook v. Kent County Board of Canvassers, 190 Mich. 149.

¶ 15. An order of submission of the question of annexation of territory adjoining a city under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, § 9, How. 2nd Ed., § 5450, by the board of supervisors to the voters in the district to be annexed which contains no provision for the maintenance of the integrity of the legislative and senatorial districts is invalid under art. V, §§ 3, 4, of the Constitution.—Cook v. Kent County Board of Canvassers, 190 Mich. 149. (Ostrander, J., concurring on other grounds.)

¶ 16. Proceedings by a city for the annexation of the territory of adjoining townships under the Home Rule Act, Pub. Acts of 1909, No. 279, How. 2nd. Ed., § 5447, are not invalid because the resolution by the county board of supervisors directing the submission of the question of annexation provides that the election notices and ballots shall contain a provision that the annexation is to be for all purposes except that of electing representatives for the legislature and the annexation, if accomplished, shall have no effect whatever on such election of representatives, and the notices and ballots do not contain such provision, as it must be presumed that the electors knew that the integrity of the legislative district would be preserved in accordance with the resolution of the commission.—Collins v. City of Detroit, 195 Mich. 330.

§ 7. ——Effect on legislative and other political districts.

Implication in statute of necessity for preserving legislative districts, see ante ¶ 13.

Necessity of inclusion of provisions for preservation of apportionment districts and interpretation of order of submission and ballots with respect thereto, see ante ¶¶ 15, 16.

Township rights and liabilities on annexation or inclusion within city, see Townships.

¶ 17. Representative districts cannot be affected by the annexation of territory to municipal corporations under Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, §§ 5447-5453, How. St., 2nd Ed.—Oakman v. Wayne County Board Sup'rs, 185 Mich. 359. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 18. An order of submission made under Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, §§ 5447-5453, How. St., 2nd Ed., should provide that the annexed territory should become part of the municipality for all voting purposes except for the election of representatives.—Oakman v. Wayne County Board Sup'rs, 185 Mich. 359. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 19. Proceedings by a city to annex the adjoining territory of several townships under the Home Rule Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 5447-5455, have no effect upon the school districts within the annexed territory until action is taken by the several township boards and a committee of the board of education of the city.—Collins v. City of Detroit, 195 Mich. 330.

¶ 20. A municipal law or ordinance designed for a city at large operates throughout its actual boundaries, whatever they are, and is not affected by the fact that these are enlarged from time to time.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 460. Reversed in 242 U. S. 238, 61 L. ed. 268, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87.

§ 9. ——Effect on property and debts and taxes.

Mandamus to compel adjustment of rights and property on dividing or annexing territory, see Mandamus § 90.

¶ 21. Territory added to a municipality is subject to the payment of debts previously incurred, and it is not material that the addition is effected by a consolidation of two cities.—Smith v. Mayor, etc., of City of Saginaw, 81 Mich. 123.

¶ 22. The right of a municipality to a liquor tax collected therein becomes vested at the date at which the law requires the tax to be paid; and if not then paid the subsequent annexation of the territory to that of some other municipality before its payment does not transfer to the latter the right to the money.—Township of Springwells v. Wayne County Treasurer, 58 Mich. 240.

¶ 23. A special assessment was levied against the property of the plaintiff by the Village of Fairview. Afterwards the legislature passed a law annexing Fairview to the City of Detroit. Detroit had a charter provision that no special assessment should be vacated unless the property owner pay to the city a sum representing the amount his property was benefited by the improvement. Held, in a bill by plaintiff to set aside the assessment, that a personal liability against the plaintiff instead of one against his property could not be enforced in this case, as it would be making the annexing law retroactive and unconstitutional.—Weber v. City of Detroit, 158 Mich. 149.

Effect of consolidation on property and debts, see ante ¶ 21.

¶ 24. Making a person an ex officio officer of one organization by virtue of his holding office in another does not tend to merge the two organizations.—Attorney General ex rel. McRae v. Thompson, 168 Mich. 511.

§ 11. Succession and reincorporation.

¶ 25. A corporation privileged by charter to supply a village with water does not lose its privilege when the village is incorporated as a city, nor is it then necessarily confined to the land covered by the village.—City of Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids Hydraulic Co., 66 Mich. 606.

§ 12. Corporate existence and collateral attack.

When existence deemed to begin, see also ante ¶ 4.

Pleading existence of the municipality as a corporation, see post § 213.

Consolidation and succession, see ante §§ 10, 11.

Dissolution and extinction, see post § 13.

Judicial notice respecting cities and villages, see Evidence, I; Indictment § 128.

Remedy to question assumption of office or franchise, see Quo Warranto.

¶ 26. Defects in the proceedings under which a village government has been formed should be pointed out in a direct proceeding instituted in behalf of the state. A private party cannot collaterally question the assumption of municipal corporate powers which are not disputed by the state.—Bird v. Perkins, 33 Mich. 28.

¶ 27. The state itself may be precluded from raising objections to the regularity of a village's incorporation after the corporate government has been fairly established with general acquiescence.—Bird v. Perkins, 33 Mich. 28.

¶ 28. The legality of the organization of a village by special act of the legislature cannot be attacked collaterally in a prosecution for resisting the village treasurer in removing property levied upon by virtue of his tax roll and warrant.—People v. Smith, 131 Mich. 70.

¶ 29. The incorporation of a village is not dissolved by statutory detachment of greater part of territory, population and officers.—People v. Village of Highland Park, 88 Mich. 653.

¶ 30. As a municipal corporation once created cannot be dissolved or cease to exist except by legislative provision or consent, failure of the people of a village for a term of years to hold an election does not effect a dissolution.—Cain v. Brown, 111 Mich. 657.

¶ 31. The incorporation of a village cannot be said to have been vacated, even though an election was called for the purpose by the village council, where it does not appear that the petition for vacation, which was mailed to the village president nine months before the action was taken, was ever presented to the council for action, or was ever acted upon.—Cain v. Brown, 111 Mich. 657.

II. CHARTERS AND CLASSES OF MUNICIPALITIES, AND NEW CHARTERS.

§ 14. In general; legislative powers.

Construction and effect of charters, see post § 15.

Amendment, alteration, and repeal of charters, see post § 16.

Freeholders' charters, see post § 17 et seq.

Succession and reincorporation, see ante § 11.

Limits on taxing power, see post § 137.

Constitutional limitations on legislative powers in general, see Constitutional Law.

Judicial notice of charters and organic acts, see Evidence §§ 23-25.

¶ 32. No valid municipal corporation can exist without a charter or a municipal charter without a corporation; a combination of the two makes the corporation, and framing or revising the charter is part of the necessary process of incorporating a city.—Gallup v. City of Saginaw, 170 Mich. 195.

¶ 33. Charters and by-laws are subject to the general legislation of the state.—Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495.

Charter as measure of powers granted, see post § 22.

Implied powers under charter, see post § 22 et seq.

Presumption that charter provisions contemplate lawful action in further consequence of requirements, see post ¶ 607.

Partial validity of legislation void in part, see Statutes, V.

Charter powers and status of Detroit Recorder's Court, see Municipal Courts § 1.

Charter as contract protected against impairment, see Constitutional Law § 172.

¶ 34. City charters must be rationally construed as intended to create corporations which shall resemble in their essential character the class into which they are introduced.—Torrent v. Muskegon Common Council, 47 Mich. 115.

¶ 35. A city charter should not be given a literal construction where a manifest absurdity would be the result.—People v. Parsons, 200 Mich. 39.

¶ 37. The several provisions of the charter of the city of Detroit are to be construed so as to be harmonious, if possible.—Commissioners of Parks of Detroit v. Rush, 84 Mich. 154.

¶ 38. In construing one provision of a charter, it is important to consider other provisions upon the same or similar subjects.—Farr v. City of Grand Rapids, 112 Mich. 99.

¶ 39. Village charters will not be so construed as to change the operation of the general taxing laws, unless such an intent is plainly expressed.—Howell v. Village of Cassopolis, 35 Mich. 471.

¶ 40. Village charters are to be construed as not designed to encroach upon the general law any further than the plain terms show an intent to do so. The provision of the Kalamazoo charter authorizing the president and trustees to ordain and establish by-laws for constructing and keeping in repair the public highways, bridges, etc., applies to the highways, bridges, etc., which are to be constructed and kept in repair by the village itself through the exercise of the taxing power, and not to bridges over mill-races, which by general statute it is made the duty of the mill proprietors to construct.—Merrill v. Village of Kalamazoo, 35 Mich. 211.

¶ 41. The charter of Paw Paw, in giving the village control of the building and mending of all bridges within it, but making the cost a township charge, is inharmonious; unless the township and village authorities unite, the village has exclusive control of the subject and is exclusively liable; and the township authorities cannot enforce the obligation of a citizen of the village to repair a bridge over his mill-race.—Paw Paw Highway Commissioner v. Willard, 41 Mich. 627.

¶ 42. The re-enactment or modification of charter provisions cannot be held to effect special legislation outside of the charter without clear indication of such an intent.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 71 Mich. 92.

¶ 43. The Waterworks Act (How. Stat. Chap. 84) giving municipalities power to contract with water companies for the supply of water, is a substantive and independent enactment; and where a city avails itself of its provisions, the act stands as a part of its charter, as a separate chapter dealing with the specific subject of water supply, and such city cannot be heard to claim that under its charter, subsequently enacted, the compensation provided for is beyond its taxing power, and that as the Waterworks Act conflicts with the charter, the latter being the later legislative act must prevail.—Menominee Water Co. v. City of Menominee, 124 Mich. 386.

¶ 44. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 186 (Comp. L. 1897, § 3437 et seq.), regulating the making of public lighting contracts, cannot be said not to apply to a city because it has a specific charter passed two years later, under which it might equally well have made the contract in question. The rule of the Menominee Water Co. against City of Menominee, 124 Mich. 395, is to be followed.—Belding Land & Improvement Co. v. City of Belding, 128 Mich. 79.

¶ 45. A city charter is a declaration of the public policy of the city.—Schurtz v. City of Grand Rapids, 199 Mich. 20.

¶ 47. There is no such conflict between § 87 of the Grand Rapids city charter conferring powers upon a city manager after adoption of the commission form of government and § 88 providing that the mayor shall be recognized as the executive head of the city and shall exercise only such powers as the state laws, the charter, or the city commission specifically confer upon him, and the Home Rule Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, § 3, requiring that each city charter shall provide for the election of a mayor who shall be the executive head, as to raise a constitutional question or to make the charter as an entirety invalid.—Kopczynski v. Schriver, 194 Mich. 553.

¶ 47b. The rule that nothing will be taken by intendment in a legislative grant of power to a municipality, is not rendered inapplicable by the fact that the power delegated is one which could be exercised only through the local authorities, and not by the legislature directly.—Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. City of Detroit, 110 Mich. 384. Affirmed in 171 U. S. 48, 43 L. ed. 67, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 732.

Amendments to freeholders' charters, see post §§ 20, 21.

General rules as to amendment and repeal of charters, see Statutes, VII.

Amendment or repeal of charter power to issue bonds, see also Municipal Bonds ¶ 6.

¶ 49. City charters are amendable at pleasure by the legislature.—City of Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84.

¶ 50. A village charter is not repealed by a statute (amending the charter of a neighboring city) which detaches from the village the greater part of its territory, and which has the effect of vacating a majority of the village offices.—People v. Village of Highland Park, 88 Mich. 653.

¶ 51. Unless the legislative intent to repeal a charter can be deduced from a subsequent general act, it will be held that the charter is not repealed by implication, and an intention to except the municipality from the operation of the general law will be presumed.—People v. Wenzel, 105 Mich. 70.

¶ 52. The amendment of the charter of a municipal corporation by the legislature of its own motion, the notice required of the introduction of a bill for that purpose, and the construction to be given to Const. art. 15, § 16, Act of April 7, 1851, in relation to the notice to be given of application to be made for amendments to the charter of a corporation, considered, but not decided.—People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44.

¶ 53. Amendments to a city charter are to be construed as a part of the original charter.—Field v. Board Water Com'rs City of Manistee, 156 Mich. 186.

¶ 54. It was the intention of the legislature in passing Pub. Acts 1875, No. 62 (How. St., § 2768 et seq.), an act defining the duties and powers of incorporated villages, to enact a municipal code applicable to all villages subsequently incorporated by special act or under the mode provided by Pub. Acts 1857, No. 168 (How. St., § 2983 et seq.), and the later act supersedes the earlier, where they cover the same ground.—City of Gladstone v. Throop, 71 Fed. 341.

Scope and validity of provisions and compatibility with general laws and constitution, see post § 18.

The commission, its powers, and the framing and submission of the proposed charter, see post §§ 19, 20.

Votes and ratification or rejection of proposed charter, see post § 21.

Expenses of charter commission as exception to statutory requirement of previous appropriation, see post ¶ 598.

Amendment of charter by electors as delegation of legislative power, see Constitutional Law § 88.

Constitutional provisions for freeholders' charters, see Const. art. VIII, § 21.

¶ 55. Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, passed in pursuance of article 8, section 20 of the new Michigan Constitution, and providing for the incorporation of cities, applies to all cities with respect to its provisions for the amending of charters.—Common Council, City of Jackson v. Harrington, 160 Mich. 550.

¶ 56. The "Home Rule" Act (Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909), providing for freeholders' charters, applies to cities incorporated under local acts prior to the passage of Act No. 279.—Gallup v. City of Saginaw, 170 Mich. 195.

¶ 57. Under the Michigan Constitution, art. 8, § 20, and the "Home Rule" Act (Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909), providing for freeholders' charters for cities, the system is one of general grant of rights and powers, subject only to certain enumerated restrictions, instead of the former method of granting only enumerated rights and powers definitely specified.—Gallup v. City of Saginaw, 170 Mich. 195.

¶ 58. Under Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, a city may not amend its charter until it has revised it so as to contain the compulsory provisions of section 3 of the act and the restrictive provisions of section 5.—Attorney General ex rel. Hudson v. Common Council, City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 369.

§ 18. ——Scope and validity of provisions.

Bonding provisions, see also Municipal Bonds ¶¶ 15, 16.

Constitutional subjection to state constitution and general laws, see Const. art. VIII, § 21.

Writ of prohibition to prevent charter commission from removing member, see Prohibition, Writ of.

School affairs as matter beyond scope of home rule charters, see Schools I.

¶ 59. The Home Rule Act is one of the general laws of the state and, under § 36, How. 2nd Ed., § 5477, no city charter may be adopted pursuant to its provisions which contravenes the provisions of such act.—Crary v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 197 Mich. 452.

¶ 60. A provision of a city charter adopted under the Home Rule Act (Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., chap. 97) that the city should be represented on the board of supervisors, by certain officers to be designated by the city commissioners, is valid.—Attorney General ex rel. Lodge v. Bryan, 182 Mich. 86.

¶ 61. A city adopting a charter under the Home Rule Act (Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, How. St., 2nd Ed., chap. 97), is expressly prohibited from affecting local acts pertaining to the public schools.—Board of Education of Traverse City v. Straub, 182 Mich. 665.

¶ 62. In view of the clause of section 4b of Act 210 of Pub. Acts 1915 which prohibits a city from increasing by charter amendment, the amount which it may borrow by more than 2 per cent. of its assessed property valuation at any one time, a city of the fourth class which by charter amendment under the Home Rule Act (Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279) has reduced its borrowing rate for the purchase or construction of waterworks from 5 per cent. to 2 per cent. cannot by a single amendment restore the former rate.—North Michigan Water Co. v. City of Escanaba, 199 Mich. 286.

¶ 63. Since the Recorder's Court of the City of Detroit is a state agency in its execution of the criminal laws of the state, its jurisdiction in so far as it relates to matters of state concern cannot be affected by the electors of the city through a charter amendment.—Detroit Civil Service Commission v. Engle, 187 Mich. 83.

¶ 64. On a bill by a taxpayer for an injunction to restrain the commission of a city from selling and issuing bonds for the purpose of procuring funds for a new school building for which preliminary steps under its city charter, which was enacted under the Home Rule Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, How. 2nd Ed., § 5441 et seq., had been taken, it is immaterial whether the new charter contains language prohibiting the city from pledging its credit or raising city revenue by taxation to be turned over to the school board for education purposes, as such electors had no power, in adopting the new charter, to embody in it any provision relieving the city of rights, duties and obligations granted or imposed by the legislature upon it as a state agency in relation to the public schools.—MacQueen v. Port Huron City Commission, 194 Mich. 328.

¶ 65. Members of a charter commission created under Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 279, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 203, How. 2nd Ed., § 5442n, are local officers elected for the sole purpose of framing and proposing charters to be submitted to the municipal electors for acceptance or rejection.—Eikhoff v. Charter Commission of Detroit, 176 Mich. 535.

¶ 66. A charter commission created under Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 279, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 203, How. 2nd Ed., § 5442n, has only such powers as are specifically conferred upon it by the statute, and no further or greater powers can be given it by inference.—Eikhoff v. Charter Commission of Detroit, 176 Mich. 535.

¶ 67. A charter commission created under Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 279, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 203, How. 2nd Ed., § 5442n, has no power to oust and remove a member.—Eikhoff v. Charter Commission of Detroit, 176 Mich. 535.

¶ 68. The powers conferred upon a charter commission by Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 279, § 20, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 203, How. 2nd Ed., § 5442n, creating it, making it the sole judge of the qualifications and elections of its members and to fill vacancies, does not per se make it a legislative body.—Eikhoff v. Charter Commission of Detroit, 176 Mich. 535.

¶ 69. Where a vacancy in a charter commission created under Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 279, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 203, How. 2nd Ed., § 5442n, is created by the resignation of a member, and a person is appointed by the commission to fill the vacancy, the appointment is for the unexpired term.—Eikhoff v. Charter Commission of Detroit, 176 Mich. 535.

¶ 70. Where a city has, in pursuance of Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, cast a majority vote for revision of its charter, the common council is compelled under section 19 of said act to appropriate sufficient money to meet the expenses of a charter commission.—Attorney General v. Mayor & Common Council, City of Adrian, 164 Mich. 143.

¶ 71. Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, provides that to be eligible to the office of member of a city charter commission an elector must have a residence of at least three years in the municipality. Held, such act is not unconstitutional as contravening § 2, art. 16, Const. 1909, which provides that no other test than the oath of office prescribed by the Constitution shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust.—Attorney General ex rel. Selby v. MacDonald, 164 Mich. 590.

Voting and majority requisite to adoption, see post § 21.

¶ 72. Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, which was passed in pursuance of the Michigan Constitution of 1909 giving electors in cities the right to amend the city charters, is not unconstitutional by reason of the provision in said act which enables only twenty per cent. of the electors to initiate amendments instead of all the electors.—Attorney General ex rel. Hudson v. Common Council, City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 369.

¶ 73. The Michigan Constitution provides that under the general incorporation laws the electors of each city shall have power to amend its charter. Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, § 18, passed in pursuance of the Constitution, states that any city may submit to vote the question of the revision of its charter "when its legislative body shall by a two-thirds vote of its members elect declare for a general revision of the charter, when an initiatory petition shall be presented" by the electors. Held, the act meant to require only one and not both of the above steps as preliminary to the submission of the question.—Common Council, City of Jackson v. Harrington, 160 Mich. 550.

¶ 74. Section 21, Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, provides that where an amendment of a city charter originates in the legislature it shall lie on the table thirty days before action is taken on it. Held, this section has no application to the resolution of a city council to submit the question of revision of a charter to the electors under section 18 of said Act.—Common Council, City of Jackson v. Harrington, 160 Mich. 550.

¶ 75. The time when a charter to be framed by a charter commission shall be completed is limited to ninety days after the commission convenes, as provided by Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 279, §§ 15, 20, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 5456, 5461, which must be construed together, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 203.—Eikhoff v. Charter Commission of Detroit, 176 Mich. 535.

¶ 76. A charter commission, in submitting the question of adoption of a city charter to the electors under the Home Rule Law, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, How. 2nd Ed., § 5442 et seq., as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 5, may not submit alternative provisions.—Maher v. City of Jackson, 191 Mich. 266.

¶ 77. Section 21, Act No. 279, Pub. Acts of 1909, as amended by Act No. 203, Pub. Acts of 1911, relating to the submission of amendments to city charters by the common council, requires the submission at the next ensuing election after the proposed amendment is adopted by said council, whether said election be general or special.—Attorney General ex rel. Vernor v. Common Council, City of Detroit, 168 Mich. 249.

¶ 78. A municipal election ballot which asks the question whether the voter favors authorizing the common council to fix the compensation of certain elective and appointive officers of the City of Detroit within certain limitations, also to fix the compensation of subordinates to such officials, must be deemed sufficient to apprise the electors of the purpose and effect of a proposed amendment to the city charter where it is not shown that the electors were misled, and where it appears that the proposed amendment was printed in the official newspaper of the city; that 10,000 copies thereof were distributed by the city clerk among the electors of the city, and that the question of the adoption or rejection of the amendment was discussed in the public newspapers generally.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

General law of elections, see Elections.

¶ 79. A proposed city charter, which is submitted by the charter commission under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, How. 2nd Ed., § 5442 et seq., as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 5, will be regarded as adopted although an alternative section is improperly submitted at the same time, where the charter, in its entirety receives a strong affirmative vote and it is not shown that any elector was deceived or misled by the manner of submission into voting contrary to his intention on that proposition.—Maher v. City of Jackson, 191 Mich. 266.

¶ 80. A provision for an amendment to a specified section of a proposed city charter which, by the terms of its submission by the charter commission, will, if favorably acted upon, take the place of a designated section of the proposed charter, does not constitute an independent section, but an alternative section or proposition.—Maher v. City of Jackson, 191 Mich. 266.

¶ 81. At a municipal election, 1,246 votes were cast in favor of revising the city charter, as provided by Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, and 1,049 votes were cast against revision. The greatest number of votes cast at such election for any office was 2,749. Held, the proposition of revision was carried by the necessary majority vote.—Attorney General v. Mayor & Common Council, City of Adrian, 164 Mich. 143.

III. GENERAL FUNCTIONS, POWERS, AND MODE OF EXERCISE.

§ 22. Extent and source of power in general.

Powers on particular subjects, see post § 23 et seq.
Territorial limits and place for exercise of powers, see post §§ 28, 29.
Manner of exercising power, see post § 30.
Distribution and delegation of powers, see post §§ 31, 32.
Estoppel to question power or exercise thereof, see post § 33.
Police power and regulative power, see post IX.
Powers other than police or regulative, see post X-XIV.
Officers and organs for exercise of power, see post XV.
Scope and subjects of regulative and ordaining powers, see post IX.
Charter as exclusive measure of ordaining or regulative powers, see post § 75.
Implied powers to pass ordinances, see post § 75.
Power to acquire or dispose of property, see post X.
Inherent power to take and hold land, see post § 100.
Power to contract and incur debts, see post XI.
Power to borrow money, see post § 121.
Duty to take notice of want of power to contract, see post § 113.
Taxing and fiscal powers, see post XIII.
Proper objects and purposes of expenditure, see post § 144.
Public investigation of public questions as improper object of special expenditures, see post ¶ 611.
Power to issue bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 1.
Inherent power to remove officers, see post § 170.
Right of local self-government under the constitution, see Constitutional Law, II, C.
Legislative delegation of power on city, see Constitutional Law, II, D.
Authority of municipal corporations to exercise right of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain § 5.
Effect of repeal of constitutional prohibition to enlarge power under charter antedating constitutional provision, see also Intoxicating Liquors § 31.
Constitutional limitations on powers, see Const. art. VIII, § 25.

¶ 82. Municipal corporations take their powers from legislative enactments, and they are limited to those powers which are expressly granted, which are necessarily incident to the powers expressly granted, and which are essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation.—Taylor v. Bay City Street R. Co., 80 Mich. 77.

¶ 83. Municipal corporations possess only those powers which are expressly conferred, or necessarily implied, in consequence of their being essential to the exercise of their proper functions.—Stebbins v. Judge of Superior Court of Grand Rapids, 108 Mich. 693.

¶ 84. Powers exercised by municipal corporations are all derived from the legislature, and must be found either in the express words of the grant or be powers necessarily incident to those expressly granted or powers essential and indispensable to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation.—Weadock v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 156 Mich. 376.

¶ 85. The powers of municipal corporations must be strictly construed, and such corporations can exercise only those powers which are either granted by express words, or those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted, or those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient, but indispensable.—Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. City of Detroit, 64 Fed. 628.

¶ 86. A city has only such powers as have been conferred upon it by the legislature.—Wheeler v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 164 Mich. 338.

¶ 87. Municipal corporations possess no powers except those conferred by the acts creating them.—City of Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84.

¶ 88. The rights and powers of municipal corporations are limited by the laws under which they are organized.—City of Owosso v. Union Tel. Co., 185 Mich. 349.

¶ 89. The corporation of the city of Detroit has no power except that which is conferred by the act of incorporation or other acts specifically relating thereto.—Cooper v. Alden, H. 72.

¶ 90. The fact that a village has no power under its charter to assess a tax on forest products in transit to a point without the state is immaterial where a statute gives such power.—Diamond Match Co. v. Village of Ontonagon, 188 U. S. 82, 47 L. ed. 394, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 266.

¶ 91. Municipal authorities possess only the powers expressly conferred or necessarily implied.—Sullivan v. Bailey, 125 Mich. 104.

¶ 92. No city could be administered upon the merely expressed powers of its charter, without the aid of some implications.—Putnam v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 416.

¶ 93. A grave doubt as to the power of a municipality to pass an ordinance should be resolved against the existence of the power and the ordinance declared invalid.—Timm v. Common Council of the Village of Caledonia Station, 149 Mich. 323.

§ 23. Provision of public improvements.

Limitations on power to incur debts in providing improvements, see post § 122.

Power under the constitution to engage in internal improvements, see Constitutional Law § 282.

Local improvements within constitutional sanction, see Constitutional Law §§ 285, 286.

Power of municipal council to make local improvements, see Local Improvements §§ 5, 6.

Power of municipal council to require property owner to make improvement, see Local Improvements § 7.

Power of city to determine size and limits of assessment district for local improvement, see Local Improvements § 62.

Duty to construct, erect, or repair bridges and highways, see Bridges, V; Highways, IV, XII.

Street opening proceedings in cities and villages, see Highways, II, B, 5.

Authority of municipal council to choose newspaper for publication of notice of street opening proceedings, see Highways ¶ 269.

¶ 94. The legislature is not prohibited by section 14, article 10 of the State Constitution inhibiting the state from engaging in works of internal improvement from authorizing a city of the fourth class to erect and maintain public wharves.—Nicholls v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 455.

§ 24. Provision of public buildings and offices.

¶ 95. A city council has power to put up suitable public buildings for the purpose of city offices if the provisions of the charter do not prevent it.—Torrent v. Muskegon Common Council, 47 Mich. 115.

§ 25. Power to provide for public service or to operate utilities.

Public ownership and operation, see post § 109.

Power to grant franchises for public service of light and water, see post § 26.

Waterworks Act as addition to charter, see ante ¶ 43.

Prospective or retrospective operation of enabling acts, see also ante ¶ 44.

Power and other utility plants beyond limits of city, see post § 29.

Passage of preliminary resolution nunc pro tunc, see post ¶ 123.

Construction and effect of contracts for lighting or water supply, see post § 120.

Power to issue special utility bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 3.

¶ 96. Charter provisions empowering the common council to regulate the lighting of public lamps and to employ a suitable person to superintend them (How. St. § 4191), do not confine the management of the lighting apparatus or of any part of it to the city government, nor exclude the use of gas or electricity controlled from a central point. Such provisions are neither exhaustive nor imperative.—Putnam v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 416.

¶ 97. The common council of a city has the legal discretion to select any system of lighting that will furnish light of the required brilliancy at the lowest rates.—City of Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 384.

¶ 98. Under Pub. Acts 1891, No. 186 (Comp. L. 1897, § 3437 et seq.), a city council has the authority and the power to contract for electric lighting.—Belding Land & Improvement Co. v. City of Belding, 128 Mich. 79.

¶ 99. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 186 (Comp. L. 1897, § 3437 et seq.), being a general act relating to public lighting contracts, is not affected by Act No. 115 passed earlier but to take effect later, and which authorized cities to acquire works for supplying public lighting.—Belding Land & Improvement Co. v. City of Belding, 128 Mich. 79.

¶ 100. The corporate power of a city to own and operate a municipal electric plant and supply its inhabitants at prescribed rates, light, heat and power is conferred by the Constitution, art. VIII, § 23, and Comp. L. 1897, chap. 88, § 3258, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5784.—Andrews v. City of South Haven, 187 Mich. 294.

¶ 101. A city, in its operation and business management of an electric light plant, has the right and power to do those things naturally connected with and belonging to the running of such a business which a private corporation would have in the same connection.—Andrews v. City of South Haven, 187 Mich. 294.

¶ 102. A city may make a contract with a company to construct and maintain a system of waterworks and to furnish water to the city at stated prices.—Alpena City Water Co. v. City of Alpena, 130 Mich. 518.

¶ 103. There is nothing in Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. XXVI, § 1, How. 2nd Ed., § 5773, providing that cities of the fourth class may construct, or purchase waterworks, which limits its operation to cities having no water system.—North Michigan Water Co. v. City of Escanaba, 199 Mich. 286.

§ 26. ——Granting of franchises.

Necessity of ordinance or resolution to make grant, see also post § 30.
Franchises and granting of same in general, see Franchises.
Limitations on power to grant irrevocable franchises, see Const. art. VIII, § 25.
Limit of duration of franchises grantable by municipality, see Const. art. VIII, § 29.

¶ 104. The special charter of the city of Escanaba (Local Acts 1883, No. 245) expressly prohibited the city from granting exclusive franchises.—North Michigan Water Co. v. City of Escanaba, 199 Mich. 286.

¶ 105. The mere granting of a franchise by a city does not amount to an implied contract on the part of the city that it will do nothing to impair the value of the franchise or that it will not grant a rival franchise to a competing company or enter into competition itself in reference to the subject of the franchise.—North Michigan Water Co. v. City of Escanaba, 199 Mich. 286.

§ 27. Engagement in trade, commerce, or manufacturing.

Power to own and operate public utility plants, see also ante § 25; post § 109.

¶ 106. A city has no implied power to engage in the manufacture of brick to be used in the paving of its streets.—Attorney General v. Detroit Common Council, 150 Mich. 310.

¶ 107. City authorities have the right, through the board of poor commissioners, to provide fuel for needy citizens, and in an emergency, when a coal famine seems imminent, are authorized to purchase such amount of fuel in any market as is in their opinion necessary for that purpose; but a city cannot enter into a commercial enterprise, such as buying and selling coal to its citizens as a business, thereby entering into competition with dealers in coal, such use of money being held to be not for a public purpose.—Baker v. City of Grand Rapids, 142 Mich. 687.

¶ 108. The furnishing to customers taking electricity the necessary devices or equipment to produce heat, power or light from the current is incidental to and an implied power connected with the business of operating a municipal electric light plant, and supplying light, heat, power, and transportation.—Andrews v. City of South Haven, 187 Mich. 294.

§ 28. Extraterritorial powers.

¶ 109. A city or other municipal corporation cannot usually exercise its powers beyond its own limits; and if it has in any case authority to do so, the authority must be derived from some statute which expressly or impliedly permits it.—City of Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474.

§ 29. ——Extra-limitary works and properties.

Constitutional power to acquire extra-limitary properties and works, see Const. art. VIII, § 22.

¶ 110. The authority of a city to provide sewerage beyond the city limits may be implied from the existence of a state of facts which renders it actually necessary or manifestly desirable, as where a city, though bounded by a stream, is required by its charter to preserve the stream from pollution, and prevent the depositing of filth therein, and no other outlet is reasonably available except through means of ditches extending beyond the limits.—City of Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474.

¶ 111. Where the drainage of a city requires an outlet beyond the city limits, and the surroundings are such as to raise the implication of authority in the city to conduct the works beyond its limits, the city must be permitted to retain some discretion as to arrangements by which it shall accomplish the purpose; and there is no legal obstacle to its undertaking to do this work by its own servants or contractors, instead of employing the owner of the premises to do it.—City of Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474.

¶ 112. The right of a city to take possession of, and improve as a public park, lands lying outside of its limits, comes only by sovereign grant, and so far as concerns the city is a public franchise.—Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 602.

¶ 113. A city may hold and own lands for a public park, and cause them to be improved, not in its public capacity as an agency of the government and subject to state control, but as a corporate individual having private rights which the people have a constitutional right to enjoy undisturbed.—Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 602.

¶ 115. A city by charter was given the right to establish a hospital for infectious diseases, outside of its limits. The general health law of the state, Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4436, 4437, 4459, 4471, provides that no infected person shall be brought into a township without the permission of its health authorities. Held, the power of the city to establish such a hospital outside its limits is subject to the consent of the township.—Township of Summit v. City of Jackson, 154 Mich. 37.

§ 30. Mode and organs for exercising power; ordinance or resolution.

Manner of councilmanic procedure in meetings and in voting on ordinances and resolutions, see post § 35 et seq.

Mode of official action on behalf of city, see post § 193.

Name in which to sue or defend, see post § 212.

Submission to electors of proposals to contract or incur debts, see post § 115; Municipal Bonds § 4.

Mode of action necessary to accept dedication, see Dedication §§ 8-11.

Procedure and acts incident to making public improvements, see also Local Improvements.

¶ 116. The municipal authorities are the duly constituted representatives of the people of the city and are the only governmental agencies provided for conserving the interests of the public.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 172 Mich. 136, aff'd in 229 U. S. 39, 57 L. ed. 1056, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697.

¶ 117. It seems that action by a common council is not void merely because taken by motion instead of by resolution as the charter provides.—Bishop v. Lambert, 114 Mich. 110.

¶ 118. The provision of Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 8, § 7, that no resolution appropriating money shall be adopted by the council except by ordinance or resolution cannot be evaded by embracing such action in the form of a motion to employ public servants at a specified salary. The motion is a resolution.—Bishop v. Lambert, 114 Mich. 110.

¶ 119. Under Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, chap. 5, § 5, a contract for supplying water to a village need not be put into the form of an ordinance, but may be entered into by resolution, so that the form in which it was entitled or published is immaterial.—Lewick v. Glazier, 116 Mich. 493.

¶ 120. A charter provision that when the common council shall have decided upon making any public improvement, it shall so declare by resolution, whereupon the board of public works shall make an estimate of the cost, is substantially complied with where the council by resolution recited the intention and understanding that an act would be introduced at the next legislature to authorize the issue of bonds for a bridge, and directed plans, specifications and estimates to be made, and other similar resolutions were subsequently acted upon and passed.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 132 Mich. 395.

¶ 121. Though under Comp. L. 1897, § 6446, the right to construct and maintain street car lines in cities and villages can be granted only by ordinance, the right to change a curve in the track may be given by resolution or motion, though the ordinance granting the rights in the streets did not mention curves, it being reasonable to suppose that this was one of the incidentals of the construction of the road which was to be under the control of the common council.—Mannel v. Detroit, Mt. C. & M. City Ry., 139 Mich. 106.

¶ 122. Under an ordinance granting a street railway rights in a street and providing that the location of poles, and the location and construction of sidetracks, spurs and switches should be under the control of the common council, a change in the location of a curve in the track may be authorized by resolution or motion and the duty of the council, being ministerial, may be delegated to the committee on streets or to a proper official.—Mannel v. Detroit, Mt. C. & M. City Ry., 139 Mich. 106.

¶ 123. Where the charter of a city requires that a resolution determining the expediency of a project be adopted by the board of aldermen before the common council shall have power to enter into the construction of a lighting plant, the adoption of such resolution of expediency after the letting of contracts for construction of the plant is of no avail, being an attempt made after an act to supply the necessary preliminary power to do the act.—Bay City Traction & Electric Co. v. Bay City, 155 Mich. 393.

¶ 124. Where at an election regularly petitioned for, ordered, and held under Laws 1891, Act No. 186, entitled "An act to authorize the cities and villages of this State to provide for the lighting of their streets and other public places therein by means of electric or other lights," a majority of the qualified electors of a city votes in favor of "constructing works" for public lighting, it is not within the power of the city council wholly to set aside that action, and at once let a "contract for furnishing of light" to private parties for a term of years.—George v. Wyandotte Electric Light Co., 105 Mich. 1.

¶ 124a. Failure of village council to pass and record formal resolutions requiring and approving new bond from treasurer which is voluntarily executed by him and accepted by council, held no defense in suit on bond against principal and surety.—Evart v. Postal, 86 Mich. 325.

§ 31. Distribution of power and authority among councils, officers, and citizens.

Delegability of power, see post § 32.
Power through adoption of freeholders' charter to confer authority on councils or officers or to change their relative powers, see ante § 18.
Power over offices and officers, see post XV.
Investigations of official doings by council, see post § 195.
Purpose and necessity of approval by council of contract for public work, see Public Contracts, II.
Powers of health officers, see generally Health.
Powers of water boards, see Waters, VI.
Power of health board to compel enlargement of city sewer in order to abate nuisance caused by its deficiency to carry sewage from other city lawfully discharged into the sewer, see Health ¶¶ 24, 25.
Jurisdiction of drain commissioner to lay drain within city territory, see Drains § 24.

¶ 125. The citizens of a municipality cannot confer upon the common council functions not left with them by the charter.—Torrent v. Muskegon Common Council, 47 Mich. 115.

¶ 126. A city council, if authorized by statute, can take action involving the expenditure of public money, without the approval of any other body, whether of taxpayers alone or of electors generally; and while it is proper and legal to provide that it may do so with approval of the taxpayers, such a provision is not required by the constitution.—Callam v. City of Saginaw, 50 Mich. 7.

¶ 127. The commissioners of parks and boulevards of the City of Detroit are the proper administrative body to carry out ordinances, providing for the care, custody, and keeping of the streets and other highways of the city, and may hire necessary employees who are subject to their provision and control.—Commissioners of Parks, etc. v. Common Council of Detroit, 80 Mich. 663.

¶ 128. The Detroit park commissioners have administrative power under ordinances enacted by the common council over the bridge leading to Belle Isle Park, but Local L. 1889, Act No. 388, § 11, providing that such commissioners "may make all suitable and needful rules and regulations respecting the use of said bridge," undertaking to give them legislative power of regulation, is so far invalid.—Commissioners of Parks, etc. v. Common Council of Detroit, 80 Mich. 663.

¶ 129. Where the legislative control of the streets is vested in the common council and the administrative control in a board of public works, the board of public works is the proper body to authorize and permit a street railway company to put in such turnouts, etc., as are necessary.—Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co. v. Board of Public Works of Detroit, 126 Mich. 554.

¶ 130. In view of the provision of Pub. Acts 1901, No. 222, § 12, that the board of estimates and common council "shall annually insert in their tax levy a sufficient sum to meet the expenditures incurred under the provisions of this act," there was no power conferred on the cities to make the payment of fees for plumbing inspections under such act a condition precedent to the doing of plumbing work otherwise conformable to the regulations of the plumbing board; and this construction is strengthened by the provision of section 4 of the act that a fee of two dollars be charged for each person applying for examination under the act.—People v. Decker, 141 Mich. 304.

See also ante ¶ 122.
Appointment of committees by councils, see post § 35.
Delegation of control over litigation to mayor, see also post ¶ 828.

¶ 131. While the common council of a city may not delegate all the power conferred upon it by the legislature, like any other corporation, it may do its ministerial work by agents.—City of Flint v. Stockdale's Estate, 149 Mich. 214.

¶ 132. The acts of the mayor of a city in signing a claim of appeal and an appeal bond in an action in which the city was interested were mere ministerial acts which may properly be delegated to him by the city council.—City of Flint v. Stockdale's Estate, 149 Mich. 214.

¶ 133. A common council cannot delegate to a street committee the power to grade and ditch a street according to their discretion.—Chilson v. Wilson, 38 Mich. 267.

¶ 134. Power lodged by statute in a city council to make reasonable regulations in regard to the use of poles erected in the city for electric lighting cannot be delegated to a committee.—Citizens' Electric Light & P. Co. v. Sands, 95 Mich. 551.

§ 33. Estoppel to assert or deny power or exercise thereof.

Act of officer as estoppel on city, see post § 192.
Issuance of warrant as estoppel on city, see post § 160.
Capacity of parties to become bound by estoppel, see also Estoppel § 3.
Nonestoppel by resolution not acted on and then rescinded, see also Estoppel ¶ 212.
Estoppel to question validity of bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 17.
Rights under executed ultra vires public contracts, see Public Contracts, V.

¶ 135. A municipal corporation cannot be estopped by an act void in its inception and wholly ultra vires.—Bogart v. Township of Lamotte, 79 Mich. 294.

¶ 136. A city which retains the benefits of a contract that is neither malum prohibitum or malum in se, though in part ultra vires, and which has been fully performed by the other party, is estopped from denying the validity of the contract on the ground of defective execution.—Coit v. City of Grand Rapids, 115 Mich. 498.

§ 34. Judicial interference or control.

In matters of councilmanic procedure, see post § 35.
Grounds for interference with tax levies, see also post ¶ 578.
Interference with discretion to settle and compromise claim, see post ¶ 696.
Declaring ordinances void for unreasonableness, see post § 57.
Propriety of suit by attorney general, see also post § 208.
Remedy for diversion or misuse of public funds, see also post § 146.
Occasion and propriety of injunctions against acts of municipality or its officers, see Injunctions, II, D.
Irreviewableness of decision letting contract, see Public Contracts, II, VI.

¶ 137. Courts do not look with favor upon injunction bills to restrain or hinder the completion of public improvements unless there is proof of fraud or of such exorbitant prices that fraud may be inferred.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 132 Mich. 395.

¶ 138. Courts cannot interfere with the discretion of municipal bodies in the expenditure of public funds unless it has been plainly abused and practically exceeded under pretense of keeping within their charter powers.—Torrent v. Muskegon Common Council, 47 Mich. 115.

¶ 139. The discretionary power under city charter of determining how many officers are required for certain duties is one of a legislative character, which can neither be reviewed nor made the basis of an action against the city. The number fixed must be assumed to be all that was needed for the proper care of the interests intrusted to them.—Dewey v. City of Detroit, 15 Mich. 307.

¶ 140. Equity cannot interfere with municipal contracts on the ground that they are improper or unwise, but only on the ground that they exceed the powers granted the municipality by its charter.—Putnam v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 416.

¶ 141. Courts of equity cannot stand between citizens and municipal authorities to shield them from abuses and extravagant action, unless they exceed their powers; since it is one of the incidents of popular government that the people must bear the consequences of the mistakes of their representatives.—Putnam v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 416.

¶ 142. The power of the state through its attorney general to file informations involving the validity of municipal action is an exercise of its visitorial authority to enjoin municipal corporations from doing those acts which are prohibited or which are in excess of their corporate powers, and the essence of such informations is necessarily the averment of such transgression of law by the municipality or its officers.—Attorney General ex rel. McRae v. Thompson, 167 Mich. 507.

¶ 143. Private citizens cannot dictate through the courts what shall be done in the line of a city's public duty.—Bauman v. Campau, 58 Mich. 444.

¶ 143a. The courts cannot review the decision of the common council of a city in accepting and approving of work done under a contract where neither fraud nor mistake is charged.—Motz v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

IV. MEETINGS, VOTES, PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE, AND RECORDS.

§ 35. In general; councilmanic procedure.

Calling of meetings, notices, and proofs of notices, see post § 36.
Votes and voting and majorities, see post §§ 37-42.
Minutes and records, see post § 43.
Procedure on resolution to submit freeholders' charter to electors, see ante § 20.
Resolution or ordinance as better mode of exercising powers, see ante § 30.
Power to delegate performance of duties, see ante § 32.
Character and representative nature of office of alderman or councilman, see post § 163.
Concurrence or assent to appointments to office, see post § 166.
Procedure before council for removal of officer, see post § 171.
Time for making tax levy, see post § 139.
Mandamus to compel attendance at council meetings, see Mandamus ¶¶ 522-524.
Mandamus to compel declaration of vote on resolution, see Mandamus ¶ 532.
Libel or slander based on statements contained in official reports or communications, see Libel and Slander, § 36.

¶ 144. The courts will not disturb a ruling of the council on a question of parliamentary law.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

viously directed, but which there had been an abortive attempt to rescind, is not new business, subject to postponement on objection by one member of council.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 146. Saginaw City Charter provided that the common council should prescribe the rules for the transaction of its business and for its proceedings, which rules should have the effect of law. Among the rules adopted was one providing that no resolution or proceeding imposing taxes or assessments, or requiring the payment, expenditure, or disposition of money, or creating a debt or liability therefor, should be passed at the same meeting at which it was introduced, if objection should be made by any member. The council, proceeding upon the theory that a prior resolution had limited to $90,000 the present issue of bridge bonds theretofore duly authorized in the sum of $200,000, adopted a resolution providing for the issue of $165,000 of such bonds, and directing the manner of their disposition. Held, that said resolution was not new business, within the prohibition of the rule.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 147. A common council of a city may choose its own method for collecting information, and may conduct investigations through a committee of outsiders or through the mayor, provided the investigation is made in its behalf, in accordance with its directions, and subject to its control, and the results reported to it for its action.—Attorney General ex rel. Maguire v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 157 Mich. 615. (Brooke, Hooker and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 148. A presiding officer cannot arbitrarily adjourn a meeting in defiance of the majority present. So held, where at a meeting of the Detroit common council after the yeas and nays were legally demanded on a motion to adjourn, the president, without calling the roll or putting the question, declared the council adjourned, and left the chair.—Dingwall v. Common Council of Detroit, 82 Mich. 568.

§ 36. Calling, notices, and proofs of notice of meetings.

Power to adjourn meetings, see ante § 35.
Presumptions as to notice of meeting where record is silent, see post ¶ 312.

¶ 149. The appointment or call of a special meeting of the council of a village incorporated under Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, need not be in writing or state the object of the meeting, nor need it be filed or made matter of record. Chapter 5, § 4, of the act merely requires that "notice" of the meeting must be in writing, etc.—Lewick v. Glazier, 116 Mich. 493.

¶ 150. Evidence sufficiently shows that notice of a special meeting of a village council was properly served, and that the meeting was lawful, where the president testified that he called the meeting, the marshal that he served notice of it on all the members of the council that he could find and left notices at the houses of the others six hours before the meeting and then told the president of his doings and filed his return with the clerk, and where such a return is in the record book pasted there, and all the testimony is corroborated.—Lewick v. Glazier, 116 Mich. 493.

¶ 151. Proof of the service of notice of a special meeting of a village council is not to be held defective merely because the village clerk pasted the return upon the page of the journal of the council's proceedings instead of filing it.—Lewick v. Glazier, 116 Mich. 493.

¶ 152. Action taken at a special meeting of a city council is not invalid for want of proof of due notice of the meeting, where it appears from the record of the vote taken that all of the members were present.—Auditor General v. Hutchinson, 113 Mich. 245.

§ 37. Votes and voting; majority or number required.

For passage of appropriation or revenue bills, see post § 38.
For passage over veto, see post § 39.
For reconsideration, see post § 40.
Disqualification to vote by interest in subject or result, see post § 41.
Casting off tie votes, see post § 42.
"Majority" required for appointment to office, see post § 166.
Vote required for removal of officer, see post § 171.
Recording of ayes and nays of vote, see post § 48.
Ratification of insufficient vote by later action, see post § 67.
Presumption as to character of vote or majority, see post § 70.
Votes necessary to authorize issuance of bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 4.

¶ 153. The charter of Detroit declares that the common council shall have power by a two-thirds vote to authorize the board of police commissioners to offer a reward for the detection and apprehension of any one found guilty of offenses against the city ordinances or of high crimes and misdemeanors within the city. Held, that in view of this provision the council has no power by a majority vote, and independently of the police commissioners, to authorize the mayor to offer rewards for the conviction of incendiaries.—Loveland v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 367.

¶ 154. The charter of Port Huron requires a majority vote of the whole council for the appointment of officers, and provides that appointees shall hold for one year. It elsewhere, and by subsequent enactment, provides for a board of police commissioners to hold office four years. Held, that a practical construction by the council which applies to these officers the same requirement of a majority vote will not be disturbed.—Baker v. Port Huron Police Com'rs, 62 Mich. 327.

¶ 155. General provisions of a city charter regulating the enactment of ordinances and resolutions do not apply to the performance of the duty imposed upon the common council by How. St. § 2283d1, as to the approval of liquor bonds; and in the absence of contrary provisions in the charter a majority vote of the members present at a legal meeting of the council is sufficient for approval.—O'Halloran v. Jackson, 107 Mich. 138.

¶ 156. There is no acceptance of an attempted dedication of a street where out of fifteen members of the common council seven voted for the resolution accepting the deed and six voted against it and the charter, Local Acts No. 131, section 74, provides that no resolution shall be passed except by the vote of the majority of all members elected. —Gregory v. City of Ann Arbor, 127 Mich. 454.

§ 38. ——Revenue, appropriation or tax bills.

Vote required to rescind or reconsider two-thirds vote, see post § 40.

Right of mayor to cast off tie vote, see post § 42.

¶ 157. Where a village charter provides that the president and six trustees shall constitute the common council, and that no tax shall be ordered except by a two-thirds vote of the members, a vote of five members is required for a resolution ordering an assessment.—Whitney v. Hudson Common Council, 69 Mich. 189.

¶ 158. Where a city is incorporated under the general law (How. St. ch. 80), any resolution or ordinance of its common council incurring a liability that must be met by taxation requires a concurring two-thirds vote of all the aldermen-elect.—Tennant v. Crocker, 85 Mich. 328.

¶ 159. The common council of a city, incorporated under How. St. ch. 80, by a tie vote of the aldermen-elect, and the casting vote of the mayor, who claimed the right to break the tie, assumed to pass a resolution authorizing the mayor and city clerk to enter into a contract for the purchase of a designated parcel of land at a stated price, to be used in widening a city street. Held that, by entering into said contract pursuant to such resolution, a liability would be at once incurred not provided for in said annual appropriation bill, and which the council are prohibited from incurring without a vote of the electors under How. St. § 2706, for which reason the action of the mayor in declaring the resolution carried cannot be upheld; and that, were the council not so prohibited, a concurring vote of two-thirds of all the aldermen-elect would be required under How. St. § 2515, providing that no private property shall be taken for public use, except by a concurring vote of two-thirds of the aldermen.—Tennant v. Crocker, 85 Mich. 328.

¶ 160. A resolution fixing an officer's salary is one making it obligatory that there be an appropriation of money; and so is within a charter provision requiring a majority vote of all the aldermen-elect to adopt a resolution appropriating money.—Fournier v. Mayor, etc., of West Bay City, 94 Mich. 463.

¶ 161. The employment of firemen by a city council, at a specified monthly salary, constitutes an appropriation of money, within the meaning of a charter provision (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 8, § 7), that such action can only be taken by a majority vote of the aldermen-elect.—Bishop v. Lambert, 114 Mich. 110.

¶ 162. The action of the common council of a city of the fourth class, incorporated under Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, in adopting, by a bare majority vote, a motion providing for the employment of firemen at a specified salary per month, is invalid, unless the necessary funds are already provided, under chapter 8, section 7 of that act, requiring the concurrence of two-thirds of the aldermen-elect to impose a tax.—Bishop v. Lambert, 114 Mich. 110.

¶ 163. A resolution of the city council of St. Clair as to the use of money borrowed for a specific purpose and attempted to be devoted to another purpose, adopted by a tie vote of the aldermen, with the affirmative vote of the mayor cannot create an obligation on the part of the city to be met by taxation or to lay a tax; and is invalid unless it amounted to a mere distribution of funds already on hand to the purpose for which the funds were raised, since the charter requires a two-thirds vote to transfer funds.—Vossen v. City of St. Clair, 148 Mich. 686.

¶ 164. Where a city charter authorized the council to restrain, license and regulate saloons, and the council passed an ordinance by a majority vote (a two-thirds vote is required for imposing a tax) to restrain, license, and regulate saloons and other places where intoxicating liquors are sold and prescribing locations thereof, and requiring persons desiring to engage in such business to make written application to the council for a license, to pay $500, and containing an agreement on the part of the applicant that he will accept the license upon the condition that it may be revoked by the council at its will, but giving him opportunity to be heard before revocation, and providing punishments for violation of any requirements of the ordinance, such ordinance must be held to be for the purpose of regulation and not revenue and may be sustained in so far as the amount of the license fee is concerned, and need not have been passed by a two-thirds vote.—Wells v. Torrey, 144 Mich. 689.

§ 39. ——On vetoed bills and resolutions.

Adoption of resolution tantamount to adoption of original resolution as passage of original over veto, see post ¶ 185.

¶ 165. Under § 103, Detroit Charter, requiring a two-thirds vote of all the members elected of the common council to pass an ordinance over the mayor's veto, the affirmative vote of 22 members is not sufficient where 34 were elected and one had died and one resigned.—Pollasky v. Schmid, 128 Mich. 699.

§ 40. ——On reconsideration or revocation of previous vote.

Ratification or revocation of vote by later action, see post § 67.

¶ 166. A corporate act which can only be taken by a majority vote of all of the aldermen-elect cannot be rescinded except by a like vote.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 167. Where, by the charter, a two-thirds vote is required to pass a resolution ordering a tax, it cannot be reconsidered or rescinded except by a like vote.—Whitney v. Hudson Common Council, 69 Mich. 189.

¶ 168. Under a charter authorizing the city council to cause a new assessment to be made for a public improvement in place of an invalid one, a majority of the council has power to rescind their action in ordering the original assessment; and where the reassessment is ordered to be made by a vote of two-thirds of all the aldermen-elect, as required by the charter, the proceedings cannot be attacked because the original assessment was ordered by a greater number of the members of the council.—Townsend v. City of Manistee, 88 Mich. 408.

Disqualification of mayor to cast off tie, see post § 42, ¶ 173.

Invalidity of contracts with public affected with personal interest of officer officiating, see Public Contracts.

¶ 169. The vote of an alderman, as such, for a public improvement for which, as an individual, he was a petitioner, is not void.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

¶ 170. That one of the trustees of a village is related to a person to whom a contract for supplying the village with water is proposed to be given, does not disqualify such trustee from voting upon the matter.—Lewick v. Glazier, 116 Mich. 493.

¶ 171a. A member's liability to materialmen because of failure to take a bond from a public contractor disqualifies such member to vote on a claim for work presented to the council.—Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637.

¶ 171b. Unless a petitioner for mandamus to compel recognition as officer elected by vote of the council shows that he was elected without his own vote as councilman, his petition must be denied.—Tinker v. Board of Public Works of City of Jackson, 97 Mich. 616.

§ 42. Tie vote and casting vote.

Insufficiency of majority made by casting vote, see ante § 38.

¶ 172. Under Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 8, § 7, providing that no money shall be appropriated by cities incorporated thereunder except by ordinance or resolution of the council, and that no resolution shall be passed or adopted "except by the vote of a majority of all the aldermen elected to office, except as herein otherwise provided," and section 2, giving the mayor the casting vote in case of a tie, the mayor may vote, in case of a tie, upon a resolution appropriating money.—Bishop v. Lambert, 114 Mich. 110.

¶ 173. A mayor who employed an attorney to bring action to prevent the diversion of public funds by the city council, in which proceeding the mayor's contention prevailed, is not precluded from casting the deciding vote on a resolution to pay the attorney so employed where the vote was a tie, the mayor not having a "direct personal interest" which would prevent him from voting where he had expressly avoided any personal liability to the attorney.—Smedley v. Kirby, 120 Mich. 253.

Publication and recording of ordinances and resolutions, see post § 48.

Presumptions and evidence as to vote and passage, see post § 70.

Proofs of notice of meetings of councils, see ante § 36.

Record of action taken by board or officer, see post § 193.

Records of meetings and votes on bond issues, see Municipal Bonds § 4.

Mandamus to compel proper keeping of records, see Mandamus § 104.

General law of public records, see Records.

Police records and "rogues' gallery," expunging of matter on discharge of person arrested, see Records.

Power of court to cause prosecuting attorney to surrender public city records held for use as evidence, see Records.
Minute books and records as documentary evidence, see Evidence § 534.
Record required by charter as best evidence, see Evidence § 121.
Parol evidence to contradict or vary or explain records, see Evidence § 195.

¶ 174. Village councils are required by §§ 2731-2752, Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5950-5971, How. St., 2nd Ed., to keep a record of their proceedings which is the best and in most cases the only lawful evidence of official acts.—Labadie v. Village of Ford, 185 Mich. 402.

¶ 175. In matters involving the discretion or judgment of the city council where no bad faith or fraud is alleged, parties cannot go behind the recorded vote to show want of knowledge or good judgment.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

V. ENACTMENT, FORM, AND REQUISITES OF ORDINANCES AND RESOLUTIONS.

Titles, enacting clauses and other formal parts, see post § 45.
Approval or veto and passage over veto, see post §§ 46, 47.
Publication and recording of ordinances, see post § 48.
Meetings and votes of councils, see ante IV.
Nature, construction, validity, operation and effect of ordinances and resolutions, and proof of them, see post VI.
Proper subjects of regulation and ordinances within powers of city, see post IX.
Vote required for passage, see ante §§ 37-40.
Requirement of reasonableness, see post §§ 50, 57.
Requisite determinations to support tax levies, see post § 139.
Declination to consider motives of council for purpose of avoiding ordinances, see post § 57.

§ 45. Titles, enacting clauses, and other formal parts.

¶ 176. An ordinance is not void for containing matters not expressed in its title; the constitutional provision relating to titles of statutes does not apply to city ordinances.—People v. Hanrahan, 75 Mich. 611; People v. Wagner, 86 Mich. 594.

¶ 177. The omission of the enacting clause from an ordinance does not necessarily nullify the ordinance, particularly if the charter does not so provide (Local L. 1877, p. 213, § 17).—People v. Murray, 57 Mich. 396.

§ 46. Approval or veto.

Immateriality of veto of rescinding resolution which lacked sufficient vote, see also post ¶ 297.
Vote required on vetoed bills and resolutions, see ante § 39.
Sufficiency of occasion for president of council to act as vice mayor, see post § 178.

¶ 178. Where a city charter requires that any resolution of the council must be approved by the mayor in writing, he must write his approval upon the resolution and sign it, and his mere oral approval of the resolution or the approval of the journal containing the resolution is not a compliance with the charter.—Whitney v. City of Port Huron, 88 Mich. 268.

¶ 179. Where the charter provides that the resolutions of the city council shall be submitted to the mayor and "if the mayor approve thereof * * * thereupon such resolution shall go into effect" (Local Acts 1879, No. 408), an assessment for public improvements, undertaken in accordance with the provisions of a resolution which has not been so submitted, is invalid.—Twiss v. City of Port Huron, 63 Mich. 528.

¶ 180. Where labor was performed under a contract with the city of Detroit before the charter of 1857 took effect, and the common council, after the new charter, passed a resolution for the settlement of the contractor's claim, it was held that the resolution did not require the approval of the mayor.—Chaffee v. Granger, 6 Mich. 51.

¶ 181. The charter of Detroit provides that certain resolutions, etc., of the common council before taking effect shall be presented by the clerk to the mayor, who may either approve or disapprove them, and if he neglects to approve or return the same at the next regular meeting after they shall have been presented to him the same shall go into effect; held, that the mayor has until the first regular meeting of the common council, after the clerk has presented such resolutions, to approve or disapprove, and the clerk by withholding the resolutions over a regular meeting cannot thereby deprive the mayor of his right or make them effective, nor does it matter what length of time may intervene between the date of the passage and presentation and the next regular meeting.—City of Detroit v. Moran, 46 Mich. 213.

¶ 182. Where the charter of a city (Local Acts 1897, No. 442, chap. 5, § 3) empowers the council to "appoint one chief of police and such other number of policemen * * * as they shall deem necessary" a resolution which not merely selects an additional policeman but determines whether there shall be such an officer is subject to veto by the mayor, whether the power to veto an election exists or not.—Kindermann v. City of West Bay City, 117 Mich. 516.

¶ 183. A contention that a resolution recommending the transference of money from a contingent fund to other funds is not subject to veto by the mayor, cannot be sustained as the statute (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 9, § 3) applying to cities of the fourth class and providing that no ordinance or resolution shall have any force or effect though passed by the council, if a veto message is interposed, unless the same is passed over the veto by a two-thirds vote, applies to all ordinances and resolutions.—Baar v. Kirby, 118 Mich. 392.

¶ 184. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 9, § 3, applying to cities of the fourth class, and requiring a mayor who vetoes an ordinance or resolution to lodge it in the office of the city clerk within three days, is sufficiently complied with where a mayor goes to the city clerk's office, and finding it closed, delivers the veto to the clerk at his residence about seven o'clock in the evening of the last day.—Baar v. Kirby, 118 Mich. 392.

¶ 185. Where, upon the delivery to a city council of a message of the mayor refusing to approve a resolution appointing a sidewalk inspector, a motion that the resolution be again adopted, notwithstanding the veto, is declared lost for want of the necessary vote, and an appeal from the decision of the mayor, refusing to treat as properly before the council a demand for a second roll-call, is sustained, and a motion to proceed to the election of a sidewalk inspector is carried by the vote necessary to the adoption of the vetoed resolution, and a resolution appointing the same candidate to said office is carried by a like vote, the proceedings amount to a passage of the first resolution over the veto.—Caswell v. Marsac, 99 Mich. 417.

§ 48. Publication and recording of ordinances and resolutions.

Effect of failure to record, see also post ¶ 228.

Exclusiveness of record as evidence, see post § 70.

Presumptions and evidence as to vote and passage of ordinance, see post § 70.

Right to recover on implied contract for printing ordinances, see Public Contracts, V.

¶ 186. The charter of Hudson provides that no ordinance shall take effect until it has been published once in each week for two weeks successively. Held, that two full weeks must elapse between the passage of the act and the date of its taking effect.—Van Alstine v. People, 37 Mich. 523.

¶ 187. The time during which a publication of village ordinances must be continued cannot be fixed by any mere ministerial officer without express authority, but must be fixed by the legislative body of the village, which would also have authority to designate the paper in which the publication must be made.—Thornton v. Village of Sturgis, 38 Mich. 639.

¶ 188. Where a city charter requires that "all ordinances shall be published for three successive days, and shall take effect in ten days after their enactment, provided, however, that the council may fix and prescribe a different period, and that no ordinance shall take effect before one publication thereof," an ordinance which provides that it shall take immediate effect, and which is approved August 2, 1889, may be enforced for a violation committed August 10, 1889, publication having intervened.—People v. Keir, 78 Mich. 98.

¶ 189. If a city charter provides that no ordinance shall take effect unless published at least one week in the official paper of the city, publication as often as the paper is issued is sufficient, and it is immaterial that the paper has no Monday issue.—Richter v. Harper, 95 Mich. 221.

¶ 190. Sections 3086, 3087, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 5608, 5609, do not make publication of a penal ordinance adopted by a city of the fourth class a prerequisite to its validity.—Vernakes v. City of South Haven, 186 Mich. 595.

¶ 191. A common council, in levying taxes, can act only by resolution or by-laws adopted at a meeting, and the proceedings of such meeting cannot be left in parol.—Moser v. White, 29 Mich. 59.

¶ 192. Where the charter of Bay City declared that the recorder "shall keep a record of any ordinance enacted, and of the time of its publication, which record shall be signed by the mayor and recorder," it was held that the omission of such a ministerial duty did not defeat an ordinance lawfully adopted by the common council; otherwise the mayor and recorder would have a veto power not contemplated by the charter.—Stevenson v. Bay City, 26 Mich. 44.

¶ 193. The East Saginaw charter (Laws 1859, Act No. 246) required that in certain cases the vote of a city council should be entered at large on their minutes; the ayes and nays on each resolution embraced within the terms of the act must be so entered to show who voted, and how. The record that a resolution "was adopted unanimously on call," the names of those voting not appearing otherwise than by the statement as to who were present at the opening of the session, is not a compliance with the statute.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

¶ 194. As there is no other legal way of determining whether a majority of all the aldermen have voted on the passage of an ordinance, the record should set forth the yeas and nays. The importance of accuracy in city records commented on.—McCormick v. Bay City, 23 Mich. 457.

¶ 195. A city ordinance admittedly presented to the mayor and signed and approved by him in time, then recorded in the "Record of Ordinances" according to statute by the clerk and therein certified by him as published, the original ordinance being signed and indorsed, is valid. The city clerk's failure to record it in the council's journal does not avoid it.—Boehme v. Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

VI. NATURE, INTERPRETATION, OPERATION, AND PROOF OF ORDINANCES AND RESOLUTIONS.

§ 49. In general; nature and force of ordinances.

Scope of power to enact ordinances and character and subject-matter for regulation within powers, see post IX.
Nonliability for action or neglect in legislative capacity, see post § 125.
Order of city council as judgment amounting to res adjudicata, see also Former Adjudication ¶ 20.

¶ 196. The ordinances of a city are no more nor less than by-laws of a corporation.—People v. Jackson, 8 Mich. 110.

¶ 197. City ordinances are not "laws"; that term is properly applicable only to enactments of the general legislature.—People ex rel. Fennell v. Bay City Common Council, 36 Mich. 186.

¶ 198. City by-laws and ordinances are entirely of local application, and are intended for local benefit.—People ex rel. Mixer v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 26 Mich. 422.

¶ 199. Municipal ordinances are general, and impose duties which in particular cases may not be important; their purpose is public, and their violation is to be redressed by legal penalties.—Cook v. Johnston, 58 Mich. 437.

§ 50. Construction in general.

Construction of various kinds of ordinances and regulations, see post §§ 51-55.
Validity and time of taking effect, see post §§ 56-60.
Effect of partial invalidity, see post § 62.
Repeal, amendment, abrogation, and revocation, see post §§ 65-67.
Rights of persons accepting and acting on provisions of ordinances, see post § 68.
Liability for violation, see post § 69.
Evidence and proof of ordinances, see post §§ 70, 71.
Law and fact questions relating to ordinances, see post § 72.
Effect of one resolution to rescind another, see also post ¶ 298.
Implication as to repeal by later ordinance or statute, see post §§ 65, 66.
Construction of resolutions and ordinances fixing salaries, see post § 197.
Construction of ordinances and regulations as laws offensive to the constitution, see Constitutional Law.
General law of statutory construction, see Statutes, V.
Resolutions by council as evincing intent to accept or reject dedication offer, see Dedication § 26.
Breach of ordinance as negligence, see Negligence ¶ 36.

¶ 200. A municipal ordinance must be given such a reasonable construction if it can be consistently done, as will sustain it.—Building Commission of Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604.

¶ 201. Ordinances and by-laws must be reasonable; and their reasonableness is, in general, to be tested by the intention of the authority granting the charter, and the good of the corporation erected by the charter.—Welch v. Stowell, 2 D. 332.

¶ 202. Ordinances may be construed in the light afforded by the known times and conditions in the city when and where they were intended to operate.—People v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 132.

¶ 203. A resolution of the council approving the estimates of the board of education is not final where such estimates are on the next day submitted by the council to the board of estimates, the report of which board is approved and the reduced amount specified therein ordered to be levied.—Board of Education of Detroit v. Common Council of Detroit, 80 Mich. 548.

¶ 204. By the charter of Detroit (Laws 1873, Act No. 392, § 8), supervision of sewers is given to the board of public works, and no one can make sewer connections without the consent of the board. By terms of a subsequently enacted ordinance consent of the common council, on written application therefor, is required. Held, that the ordinance does not seek to divest the board of its statutory authority in the premises, but only determines the circumstances under which the council will permit the work to be done, and the board then controls the time and manner of doing it; and it is unlawful to make such connection without the council's consent.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 205. When there is added to a police regulation the statement that a compliance with the prescribed conditions shall not be deemed to be also a license to violate some other law or laws, nothing is thereby added to the command of the regulation, and violation of the other enumerated laws is not a violation of the regulatory ordinance.—City of Lansing v. Brown, 172 Mich. 50.

¶ 206. A city ordinance prohibiting the accumulation by livery-stable keepers of more than two cart-loads of manure in or near their stables and stable yards during certain months does not operate to except such persons from a provision against the depositing of refuse matter in alleys.—People v. Bennett, 83 Mich. 457.

¶ 207. A city ordinance prohibiting the depositing of refuse matter in alleys, and providing for the removal of such matter by the lot-owner within twenty-four hours after notice, is violated when such matter is deposited; and the violation is not cured by complying with the order of removal.—People v. Bennett, 83 Mich. 457.

§ 52. ——Trade, business and license regulations.

Effect of later ordinance to repeal earlier, see post § 65.
Clause in ordinance negativing implied license, see also ante ¶ 205.
Ordinances amounting to interstate commerce regulation, see Commerce §§ 7-10.

¶ 208. An ordinance prohibiting farmers, hucksters, etc., from "standing" their wagons within a certain region of 500 feet around a central market does not prevent the enjoyment by licensed peddlers of the right under another ordinance of peddling in the streets with a proviso that they keep their vehicles in motion except when selling, and that they then draw up to the curb.—People v. Keir, 78 Mich. 98.

¶ 209. One who goes from house to house with rugs, making contracts for leasing them for a specified sum, to be paid in instalments, the title to pass when the whole amount of the rental shall have been paid, is a "peddler," within the meaning of an ordinance requiring peddlers to procure a license.—People v. Sawyer, 106 Mich. 428.

¶ 210. One who goes from house to house, selling his wares, is a "peddler," within the meaning of an ordinance, although he does not cry or offer his goods for sale upon the street.—People v. Baker, 115 Mich. 199.

¶ 211. An ordinance prohibiting hawking and peddling without a license is violated by going without a license from door to door and leaving articles on approval to be paid for by another agent of the owner.—City of Muskegon v. Hanes, 149 Mich. 460.

§ 53. ——Street and travel regulations.

Power to regulate or prevent processions and assemblages in streets, see post § 92.
Construction of permissive ordinance allowing use of street, see also Street Railways, I, IV.

¶ 213. An ordinance of Detroit prohibited the driving of any horse, carriage, sleigh or other vehicle through any street or avenue in the city at a faster rate than six miles per hour. An ordinance subsequently adopted gave to every ambulance or other vehicle used for the transportation of sick and wounded persons and animals the right of way over all other vehicles; held, that the first ordinance includes ambulances and is not modified by the second.—People v. Little, 86 Mich. 125.

¶ 214. The discretion of a city council in passing an ordinance regulating the operation of street cars will not be interfered with where the ordinance can fairly be said to tend toward a better and safer condition.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 682.

¶ 215. An ordinance requiring cars to slacken speed when rounding curves or approaching switches "in order that said car shall be run with the least possible danger to the passengers upon said car," is regulatory in character and is intended for the protection of travelers upon the streets as well as passengers upon the car.—Brown v. Detroit United Railway, 179 Mich. 404.

Reasonableness of ordinance, see post § 57.
Power to define and punish offenses, see post §§ 96, 97.
Ordinance penalizing failure to remove refuse, see post ¶ 926.
Principals and accessories to violations, see also post ¶ 925.
Persons within terms of ordinance, see also post ¶¶ 925, 930.
Sufficiency of allegations in complaint for violation, see post § 221.
Evidence as to violation, see post § 227.
Acts regarded as within criminal statutes, see Crimes, II.
Noncriminal nature of violations of ordinances, see Crimes § 8.

¶ 216. Pool-selling is not punishable as the offense of maintaining "a lottery for disposing of money," within the meaning of a municipal ordinance against keeping any "lottery, policy, bucket-shop, board of trade or any other scheme or place for drawing or disposing of money, wheat or other property within the city."—People v. Reilly, 50 Mich. 384.

¶ 217. An ordinance (Detroit Rev. Ord. 1884, ch. 64, § 3) providing that no person shall maintain "any lottery, policy, pool, bucket-shop," etc., prohibits the keeping of a policy-shop.—People v. Hess, 85 Mich. 128.

¶ 218. An ordinance providing that "no person shall make any indecent exposure of his or her person in the streets, lanes, alleys or elsewhere in the city" does not include an exposure purely accidental.—City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135.

¶ 219. The general rule that intent is an ingredient of every offense is not universally true, but an act of volition is implied in the offense of indecent exposure under a city ordinance.—City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135.

¶ 220. A section of a village ordinance which provides that "any assemblage of persons, in any place in said village, engaged in any noisy, boisterous, contentious, or quarrelsome language or strife, or who shall be fighting or quarreling thereat, shall be deemed, and is hereby declared, a disorderly assemblage," is not limited in its scope by a prior section of the same ordinance which provides that "every assemblage of persons in any street, lane, alley, or public place in said village, and upon any sidewalk or crosswalk thereof, and upon the street corners, and in front of or adjacent to any of the churches, hotels, business houses, or public buildings in the said village, engaged in noisy, boisterous, contentious language or conduct, shall be deemed a disorderly assemblage," so as to make it inapplicable to a disorderly assemblage of persons in a saloon in said village.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 102 Mich. 551.

¶ 221. An improper or unlawful purpose is not an essential element of the offense charged under an ordinance of "indecent, insulting, and immoral conduct and behavior in any public street or elsewhere" within the city.—City of Grand Rapids v. Williams, 112 Mich. 247.

¶ 222. A city ordinance providing that persons wandering about the streets either by day or night, without any lawful means of support, or without being able to give any satisfactory account of himself or herself, shall be deemed disorderly, was not void as constituting an unreasonable or unwarranted abridgment of liberty.—In re Stegenga, 133 Mich. 55.

¶ 223. The fact that persons may have an abstract right to carry red flags, does not entitle them so to carry them in a parade as to arouse the indignation of the public which believes them to be symbols of anarchy, and thereby, in violation of an ordinance, create a public disturbance.—People v. Burman, 154 Mich. 150.

§ 55. ——Ordinances granting franchises, privileges, and permits.

Validity of regulations, see post § 61.
Rights of grantee and acceptance by grantee, see post § 68.
Reserved power to regulate, see also post ¶ 412.
Repeal of ordinance as nonactionable breach of contract, see post ¶ 492.

Applicability of ordinance to successor of gas company, see Gas ¶ 3.
Construction of ordinance fixing gas rate, see also Gas ¶ 10.

¶ 224. Ordinances containing grants are construed liberally in favor of the public.—City of Detroit v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 95 Mich. 456.

¶ 225. All rights asserted against a municipality by reason of granting ordinance must be clearly defined and not raised by inference or presumption.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 172 Mich. 136. Affirmed in 229 U. S. 39, 57 L. ed. 1056, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697.

¶ 226. The reservation in an ordinance granting a franchise of the right to impose further conditions involves the right to provide for the enforcement of such conditions by fine in cases of disobedience.—City of Detroit v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 95 Mich. 456.

¶ 227. Ordinances conferring grants to the use of streets are construed liberally in favor of the public.—Traverse City Gas Co. v. Mayor, etc., Traverse City, 130 Mich. 17.

§ 56. Validity, effect, and time of operation.

Validity as dependent on power of municipality to make the regulation in question, see post IX.
Reasonableness and motives of councils, see post § 57.
Uniformity and discrimination, see post § 59.
Effect of obsoleteness or laxity in enforcement, see post § 60.
Validity and reasonableness of licensing ordinances, see post § 58.
Validity in part, see post § 62.
Effect of omission of enacting clause, see ante ¶ 177.
Necessity of approval before effective, see ante § 46.
Sufficiency of publication to become effective, see also ante § 48.
Effect of ministerial omission to make record of ordinance, see also ante § 48.
Extension of operativeness by annexation of territory, see ante § 8.

Construction and interpretation, see ante §§ 50-55.
Resolution of doubt as to power to ordain against validity of ordinance adopted under doubtful power, see ante ¶ 93.
Nature of ordinances as laws or by-laws, see ante § 49.
Conclusiveness of resolution that it would be inexpedient to own and operate public utility, see also post ¶ 466.

Ordinance making improper expenditures, see also post ¶ 613.
Validity of Detroit ordinance increasing salaries of judges of recorder's court as an invasion of state affairs, see Municipal Courts ¶ 15.
Statutes fixing salaries of Detroit police court justices and clerk as excluding ordinance on same subject, see Municipal Courts ¶¶ 16, 17.
Validity of sale of estrays found running at large after enactment of estray ordinance and before designation of prohibited area, see also Animals ¶ 21.

¶ 228. Under How. St. § 2534 et seq., the time when ordinances are to take effect is not made to depend upon the certificate of the clerk on the journal of the proceedings of the council or on the ordinance, but is fixed by the ordinance itself, and where the original ordinance bears the approval of the mayor and is subsequently acted on by the council, the failure of the city clerk to perform a duty incumbent on him relating to it will not invalidate it.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

¶ 229. A town ordinance applies to all territory within the corporate limits at the time of its passage, and becomes effective in additional territory when such is attached.—Deneen v. Houghton County St. Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 235.

¶ 230. An ordinance which commands a violation of law is invalid.—People v. Kent, 151 Mich. 134.

¶ 231. A municipal ordinance cannot exceed the limits prescribed by the charter of the city.—Weadock v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 156 Mich. 376.

§ 57. ——Reasonableness or motives for enactment.

Reasonableness of licensing regulations and license fees, see post § 58.
Reasonableness of penal ordinances, see also post § 96.
Validity of regulation as to use of stated kind of brakes on cars, see post ¶ 358.
Reasonableness of building regulation, see also post ¶ 337.
Presumptions and evidence as to reasonableness or motives, see post § 71.
Tests for reasonableness, see ante ¶ 201.

¶ 232. An ordinance or regulation to be void for unreasonableness must be plainly and clearly unreasonable.—Citizens' Electric Light & Power Co. v. Sands, 95 Mich. 551.

¶ 233. Where the power to legislate upon a given subject is conferred, but the mode of its exercise is not prescribed, the ordinance passed in pursuance thereof must be a reasonable exercise of the power or it will be pronounced invalid.—People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 288.

¶ 234. An ordinance which is unreasonable on its face will be declared void.—People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127.

¶ 235. An ordinance will be declared void when its unreasonableness is shown by evidence.—People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127.

¶ 236. It is only when a municipal ordinance is clearly and manifestly unreasonable or oppressive in its operation, that it will be declared void.—Building Commission of Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604.

¶ 237. A municipal ordinance will not be declared invalid merely because it is unreasonable in an isolated case.—Building Commission of Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604.

¶ 238. The rule that motives of a legislature or of its members cannot be inquired into for the purpose of determining the validity of its laws applies to the adoption of an ordinance by a city council even though there may be an allegation of fraud.—People v. Gardner, 143 Mich. 104.

¶ 239. The motives of a common council in passing an ordinance will not be considered by the court in determining its validity.—People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127.

¶ 240. Regular actions of a municipality, in form for the raising of money by a bond issue, which on their face appear to be lawful and evince no bad purpose, will be characterized by the purpose with which they are done, it being unlawful.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

¶ 241. An ordinance forbidding under penalty of $100 and costs, with six months in the house of correction if not paid, for the offense of "giving away" any handbill or card of any description in any street or alley of Detroit was held unreasonable.—People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 288.

¶ 242. A city ordinance providing that no person shall "permit drunkards, intoxicated persons, tipplers, gamblers, persons having the reputation or name of being prostitutes, or other disorderly persons to congregate, assemble, visit, or remain" in "his or her house, tavern, inn, saloon, cellar, shop, office, or other residence or place of business," is unreasonable, and beyond the power conferred upon the council to enact ordinances to prevent vice and immorality, to preserve the public peace and good order, and to prohibit and suppress the keeping of houses of ill-fame or for the resort of prostitutes, in that it is not limited in its application to places requiring police regulation, or to assemblages of immoral persons, and does not make knowledge of the reputation of the persons so congregating or visiting, or an unlawful purpose on their part, an ingredient of the offense.—City of Grand Rapids v. Newton, 111 Mich. 48.

¶ 243. The smoke-nuisance ordinance of the city of Detroit, § 1, and § 6, prohibiting ferryboats from emitting dense black or gray smoke from their smokestacks, is unreasonable, as applied to marine practice, since there is no known device utilizable to prevent such emission.—People v. Detroit, Belle Isle & Windsor Ferry Co., 187 Mich. 177.

§ 58. ——Licensing and trade regulations.

Invalidity because of unequal or nonuniform operation, see post § 59.
Scope and extent of powers, see post IX, C.
Power to make trade regulations, see post IX, C.
Power to regulate hawking and peddling, see post § 85.
Proper test for ascertaining amount of fee, see also post ¶¶ 349, 350.
Regulations of size, weight, or quantities to be offered for sale, see also post § 86.
Effect of regulation of peddlers as invasion of right under letters patent to make and vend article, see also Patents.

¶ 244. The courts will not treat a fee as unreasonable when there has been no abuse of municipal discretion.—Van Baalen v. People, 40 Mich. 258.

¶ 245. Where the power to fix a license fee is given by law to a municipal council, its discretion in fixing the amount is not reviewable by the courts.—Wolf v. City of Lansing, 53 Mich. 367.

¶ 246. Under section 3108, Comp. L. 1897, providing that a city council may require payment of such reasonable sum for any license as they deem proper, cities are restricted to reasonable license fees, whether imposed for regulation or revenue, and their reasonableness is a question for judicial determination.—People v. Grant, 157 Mich. 24.

¶ 247. Under sec. 3108, Comp. L. 1897, a city of the fourth class is given discretion in fixing a reasonable sum for licenses and unless it clearly appears this discretion has been abused, the courts will not interfere.—O'Hara v. Collier, 173 Mich. 611.

¶ 248. Under a city charter authorizing the regulation of the subject of peddlers' licenses by ordinance, but not purporting to give discretion to the city officers in fixing a license fee, an ordinance prohibiting the sale of all commodities upon the streets or from house to house without a license, but failing to fix the license fee to be paid for the privilege of selling tea is insufficient to sustain a conviction for selling tea without a license.—City of Mt. Clemens v. Sherbert, 122 Mich. 674.

¶ 249. A municipal ordinance requiring peddlers to pay a tax of $15 a year is not invalid as requiring a fee that is clearly excessive, though the charter gives powers merely to "license and regulate" peddlers, not to tax them.—People v. Russell, 49 Mich. 617.

¶ 250. Where, under its charter, a village has the right to exact a license fee as compensation for the expense of the supervision of a lawful business or trade carried on therein, the exaction of a fee of $10 per month is excessive and unreasonable, and therefore void.—Chaddock v. Day, 75 Mich. 527.

¶ 251. A city ordinance licensing and regulating pawnbrokers, junk dealers, and dealers in second-hand goods, is not unreasonable because it requires the payment by the pawnbroker of a license fee of $50 per annum, and the execution of a bond in the penal sum of $5,000, and the payment by the other persons named in the ordinance of a fee of $25, and the execution of a bond in a penalty of $2,000; or because it prohibits the licensee from purchasing or taking any goods, articles, or things offered him from any person under the age of 16 years, or from any intoxicated person or habitual drunkard; or because it reserves in the license the power of revocation by the common council at any time for such period as the council shall have prescribed therefor.—City of Grand Rapids v. Braudy, 105 Mich. 670.

¶ 252. An ordinance vesting in the common council the right to impose a license fee of not to exceed $15 per day for hawking and peddling will not be held void as unreasonable, where a uniform fee of $30 a year has been fixed by the council thereunder; nor can such ordinance be regarded as imposing a tax.—City of Grand Rapids v. Norman, 110 Mich. 544.

¶ 253. A city ordinance requiring hawkers and peddlers to pay a weekly license fee of five dollars is not unreasonable.—People v. Baker, 115 Mich. 199.

¶ 254. An ordinance of the city of Detroit prohibiting the business of hawking or peddling without a license, and prescribing licenses for a year or such portion of a year as intervenes from the issuance of a license to the next ensuing June 1st, and fees of five dollars for peddling on foot or from a stand, twenty-five dollars if from a conveyance drawn by one animal, and fifty dollars if from a conveyance drawn by more than one animal, is not unreasonable or excessive or in restraint of trade.—People v. Hotchkiss, 118 Mich. 59.

¶ 255. A license fee for revenue on transient traders of two dollars per day for each day less than a week, ten dollars a week, twenty-five dollars for a month, fifty dollars for three months, and two hundred dollars for a year, exacted by ordinance, is not oppressive, unjust, or unreasonable.—People v. Grant, 157 Mich. 24.

¶ 256. A city ordinance providing that before a person may sell flour from house to house, he must first obtain a license and pay a fee of $4.00 a day, or $100 a year, is not unreasonable, nor an abuse of authority by the city council.—O'Hara v. Collier, 173 Mich. 611.

¶ 257. An ordinance prohibiting sales at auction by licensed auctioneers between the hours of 6 p. m. and 8 a. m. is unreasonable and void.—People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127.

¶ 258. An ordinance of the City of Grand Rapids granting the common council power to provide for the removal of garbage and to contract and grant licenses for the removal thereof, construed as not granting a monopoly and not being unreasonable in attempting to regulate the disposition of wholesome substances by the householder.—City of Grand Rapids v. De Vries, 123 Mich. 570.

¶ 259. Under a charter provision authorizing the council to regulate and license saloons, an ordinance requiring an annual tax of from $300 to $500, and a bond for $2,000, from any person keeping a saloon, is valid.—People v. Blom, 120 Mich. 45.

¶ 260. A city ordinance regulating saloons and places where intoxicating liquors are sold and prescribing locations thereof, requiring persons who desire to engage in such business to make written application to the common council for a license, fixing the amount of the license, containing provisions that the applicant will agree to accept the license on the condition that it may be revoked by the council at its will, but giving him an opportunity to be heard on such an application, cannot be said to be invalid as being unreasonable, excessive, and oppressive, nor to be an attempt to license the sale of intoxicating liquors not authorized by the charter, nor to inflict unreasonable penalty and forfeiture of property, nor is it invalid because it does not permit a hearing on the facts nor assure him of a hearing which can be examined by any competent court in case of capricious abuse, and permits the same persons to be the judges of the proper causes of rejection as well as the fitness of the persons, the provisions of the ordinance itself answering these objections.—Wells v. Torrey, 144 Mich. 689.

See also post ¶ 414.
Exception from rule of uniformity where power is reserved in franchise, see post ¶ 278.
Constitutional requirements of uniformity, equality, and generality in laws, see Constitutional Law; Statutes, II.

¶ 261. Ordinances must not only be reasonable and within the power of the municipality but must affect each member of the community alike.—People v. Lewis, 86 Mich. 273.

¶ 262. All individuals of a certain class within a municipality under its legislation must be treated alike and without discrimination.—Weadock v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 156 Mich. 376.

¶ 263. A municipal ordinance for the regulation of persons selling goods from house to house is invalid where it does not apply equally to local storekeepers, who sell goods from house to house, as to other persons who perform such acts.—Allport v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 486.

¶ 264. An ordinance forbidding farmers, hucksters, etc., from standing in the streets adjacent to the Central market is not void as creating a monopoly of the trade by hucksters occupying stands in the market.—People v. Keir, 78 Mich. 98.

¶ 265. An ordinance of a village requiring the payment of a license fee of $10 per month for the privilege of selling fresh meat on the village streets, in less quantities than one-quarter of the slaughtered animal, is in restraint of trade, and is invalid.—Chaddock v. Day, 75 Mich. 527.

¶ 266. An ordinance of Bay City requiring hawkers and peddlers travelling on foot to pay $10 license for the first day and $5 for each subsequent day, and those travelling with one horse $20 and $15, and with two or more horses $25 and $15, and which practically exempts residents of the city from its provisions, is invalid because unreasonable, and because unjustly discriminating between residents and nonresidents.—Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576.

¶ 267. An ordinance which provides that licenses thereunder "are to be for one year from June 1st, or such portion of the year as may intervene between the date of the granting of the license and the first day of June next ensuing," is uniform in that it provides for a license by the year or parts of the year.—People v. Hotchkiss, 118 Mich. 59.

¶ 268. An ordinance of the city of Detroit prohibiting any person from following within the city limits the business of a hawker or peddler without a license, gradnating the license fees and providing that such licenses shall be for one year from June 1st or for such portion of the year as may intervene between the date of the granting of the license and the 1st day of June next ensuing, is uniform in its operation.—People v. Hotchkiss, 118 Mich. 59.

¶ 270. An ordinance requiring license fees for peddlers is not invalid for discrimination in fixing fees of $10 per week and $50 per year for teas, coffees, spices, etc., $2 per week, $5 per month and $25 per year for general groceries, $3 per day, $15 per week for jewelry, $1 per day, $3 per week, $10 per month and $25 per year for other articles.—City of Muskegon v. Zeeryp, 134 Mich. 181.

¶ 271. Whether a municipal ordinance which assumes to regulate the business of transient dealers is not unreasonable in requiring the payment of a license fee of $10 a day, and whether, if restricted to nonresidents of the city, it is not open to the further objection of being in restraint of trade, quære.—City of Saginaw v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 32.

¶ 272. Under a city charter (Local Laws 1883, p. 612, § 50) authorizing the common council to license and regulate hawkers and peddlers, an ordinance requiring peddlers to take out a license is valid though it is made inapplicable to mechanics and farmers engaged in selling their own products.—People v. Sawyer, 106 Mich. 428.

¶ 273. Under a charter authorizing the municipality to license and regulate the business of transient dealers, an ordinance imposing a license fee upon nonresidents of the city only is invalid.—City of Saginaw v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 32.

¶ 274. A regulating and inspection charge of 50 cents per annum for each pole inspected, when the actual cost of inspection is about five cents only, is unreasonable.—City of Saginaw v. Swift Electric Light Co., 113 Mich. 660.

¶ 275. A municipal ordinance which prohibits the establishment or use of any building within a restricted area for the purpose of buying, selling and storing junk, and excepting from its operation any business of that kind theretofore established in that area, is unreasonable, unlawful, discriminating, and void.—Weadock v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 156 Mich. 376.

§ 60. ——Nonenforcement or obsoleteness.

Nonenforcement as a defense, see also post ¶¶ 927, 928.

Inadmissibility of evidence of laxity of enforcement in other cases, see post ¶ 961.

¶ 277. The mere fact that the officials of a city do not enforce an ordinance does not affect its validity, nor eliminate the necessity of compliance therewith.—Wedgewood v. Jorgens, 190 Mich. 620.

§ 61. Validity of franchise regulations.

Right and power to grant franchises in streets, see also post § 110.

Onerous and unreasonable regulations under guise of reserved power to regulate, see also post ¶ 412.

Construction of grants, see ante § 55.

Rate regulations in general, see Public Service; Street Railways, I, IV, A; Electricity § 3; Gas § 2.

¶ 278. The rule that ordinances shall be general in their nature and impartial in their operation does not apply to regulations enacted by virtue of a reservation in an ordinance granting a franchise, which partakes of the character of a contract.—City of Detroit v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 95 Mich. 456.

¶ 279. A resolution by the common council of a city empowering an individual engaged in electric lighting to use the poles of an electric light company pursuant to a reservation in its franchise was unreasonable and void because it did not definitely fix the manner and extent of such use.—Citizens' Electric Light & Power Co. v. Sands, 95 Mich. 551.

Rules as to statutes void in part, see Statutes, V.

¶ 280. Unauthorized provisions do not invalidate the whole ordinance, if they can be separated from the rest of the ordinance without so mutilating it as to render it inoperative.—People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 288.

¶ 281. Inasmuch as an ordinance may be good in part although bad in part, the fact that its penal provisions are invalid does not necessarily destroy the rest.—City of Detroit v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 95 Mich. 456.

¶ 282. A city ordinance may be valid in part, although invalid as to some of its provisions; and where as to some of its provisions it is self-executing, it is as to such provisions valid, though it has affixed an invalid penalty or no penalty at all.—Johnson v. Common Council of City of Bessemer, 143 Mich. 313.

¶ 283. An ordinance establishing saloon limits and providing that no license shall be granted except within those limits is not wholly void because no penalty was provided therein for its enforcement, and the execution and its enforcement rest with the common council; and the council may refuse to approve a liquor bond, the ordinance being self-executing in this matter.—Johnson v. Common Council of City of Bessemer, 143 Mich. 313.

Estoppel to question validity, see post § 64.

Right to urge invalidity of contract as defense to prosecution for violation of garbage ordinance, see post ¶ 929.

¶ 284. One who, under a city ordinance which defines as disorderly persons all keepers of bawdy-houses, all vagrants, persons guilty of assault and certain other persons, is convicted of being a disorderly person in that he kept a bawdy-house, cannot complain that the ordinance defines certain acts as disorderly which are not recognized as such under the law of the state; How. St. § 1985, defining the keeper of a bawdy-house as a disorderly person.—City of St. Ignace v. Snyder, 75 Mich. 649.

¶ 285. An objection that a city ordinance providing for licensing hawkers and peddlers, which purported to be amendatory of an ordinance that had previously been repealed, had rendered the law so uncertain as to make it impossible for peddlers to determine their exact rights, is not available to one convicted of violating a subsequent ordinance which covered the entire subject, and which operated to repeal all prior ordinances.—City of Grand Rapids v. Norman, 110 Mich. 544.

§ 64. Estoppel to assert or deny validity.

Right to raise question of invalidity, see ante § 63.

Effect of laxity and nonenforcement, see ante ¶ 277.

¶ 286. A mayor, resisting a mandamus to compel him to revoke his action in declaring a motion carried by his casting the deciding vote, cannot contend that the action attempted by the motion was valid because it was not in form of a resolution to appropriate money, where, if that be true, the attempted action of the mayor was invalid in that the motion actually effected an appropriation with no formal resolution.—Bishop v. Lambert, 114 Mich. 110.

§ 65. Repeal or amendment by later ordinances.

Abrogation of ordinance by charter or statute, see post § 66.

Amendment of ordinance, see also ante ¶ 213.

Rescinding effect of later resolution, see post ¶ 298.

Repeal and amendment of statutes, see Statutes, IV, VII.

¶ 287. Where two ordinances are inconsistent in their operation the later repeals the earlier.—Lenz v. Sherrott, 26 Mich. 139.

¶ 288. An ordinance providing for the licensing of scavengers by the mayor and regulating such occupation, is repealed by a subsequent ordinance regulating the collection of garbage, offal, dead animals and other refuse matter, which places the matter under the board of health and authorizes the mayor to issue a license only upon recommendation of such board.—DeLano v. Doyle, 120 Mich. 258.

§ 66. Abrogation, amendment, or revival by charter or statute.

Abrogation of penal ordinances, see post § 99.

¶ 290. A city council was by charter vested with the power to appoint, regulate, and maintain a police force, and, as well, with the power to determine and regulate the compensation of all officers, elective or appointive. Under this charter, the council adopted an ordinance providing for the appointment of certain police officers, and fixing their salaries. Afterwards, by an amendment of the charter, the general control of the police department was transferred to a board of commissioners, but the power to fix salaries was not conferred upon the board or taken from the council. Held, that the amendment did not operate to repeal the provisions of the ordinance in relation to salaries, and, no other action having been taken by the council upon that subject, an appointee of the commissioners was entitled to receive the salary fixed by the ordinance.—Ruell v. City of Alpena, 108 Mich. 290.

¶ 291. An ordinance adopted under a charter is not repealed by a charter amendment transferring from the council to a board control of the subject-matter of the ordinance.—Ruell v. City of Alpena, 108 Mich. 290.

¶ 292. Conviction under an ordinance prohibiting the sale of unwholesome meat cannot be sustained where a charter subsequently enacted authorizes punishment only where such food is "knowingly" sold.—People v. Brill, 120 Mich. 42.

¶ 293. An ordinance giving rights to a telephone company in a highway is invalid when in conflict with a later statute.—Boland v. Washtenaw Home Tel. Co., 161 Mich. 315.

¶ 294. The general liquor act of 1887, Comp. L. 1897, § 5397, repealed all village ordinances upon the subject and the reenactment in 1895 of the provision of the general village incorporation act, Comp. L. 1897, § 2769, subd. 7, again giving the right of regulation to villages did not revive such ordinances.—Village of Sparta v. Boorom, 129 Mich. 555.

¶ 295. Where a city charter requires that resolutions be passed only by a majority of all members of the council, and a resolution is passed authorizing the purchase of voting machines by a majority of the aldermen present, but by less than a majority of all the aldermen elected, such action is valid and binding on the city where at a later meeting, by a majority of all aldermen elected, it authorizes the issuance of certificates in payment of said purchase.—Darling v. City of Manistee, 166 Mich. 35.

¶ 296. The charter of Pontiac requires the votes of all members of the council in relation to any act, proceeding or proposition had at any meeting to be entered at large upon the minutes, especially where it relates to the assessment or taxation of property. Held, that a city tax, voted without observing this requirement, was invalid; and that amendatory resolutions adopted by a later council, of which less than a majority of the old council were members, could not make it valid.—City of Pontiac v. Axford, 49 Mich. 69.

¶ 297. What was the effect of a veto of a rescinding resolution and of a vote rescinding the rescission, is not material where the original resolution remains in force because of the fact that the first attempted rescission failed of a majority.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 298. A resolution authorizing bonds to be issued to a certain amount is not rescinded by a subsequent resolution limiting the "present" issuance and sale to a smaller sum.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

§ 68. Rights under and acceptance of ordinances and resolutions.

Disability of city to restrict its police powers by grant, see also post ¶ 330.

¶ 299. An ordinance fixing the charges to be made by a public utility corporation, when accepted by it, becomes binding where it confers some valuable rights clearly beyond those which it could claim under any general law.—City of Owosso v. Union Tel. Co., 185 Mich. 349.

¶ 300. Where a corporation has no right to act except under the conditions of an ordinance granting permission, its action implies its acceptance of the conditions in full.—City of Detroit v. Detroit City Ry. Co., 37 Mich. 558.

¶ 301. Where the rights granted by a municipality to a corporation have lapsed, the municipality can impose whatever conditions it pleases upon a renewal of them.—City of Detroit v. Detroit City Ry. Co., 37 Mich. 558.

¶ 302. An ordinance conferring certain rights upon a street railway company to the use of streets, but stipulating that it shall be of no effect unless accepted in writing within thirty days, confers no rights when not accepted as stipulated.—Rapid Ry. Co. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 118 Mich. 133.

§ 69. Liabilities for violating ordinances.

Construction of ordinances to ascertain what acts are violative, see ante § 50 et seq.

Prosecutions for violation and actions for penalties, see post XVI, B.

Violation of ordinance as actionable negligence, see Negligence § 14; and see particularly Highways §§ 370, 374; Railroads, VIII; Street Railways, IV.

¶ 303. An ordinance requiring all persons to keep their sidewalks free from ice imposes a purely public duty, and persons injured by slipping on the ice cannot bring private actions against the owners of the premises.—Taylor v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 45 Mich. 74.

¶ 304. Where the charter empowers the common council to regulate the care of sidewalks for the public benefit, and provides that a lot owner shall be liable to the city for all damages which the city may be compelled to pay for his default in neglecting to observe such regulations, no action against the lot owner can arise, if at all, until the city has been held liable in a suit against it.—Taylor v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 45 Mich. 74.

§ 70. Evidence and presumptions as to ordinances and resolutions.

As to reasonableness and validity, see post § 71.

Necessity that ordinance be clearly unreasonable to be held void, see ante § 57.

Conclusiveness of records, see also ante § 43.

Admissibility of charter as evidence in action against officer for false arrest made under its provisions, see False Imprisonment ¶ 117.

Admissibility of ordinance penalizing acts as evidence in action against officer for false imprisonment in arresting for violation, see False Imprisonment ¶ 116.

¶ 305. Under the charter of Bay City, an ordinance cannot be passed except by the vote of a majority of all the aldermen. But where it appears that nine out of ten were present at the submission of the ordinance, and the entry, instead of merely reciting its passage, declares it to have been passed by "a majority vote," it will be presumed that such a majority is meant as was required by the charter.—McCormick v. Bay City, 23 Mich. 457.

¶ 306. Where a city charter required the board of public works to keep a record of its proceedings, evidence of oral instructions, in open session, to the street commissioner, regarding the construction of a drain claimed by plaintiff to have been improperly built, and which were not recorded, is inadmissible.—Davis v. City of Jackson, 61 Mich. 530.

¶ 307. It will not be presumed that the members of a city council were or will be actuated by improper motives in the passage of an ordinance prescribing the frequency with which street cars should be run, but, on the contrary, it will be presumed that such action was taken in the exercise of a judgment based upon an acquaintance with all the facts; and such judgment, as embodied in the ordinance must control, and will preclude all inquiry as to the reasonableness of such ordinance, until it is shown to have been improperly exercised.—People v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 132.

§ 71. ——As to reasonableness and validity.

Presumptions as to motives, see also ante ¶ 307.

¶ 308. Since a municipal ordinance is presumed valid, the duty of establishing the contrary rests on the one asserting its invalidity.—Building Commission of Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604.

¶ 310. An ordinance on its face a safeguard against danger is presumed valid.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 682.

¶ 311. Where the accused was prosecuted for the violation of a municipal ordinance relative to the disposition of garbage, evidence that the ordinance was adopted for fraudulent purposes and to create a monopoly of the garbage business in the hands of the contractor is inadmissible.—People v. Gardner, 143 Mich. 104.

¶ 312. City taxes voted at a special meeting of the common council of the city of Ironwood cannot be held void because the record does not show the members were duly notified of the call for the meeting, not all being present; if the charter (Local Acts 1893, No. 235, chap. 9, § 1) requires that proof be made of the summoning of members, such proof is not required to appear upon the record, and under the curative provisions of the Tax Law, § 99, it cannot be presumed not to be on file, or not to have been properly filed if not shown to be on file.—Auditor General v. Sparrow, 116 Mich. 574.

¶ 313. In support of a resolution employing firemen at a stated salary it will be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the council had provided a fire-department fund, which was prerequisite, and which Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 30, § 2, authorized it to do; and that the expenditure was designed to be made from moneys already raised by taxation and apportioned to such fund.—Bishop v. Lambert, 114 Mich. 110.

¶ 314. Evidence that air brakes are in use on the larger types of electric cars, that they have been used on the smaller cars, together with judicial notice of the efficacy of such brakes, is sufficient to establish the reasonableness of an ordinance requiring all street cars to be so equipped.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 682.

¶ 315. Evidence that a light street car could be as effectively handled by a hand brake and that air brakes are less reliable does not render an ordinance requiring air brakes on all street cars invalid, where it is not shown that proper supervision and skilled motormen would not insure effective air brakes at all times, and the evidence, as well as common experience, shows air brakes to be safer.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 682.

§ 72. Law and fact questions as to validity.

¶ 316. Whether an ordinance is within the power of a municipal corporation is always a question for the courts.—People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127.

¶ 317. Whether an ordinance is reasonable is always a question for the courts.— People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127.

VII. RELIEF AGAINST INVALID ORDINANCES, RESOLUTIONS, AND ACTS.

Judicial noninterference with or control over municipal discretion and functions, see ante § 34.

Right to question or estoppel to assert invalidity of ordinance, see ante §§ 63, 64.

Injunctions against execution of invalid ordinances, see Injunctions, II, H.

¶ 318. The attorney general may proceed in equity to enjoin a substantial abuse of corporate power, such as the appropriation of corporate funds in a manner not justified by law, or the award of a paving contract contrary to the city charter.—Attorney General ex rel. Cook v. City of Detroit, 26 Mich. 263.

¶ 319. Mere failure of a municipal council to follow strictly the provisions of the charter in making a public contract does not warrant the state in interfering by its attorney general to set aside the contract.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 55 Mich. 181.

VIII. ADMINISTRATIVE, MINISTERIAL, AND PROPRIETARY FUNCTIONS AND THEIR EXERCISE.

¶ 320. An electric light plant erected for commercial purposes is proprietary in character and the municipality is not relieved from liability for the neglect of its employees on the theory that the business relates to local governmental functions.—Sykes v. Village of Portland, 177 Mich. 290.

¶ 321. Where a city contracts with a gas company to supply gas at given rates to its inhabitants as a condition to entering its streets, it is exercising not its governmental powers, but its business or proprietary powers.—Boerth v. Detroit City Gas Co., 152 Mich. 654.

¶ 322. To reconstruct a sewer outlet above its proper grade and thereby to obstruct the discharge of sewage which the sewer carried is a ministerial act and not one involving legislative or discretionary power.—Defer v. City of Detroit, 67 Mich. 346.

¶ 323. A city, in the exercise of its proprietary or business powers through its officers is governed by the same rules which control a private individual or business corporation.—Andrews v. City of South Haven, 187 Mich. 294.

IX. POLICE POWER AND SUBJECTS OF REGULATION.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 75. Scope and limitations of powers.

[Note. It is not the purpose to treat here the entire question of police power, but only the scope of and the limitations upon the police power of cities and villages. In specific topics like Health; Food; Highways; Intoxicating Liquors, will be found cases on the regulations and statutes concerning them. The constitutional limitations on the police power in general are treated in Constitutional Law. See cross-references herewith and in the sections following.]

Disability to limit powers by contract, see generally post XI, especially ¶¶ 491, 496.
Disability to make contract putting rates beyond power to regulate them, see post ¶ 362.
Invalidity of ordinance in excess of charter powers, see ante § 56.
General powers other than regulative or police powers, see ante III, post X-XIV.
Officers and organs for exercise of power, see post XV.
Powers respecting health, sanitation and public safety, see post IX, B.
Powers respecting inspection, licensing, and regulation of business, see post IX, C.
Powers of control over streets and public places and buildings, see post IX, D.
Power to define offenses and penal procedure, see post IX, E.
Exercise of police power as impairing contract, see Constitutional Law § 175.

¶ 324. Municipal corporations derive all their power from legislative acts, and can pass no ordinance which conflicts with the terms of the charter.—People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 288.

¶ 325. A village ordinance cannot go beyond the charter in providing penalties for offenses.—Sheldon v. Hill, 33 Mich. 171.

¶ 326. A city common council has an implied power to make ordinances or by-laws to carry into effect its charter powers.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 327. Where a city charter specifically enumerates various powers which the common council may render effectual by the imposition of penalties, such enumeration is an implied exclusion of the right to impose penalties in other cases.—City of Grand Rapids v. Hughes, 15 Mich. 54.

¶ 328. The charter of a village organized under Act No. 278 of the Acts of 1909 did not refer to Comp. L. 1897, § 2769, but adopted the identical language of subdivision 7 of this section. Held, that the charter had practically adopted the provisions of the section and that the common council of the village was thereby constituted authority to legislate upon the subject of general police power.—Vernier v. Village Council Grosse Pointe Shores, 170 Mich. 656.

¶ 329. The police power of a city cannot be bargained away or abridged by contract.—Petz v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 169; City of Detroit v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 95 Mich. 456.

¶ 330. A municipality cannot surrender or circumscribe its right to exercise general police power when it grants franchises and privileges to public utility corporations to maintain their roads in its streets.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United R. Co., 172 Mich. 496.

¶ 331. The common council of a city has not the power to prescribe new definitions for terms which already have legal definitions.—Allport v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 486.

§ 76. Relative powers of municipality and state.

Powers within principle of local self-government under the constitution, see Constitutional Law, II, C.

Regulating poles and wires on streets, see post ¶ 409.

Crimes and offenses covered by general law, see post § 96.

¶ 332. A city or village cannot by ordinance make the general laws of the state inoperative.—People v. Kirsch, 67 Mich. 539.

¶ 333. Where there is doubt about the existence of power to pass an ordinance suspending the general law, such doubt should be resolved against the existence of the power.—People v. Blom, 178 Mich. 508.

B. HEALTH, SANITATION AND PUBLIC SAFETY.

§ 78. In general.

Inspection of poles and wires in interests of safety, see post ¶ 411.

Construction of sanitary and police regulations, see ante § 51.

General regulative powers of the state through its subdivisions and officers to conserve and regulate health, see Health.

Regulations by boards of health, see Health § 1.

Invalidity of health regulations broader than enabling statute, see Health ¶ 2.

Food regulations and inspection in general, see Food.

¶ 334. The obligation and the power of a city council to act as a board of health and prevent the spread of contagion is not lessened by its omission to create a separate board of health, and its power is a police power, and is commensurate with its duty.—Rae v. City of Flint, 51 Mich. 526.

¶ 335. A city may enforce public safety regulations reasonably adapted to such end, notwithstanding a large financial outlay is required of a street railway company to comply.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 682.

¶ 336. A village incorporated under the general law for the incorporation of villages, authorizing it to provide for the preservation of public property and to adopt ordinances and make other regulations for the safety and general welfare of the inhabitants, had power to offer a reward for testimony securing the conviction of persons who had set fire to buildings within its limits.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Village of Holly, 119 Mich. 637.

§ 79. Building and fire protection regulations.

Offering reward for arrest and conviction of incendiary, see ante ¶ 336.

Police power respecting buildings in fire limits, see also Buildings § 2.

Legality of building permit, see Buildings § 2.

¶ 337. A municipal ordinance requiring a clear unobstructed space of not less than fifteen feet in the rear of all tenement houses across the entire width of the lot, is not so unreasonable as to be invalid.—Building Commission of Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604.

¶ 338. The common council of Detroit has power to establish fire limits, and forbid the rebuilding or repair of wood buildings within the limits.—Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 11 Mich. 425.

¶ 339. A municipality, in pursuance of its delegated authority to fix fire limits and to direct the manner of constructing buildings within such limits, may provide by ordinance that a building not so constructed shall be deemed a nuisance and authorize its abatement as such without a judicial determination that it is a nuisance.—Micks v. Mason, 145 Mich. 212.

§ 80. Nuisances and noisome occupations and places.

Declaring combustible buildings to be nuisances, see ante ¶ 339.

¶ 340. A power to make reasonable regulations for the prevention of nuisances will not authorize that to be declared a nuisance which is not such.—Wreford v. People, 14 Mich. 41.

¶ 341. The authority vested by statute in a city council to compel the owners and occupants of slaughter-houses, etc., to cleanse or abate them whenever necessary for the health, comfort or convenience of the inhabitants of the city, can only be exercised to do away with what are legally nuisances, and cannot authorize the council to interfere with what is not a nuisance in fact. Such authority would not empower the council to prohibit the slaughtering of animals on one's own premises, except in a building devoted to that business.—Wreford v. People, 14 Mich. 41.

¶ 342. A statutory authority to prevent future erections or locations of slaughter-houses, etc., within the city, would not authorize the council to put an end to any existing establishments if not nuisances in fact.—Wreford v. People, 14 Mich. 41.

¶ 343. The common council of Detroit, under the power given by the charter to prevent and suppress houses of ill-fame, are not authorized, by ordinance and resolution, to require the city marshal to demolish a house occupied as a house of ill-fame, and adjudged by the council to be a common nuisance.—Welch v. Stowell, 2 D. 332.

Reasonableness of regulations, see ante § 58.
Public contracts for garbage disposal, see Public Contracts.

¶ 344. The collection and disposal of garbage, which of itself is a nuisance, in a city may be regulated under its police power.—Board of Health of Grand Rapids v. Vink, 184 Mich. 688.

¶ 345. Since garbage is of itself a nuisance its collection and disposal may be regulated by ordinance under the police power of a city.—Board of Health of Grand Rapids v. Vink, 184 Mich. 688.

¶ 346. An ordinance requiring that garbage shall be removed through and out of the city in water-tight, closed carts or wagons, marked "garbage," is a reasonable regulation; and is authorized by a provision in the city charter (Local L. 1889, p. 819), empowering the common council to regulate the handling of garbage.—People v. Gordon, 81 Mich. 306.

¶ 347. Under the charter of Grand Rapids granting the common council power to abate nuisances, compel the removal of unwholesome, nauseous or offensive substances, and to provide for the preservation of the general health, an ordinance regulating the removal of garbage and offal and defining the terms as including every refuse accumulation of animal, fruit, or vegetable matter, liquid or otherwise, that attends the preparation, use, cooking, dealing in or storing of meat, fish, fowl, fruit or vegetables, is valid.—City of Grand Rapids v. De Vries, 123 Mich. 570.

C. INSPECTION, LICENSING, AND REGULATION OF BUSINESSES.

§ 82. In general; scope of powers.

[Note. The term "police power," as used in discussing the power of the legislative branch of the state to regulate matters affected with a public interest, is treated in Constitutional Law. As used here it means the regulative powers of the municipality under the charter and statutes.]

Distribution of power over licensing and regulation of occupations, see also ante § 31.
Construction of police regulations, see ante § 51.
Construction of licensing ordinances and regulations, see ante § 52.
Reasonableness and validity of licensing and trade regulations, see ante § 58.
Sufficiency of majority vote to enact licensing measures, see ante § 38.
General law of licenses, see Licenses.
License distinguished from tax or other charge, see Licenses § 2.
Power to impose or grant license, see Licenses § 3.
Graduating license fees in general, see Licenses § 4.
Withdrawal or revocation of license in general, see Licenses § 6.
Power to tax business which may not be licensed, see also Intoxicating Liquors § 31.

¶ 348. A municipal corporation has no inherent power to grant licenses or to exact license fees, but must derive its authority from the state, and the power must come by direct grant and cannot be taken by implication.—Wells v. Torrey, 144 Mich. 689.

¶ 349. Where a license fee is imposed by cities for revenue, the extent of the tax is left to the judgment and discretion of the municipal government, to be determined in the usual mode in which its legislative authority is exercised, but it is not warranted in imposing fees so heavy as to be prohibitory.—People v. Grant, 157 Mich. 24.

¶ 350. When license fees are imposed by cities for the purpose of regulation, and not for revenue, the fee should not exceed the necessary or probable expense of issuing the license and of inspecting and regulating the business covered by it.—People v. Grant, 157 Mich. 24.

¶ 351. The power to regulate business as conferred by municipal charter means the power to adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws.—Weadock v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 156 Mich. 376.

¶ 352. Section 3108, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5630, permits the common council of a city of the fourth class to revoke at pleasure a license granted a transient trader for a term of one year.—Vernakes v. City of South Haven, 186 Mich. 595.

¶ 353. The storing or keeping of old junk is necessarily incident to the business of buying and selling junk, and may be regulated by a charter power to regulate and license the keepers of junk shops, and the buying and selling of old junk.—Weadock v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 156 Mich. 376.

¶ 354. Under a charter providing that the common council of a city may enact and enforce such ordinances not inconsistent with the constitution or the general laws of the state as they shall deem the public safety and welfare of the city require, an ordinance may be enacted and enforced requiring any person who desires to take charge of or operate any steam engine or boiler to take an examination for a license before a board of examiners, except in certain cases and making it unlawful for any person to take charge of or operate any steam engine or steam generating apparatus without a license except as specified.—People v. Fournier, 175 Mich. 364. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 354a. One peddling a patented article cannot complain that the demand of a license fee is an interference with his rights, under the United States statute, to vend a patented article.—People v. Russell, 49 Mich. 617.

¶ 354b. A city charter gave the council power to regulate the weights and measures of merchants, in accordance with the standards fixed by the statute of the state. Held, that a city sealer could not be given power under such a charter to condemn scales which weigh correctly, on the ground that a device attached to them for the convenience of the dealer in computing prices was not strictly accurate.—Parker, Webb & Co. v. Austin, 156 Mich. 573.

¶ 355. A municipal ordinance prohibiting sales at auction by licensed auctioneers between the hours of 6 p. m. and 8 a. m. is unreasonable and void.—People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127.

§ 83. Carriage, transportation, and shipping.

Motor vehicle licenses, see also post ¶ 405.
Transportation of garbage through streets, see ante § 81.
Public service regulations, see post § 84.
Power to regulate railroad and street railroad uses of streets, see post § 90.
Street railway regulations in general, see Street Railways, IV, A.
Construction of ordinance relating to rates of fare, see also Carriers §§ 3, 4.
Regulative power over ferries in general, see Ferries § 2.

¶ 356. The ordinance of the common council of Detroit which provides that no person shall keep a ferry or boat for transporting persons and property across to the Canada shore without a license therefor from the mayor, and imposes a penalty for its violation, is valid.—Chilvers v. People, 11 Mich. 43.

¶ 357. A city may regulate the business of a street car company to the extent of requiring responsible safeguards against danger.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 682.

¶ 358. An ordinance requiring air or electric brakes on all street cars is not invalid because electric brakes are shown to be unreliable.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 682.

¶ 359. A municipality may, under its police power, enact an ordinance requiring drivers of public moving-vans to keep a record of their transactions and make a weekly report thereof to the police commissioner.—Lawson v. Judge of Recorder's Court of City of Detroit, 175 Mich. 375.

¶ 360. Arrangements made by railroad companies with omnibus companies for the delivery of passengers and their baggage, not unlawful in themselves, and made on the cars or premises of the companies, are exempt from municipal interference, and city ordinances which attempt such interference are void.—Napman v. People, 19 Mich. 352.

¶ 361. A city cannot pass ordinances to preserve private wharves from encroachment any more than other private property. Such protection must usually be sought from the general laws of the land, and not from city by-laws.—Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221.

§ 84. Public service, rates, and fares.

Regulations other than rate and service regulations, see ante § 83.
Public service regulations in general, see Public Service.
Validity of gas regulations, see also Gas § 3.

¶ 362. A municipal corporation cannot by contract with a public utility corporation, fix its rates so as to place them beyond state control except where power to do so is clearly and expressly delegated to it.—City of Owosso v. Union Tel. Co., 185 Mich. 349.

¶ 363. The city of Kalamazoo has power under the Constitution, art. VIII, § 28, providing that the right of all cities, villages and townships to the reasonable control of their streets, alleys and public places is reserved to such cities, villages and townships, to fix rates as a condition to the use of streets by a gas company.—City of Kalamazoo v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 146.

¶ 364. A city is not incapacitated from fixing gas rates because of the fact that it is a user of gas.—City of Kalamazoo v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 146.

¶ 365. A city, in the absence of charter or other authority delegating the power by express terms or by necessary implication, may not regulate the price of gas to the consumer.—City of Kalamazoo v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 146.

¶ 366. Where a city by its charter is given no express power to regulate the rates at which a gas company shall furnish gas to its inhabitants, but where it is given, by statute and by charter, broad powers as to fixing the conditions upon which gas companies shall enter its streets, it is impliedly authorized to prescribe rates as a condition to giving its consent to the gas company to so enter its streets.—Boerth v. Detroit City Gas Co., 152 Mich. 654.

§ 85. Markets and street vending or peddling.

Reasonableness of license regulations, see ante § 58.
Discrimination and nonuniformity, see ante § 59.
Power to prohibit or regulate use of streets by vendors or peddlers, see post § 93.
Regulation of food selling outside of markets or street sales, see post § 86.

¶ 367. The power to regulate the business of hawking and peddling has too long been recognized to be now questioned.—City of Alma v. Clow, 146 Mich. 443.

¶ 368. The fact that the legislature has passed general laws in relation to the business of peddling and hawking will not prevent a municipality from legislating upon the same subject.—City of Alma v. Clow, 146 Mich. 443.

¶ 369. Chapter 66, § 11, of the ordinances of Detroit, as amended April 5, 1889, prohibiting sales of any articles on the Central market except from stalls or stands leased or occupied by the sellers, and confining farmers and gardeners with their vehicles to the Cass and hay markets, is void, and prosecutions thereunder may be restrained by writ of prohibition.—Hughes v. Recorder's Court of Detroit, 75 Mich. 574.

¶ 370. Under a city charter which authorizes ordinances to license peddlers, etc., and to regulate peddling (directly or by canvassing for subscriptions) the council may forbid the soliciting of orders for merchandise to be delivered later, without a license.—City of Muskegon v. Zeeryp, 134 Mich. 181.

¶ 372. A city, under a power to license and regulate the sale, by peddling, of goods, by persons going from place to place in the city, has power to provide that any person or persons who shall go about from house to house or place to place, and sell or offer to sell any article of trade or commerce to be delivered then or in the future, shall be deemed to be a hawker and peddler.—Allport v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 486.

¶ 373. A city charter providing that the common council may require transient dealers to obtain license before engaging in business, and may regulate the terms of issuing the same, does not confer authority to tax the business, but merely to license it, to the end that it may be regulated.—City of Saginaw v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 32.

§ 86. Sales and vending of food.

Power to collect fees from vendors at public markets, see also post ¶ 452.
Street vending and markets, see ante § 85.
Municipal regulation, prescribing weight of loaves and seizure of short-weight, as a "taking" for public use, see Eminent Domain ¶ 83.

¶ 374. The Detroit ordinance prohibiting the keeping of stalls for the sale of fresh meats outside of the public markets, without license from the mayor, and requiring payment of a license fee of five dollars, is valid.—Ash v. People, 11 Mich. 347.

¶ 375. An ordinance of the city of Detroit providing that all bread manufactured shall be made into loaves of one, two and four pounds and no other weight, and prohibiting the sale of bread deficient in weight, is valid.—People v. Wagner, 86 Mich. 594.

¶ 376. An ordinance of the city of Detroit providing that all bread manufactured shall be made into loaves of one, two and four pounds, and no other weight, does not prohibit the sale of bread by weight if it overruns, nor does it prohibit the exaction of an increased price by reason of the additional weight.—People v. Wagner, 86 Mich. 594.

§ 87. Saloons, intoxicants, inns, and places of entertainment.

Vote required to license or approve bond, see ante ¶ 155.
Reasonableness of regulations, see ante § 58.
Discretion of councils in acting on applications for liquor licenses and bonds, see Intoxicating Liquors §§ 6, 12.

¶ 377. The power of village councils under Comp. L. 1897, § 2769, subd. 7, to suppress saloons and bars for the sale of intoxicating liquors is not repealed by Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909.—Boos v. Scudder, 163 Mich. 678.

¶ 378. The charter of a village organized under Act No. 278, Pub. Acts of 1909, contains a provision that the common council shall have power to pass ordinances to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors and the number of licenses to be issued therefor. Held, that this provision of the charter is not an invalid delegation to the council of a power reposed in electors by section 25 of said act; and that an ordinance suppressing all saloons in the village is valid.—Vernier v. Village Council of Grosse Pointe Shores, 170 Mich. 656.

¶ 380. Authority given to a village council, at a time when the constitution forbade liquor licenses, "to license saloons, taverns and eating-houses," does not authorize it to license the sale of liquors.—Village of Mount Pleasant v. Vansice, 43 Mich. 361; Dewar v. People, 40 Mich. 401.

¶ 381. Even while the constitution prohibited licensing the sale of liquor, a municipality might license a "saloon." A saloon is not necessarily or exclusively a place for liquor-selling.—Kitson v. City of Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 325; Wolf v. City of Lansing, 53 Mich. 367.

¶ 382. Under the general village incorporation act, Comp. L. 1897, § 2769, subd. 7, giving villages the power to suppress saloons and section 50, defining the word "saloon," a village does not have the power to enlarge the meaning of the word so as to include a single sale at any place and a complaint setting out such a sale states no offense.—Village of Sparta v. Boorom, 129 Mich. 555.

¶ 383. Charter power to a municipality to "suppress" or "prohibit" saloons does not authorize an ordinance establishing saloon limits.—Timm v. Common Council of the Village of Caledonia Station, 149 Mich. 323.

¶ 384. Where the power to regulate and prescribe the location of saloons is expressly given to a municipality, an ordinance fixing a saloon district is a valid exercise of the power.—Timm v. Common Council of the Village of Caledonia Station, 149 Mich. 323.

¶ 385. The legislature, and not the common council, has the right and has exercised the duty of determining on what terms liquor may be sold, and therefore such council may not pass upon the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the traffic.—Potter v. Common Council of Village of Homer, 59 Mich. 8.

¶ 386. A city incorporated under the general law has no authority to pass an ordinance providing for the payment of an annual fee for a saloon license, to be paid on or before the 1st day of May of the year in which the business is to be conducted, since Comp. L. 1897, section 3109, provides that no license shall be granted for any term beyond the first Monday in June next thereafter.—City of Albion v. Boldt, 145 Mich. 285.

¶ 387. A village established under the general village law (Comp. L. 1897, chap. 87), has no power to establish saloon limits and prohibit the sale of liquors outside such limits.—Timm v. Common Council of the Village of Caledonia Station, 149 Mich. 323.

¶ 388. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3107, cities of the fourth class have the right to enact an ordinance establishing saloon limits, and providing that no license shall be granted except within those limits.—Johnson v. Common Council of City of Bessemer, 143 Mich. 313.

¶ 390. A city charter empowering the common council "to enact such ordinances, by-laws and regulations as they deem desirable, * * * to restrain, license and regulate saloons, and to regulate and prescribe the location thereof," and prohibiting persons from engaging in such occupation in the city without license, authorizes an ordinance requiring an application for a license to be made to the common council, and prescribing the conditions precedent to its consideration by the council; and it empowers the council to determine each individual application so far as the location and suitableness of the place are concerned.—Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 193.

¶ 391. It is competent for the common council to permit the keeping open on Sunday of saloons for the purpose of furnishing meals, and to forbid it for other purposes.—Lynch v. People, 16 Mich. 472.

¶ 392. Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, relating to the regulating, taxing and licensing of the sale of liquors, does not repeal Comp. L. 1897, § 2769, subd. 7, which gives villages the power to suppress saloons.—Lake v. Village of Cedar Springs, 162 Mich. 569.

¶ 393. Where the state law prohibits a wholesale liquor dealer to sell whisky in quantities less than three gallons, and by a municipal charter the power is conferred to regulate and license or prohibit, in pursuance of which an ordinance was passed prohibiting the sale of whisky in quantities less than one pint, held, in an action against a wholesale dealer for selling by the pint, that the charter provision did not supersede the state law, but merely gave the city power to further regulate the liquor traffic. —People v. Blom, 178 Mich. 508.

¶ 394. Under a power to license and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors, a city has power to establish saloon limits, although there is no express provision in its charter giving it power to regulate and prescribe the location of saloons or places where intoxicating liquors are to be sold or given away, and no express provision conferring the power to suppress saloons.—Churchill v. Detroit Common Council, 153 Mich. 93.

D. CONTROL OF STREETS AND PUBLIC PLACES AND BUILDINGS.

§ 88. In general.

Distribution of powers over streets, power of department of public works or street department, see ante § 31.

Construction of street and travel regulations, see ante § 53.

Construction of ordinances for peace and order in streets and public places, see also ante § 54.

Construction of ordinances granting franchises and permits, see ante § 55.

Building and fire protection regulations, see ante § 79.

Transportation of garbage through streets, see ante § 81.

Construction of ordinance and charter respecting sewer connections, see ante ¶ 204.

Power and duty relative to construction and repair of streets and bridges, see Highways, IV.

Power and duty as to grades and changes of same, see Highways, V.

Power respecting vacation or closing of streets, see Highways, VI.

Power to vacate or abandon streets, see Highways § 125.

Extent of general power over streets and highways, see also Highways ¶ 545.

Police power of municipality to remove street obstructions summarily as nuisances, see also Highways, IX.

Power respecting removal of obstructions from alleys, see also Highways § 193.

What included in "street," see Highways ¶ 544.

Disability of courts to control official administration and regulation of streets, see also Highways ¶ 547.

Judicial review of municipal action in allotting portion of street for travel, see Highways § 114.

Right to pass ordinances allowing bicyclists to use sidewalks, see Highways § 366.

Inhibition on legislative vacation or alteration of streets, alleys, or public grounds in cities and villages, see Const. art. VIII, § 27.

¶ 395. The power of city authorities to regulate streets does not include the power to pass ordinances that affect injuriously public or private rights.—People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 273.

¶ 396. Under section 28 of art. VIII of the Constitution of 1909, cities and villages may make such reasonable regulations regarding the use of their streets and public places as are not in conflict with the general laws of the state.—People v. McGraw, 184 Mich. 233.

¶ 397. The fact that the obstruction of streets and highways is forbidden by section 6301, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6656, does not prevent a city under §§ 3173, 3183, 3186, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 5695, 5705, 5708, from enacting an ordinance on the same subject.—City of Owosso v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 688.

¶ 398. The fact that a municipal ordinance prohibiting the obstruction of streets by railroad trains, imposes a greater penalty than that prescribed by § 6301, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6656, for the same offense, does not render the ordinance void.—City of Owosso v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 688.

¶ 399. The reservation by § 28 of art. VIII of the Constitution of 1909, to cities and villages of the reasonable control of their streets and public places, is not limited to their use by public service corporations.—People v. McGraw, 184 Mich. 233.

¶ 400. The charter of Detroit confers full authority upon the common council to pass and enforce ordinances to prohibit and prevent the incumbering of streets and obstructions to public travel over the streets and public places in the city, by vehicles or otherwise, outside of the market limits.—Hughes v. Recorder's Court of Detroit, 75 Mich. 574.

¶ 401. An ordinance, and a charter provision authorizing it, whereby all persons owning or occupying realty are required to maintain sufficient sidewalks in front of such realty or adjacent thereto, and imposing a fine or imprisonment for failure to do so, are void, for indigent persons cannot comply therewith.—City of Port Huron v. Jenkinson, 77 Mich. 414.

¶ 402. Neither power to provide for "cleaning" the streets of "dirt, mud, filth," etc., nor to prohibit obstructing or incumbering of streets, etc., nor to control and regulate the "use" of streets, nor to prohibit practices tending to frighten horses, will justify an ordinance of the city of Detroit, in so far as it prohibited the distribution of circulars, etc., in streets and alleys.—People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 288.

¶ 403. The laying of street railway tracks in a street cannot be considered as a part of the pavement of the street, so as to bring it within the power of the city to pave the street.—Attorney General v. Detroit Common Council, 148 Mich. 71, per Blair, J., Grant, Ostrander, Montgomery, and Moore, JJ., concurring.

¶ 404. Although a municipal council can institute proceedings for the abatement of a sidewalk opening as a public nuisance, it cannot decide that it is so, since the maintenance of a nuisance, being a public offense, must be tried on proper accusation in court. —Everett v. City of Marquette, 53 Mich. 450.

Power to regulate motor vehicles, see also Highways § 411.

¶ 405. A provision for the registration and numbering of automobiles which requires the payment of a fee only sufficient to pay for the numbers which the city furnishes, if it is a license at all, is a mere means of regulation, and hence authority to regulate carries with it the right to so license, if this be necessary for effectual regulation.—People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673.

§ 90. Operation of railroads and street railways.

See also ante ¶ 335.

Power to regulate carriage and transportation, see ante § 83.

Power to allow or regulate laying of tracks in streets, see post § 91.

Construction of grants, franchises, and permits to railroads and street railways, see Railroads, I; Street Railways, I.

Regulations of street railway uses of streets, see Street Railways, IV, A.

Constitutional provision for municipal consent to use of streets for public utilities, see Const. art. VIII, § 28.

¶ 406. The legislature has granted to municipalities the power to grant the right to construct and operate a street railway with all necessary poles, wires, sidetracks, etc., along the public streets, and the location and construction of the road and changes relative thereto are subject to the control and approval of the municipal authorities, provided that the railroad so authorized and constructed does not become a public nuisance, or for any special reason requires the interference of a court.—Mannel v. Detroit, Mt. C. & M. City Ry., 139 Mich. 106.

§ 91. Poles, wires, tracks, and the like in streets.

Power to regulate operation of railroads and street railways, see ante § 90.

Rights of telegraph and telephone lines in streets, see also Highways, X; Telegraphs.

General conditions and regulations upon use of streets for poles and wires, see Electricity § 1; Telegraphs.

Power of municipal corporation to allow one electric light company to use poles of another, see also Electricity ¶ 4.

Validity and construction of conditions in ordinances and franchises, see Street Railways, I; Telegraphs; Railroads, I.

¶ 408. The police power of the city to make reasonable rules and regulations for the erection and maintenance of poles and wires by telephone and telegraph companies, does not authorize the city to arbitrarily prohibit such a company from extending its system, by refusing to provide the rules and regulations governing the extension.—Michigan Tel. Co. v. City of St. Joseph, 121 Mich. 502.

¶ 409. While municipalities may not annul the general statute relating to the use of highways by telephone companies by arbitrarily refusing to permit the use of their streets to them, they may have under their charters controlling authority within reasonable limits, within the exercise of their police power, to direct upon which streets and in what manner the lines are to be installed, and may prohibit entirely the erection of poles on streets and in places that will injure or incommode the public.—City of Traverse City v. Citizens' Tel. Co., 195 Mich. 373.

¶ 410. An ordinance of a city requiring a telegraph company to remove its wires and place them underground within a business district is within the police powers of the municipality where the use of telegraph poles interferes with traffic and with the effective work of the fire department.—City of Monroe v. Postal Tel. Co., 195 Mich. 467.

¶ 411. A city ordinance providing for a reasonable inspection of all poles used by an electric light company within the city, to ascertain whether the same are secure, and making the cost of such inspection a charge against the company, is valid, where the statute under which the company was organized gives to the municipal authorities the right to prescribe "reasonable regulations" for the conduct of its business.—City of Saginaw v. Swift Electric Light Co., 113 Mich. 660.

¶ 412. A city cannot justify the imposition of unreasonable burdens upon an electric light company, to which it has granted by ordinance the right to erect its poles in the streets upon conditions stated, under the power reserved to it in a subsequent ordinance relating to such company to amend, alter, or repeal the latter ordinance.—City of Saginaw v. Swift Electric Light Co., 113 Mich. 660.

§ 92. Assemblages and processions.

Construction of ordinance against "red flag" processions, see ante ¶ 223.

¶ 413. Municipalities may regulate, but cannot prohibit or punish, public and popular demonstrations so long as they are harmless, nor leave it to the sole discretion of a mayor or council to permit them; and this is so of a parade of the Salvation Army with music.—In re Frazee's Case, 63 Mich. 396.

¶ 414. Regulation of public demonstrations must operate uniformly under the same conditions, and by-laws for that purpose must be reasonable, impartial and general, and must fix conditions expressly and intelligibly, without leaving them to any one's caprice.—In re Frazee's Case, 63 Mich. 396.

¶ 415. Under the Detroit charter, chapter 7, § 34, giving power to the city council to control, prescribe and regulate the manner in which streets and public grounds shall be used, council has the power to enact an ordinance prohibiting the making of a public address within a half mile of the City Hall without a permit.—Love v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 128 Mich 545.

¶ 416. An ordinance prohibiting the making of a public address within a half mile of the City Hall without a permit is a reasonable exercise of a power vested in the common council to prescribe and regulate the manner in which streets and public grounds shall be used.—Love v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 128 Mich. 545.

§ 93. Vending or peddling on streets.

Power to regulate or license vending or peddling as a business, see ante § 85.

¶ 417. Under the provision of the Detroit charter empowering the council to "prohibit and prevent encumbering or obstructing of streets," etc., "with vehicles, animals, etc.," the council has power to enact an ordinance forbidding farmers, hucksters, etc., from standing with their vehicles in the streets adjacent to the Central market within five hundred feet thereof, the region being one of dense traffic and restricted space.—People v. Keir, 78 Mich. 98.

§ 94. Animals at large or estray.

General regulations concerning estrays and animals at large, see Animals.

Validity of estray ordinance omitting to provide penalty, see also Animals § 5.

¶ 418. The village ordinance of April 8, 1870, "relative to the restraining and impounding of animals," passed by the common council of Wenona, held valid and authorized by the village charter.—Grover v. Huckins, 26 Mich. 476.

¶ 419. Where a village charter empowered the common council "to establish one or more pounds and regulate and restrain the running at large of cattle, etc., in the streets and public places in said village," it was held to include authority to use the customary means of prevention, such as the sale of the animals for the costs and expenses of impounding and keeping.—Grover v. Huckins, 26 Mich. 476.

§ 95. Navigable waters and harbors and water supply.

Public control over navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, II.

¶ 420. The common council of the village of Spring Lake has no power to establish harbor lines in Grand river.—People v. Kirsch, 67 Mich. 539.

¶ 421. A city cannot, under the police power, prohibit a riparian owner on an inland lake from bathing in the waters of the lake, though the city is also a riparian owner drawing its water supply from the lake.—People v. Hulbert, 131 Mich. 156.

E. DEFINING PENAL OFFENSES AND PROCEDURE TO PUNISH SAME.

Prosecutions for violations of ordinances, see post XVI, B.

§ 96. In general; matters covered by general law.

Charter as limitation on power to enact ordinances, see also ante § 75.

Enlarging statutory definition of offense, see post ¶ 430.

Construction of ordinances, see ante § 54.

Effect of ordinance on same subject as general law of state, see also Crimes § 3.

Effect of legislative enumeration of acts constituting disorderly conduct as limiting power to make other acts such, see Crimes ¶ 9.

Vagrancy as state crime notwithstanding city ordinance on same subject, see also Counties ¶ 162.

¶ 422. To render ordinances reasonable they must tend in some degree to the accomplishment of the object for which the corporation was created and its powers conferred; and the question of reasonableness is not determined by the enormity of the offense sought to be punished, but by the actual operation of the ordinance in all cases that may be brought thereunder.—People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 288.

¶ 423. A city ordinance prohibiting the creation or maintenance of a nuisance is not invalid or unconstitutional because the general statutes of the state provide for the conviction and punishment of those guilty of the like offense.—People v. Detroit White Lead Works, 82 Mich. 471.

¶ 424. Municipal penalties must be fixed and not fluctuating; a common council cannot properly turn over to an inferior court, without limitation or classification, the full power of fixing penalties conferred upon it by charter. And no by-law can impose a penalty, sliding or fixed, that exceeds a reasonable sum.—In re Frazee's Case, 63 Mich. 396.

¶ 425. The authority to prescribe penalties for violations of city ordinances, conferred upon the common council of Detroit by the Charter of 1893, § 257, is not limited to such ordinances as are adopted under the police power of the council, but includes those that may be enacted by virtue of contract relations existing between the city and the owner of a public franchise.—People v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 132.

Power to declare house of ill fame to be nuisance, see ante § 80.

Power to suppress, prohibit, or regulate saloons, see ante § 87.

¶ 426. An ordinance declaring the keeper of a bawdy-house a "disorderly person" is not beyond the power of a city to enact, being within the statutory definition.—City of St. Ignace v. Snyder, 75 Mich. 649.

¶ 427. Detroit's Charter, § 35, ch. 7, which provides that the common council may provide for the prohibition and prevention of any disorderly noise or disturbance in the streets or elsewhere in said city, confers power upon the common council to pass an ordinance punishing "any person who shall make any disturbance by which the peace and good order of the neighborhood are disturbed," etc.—In re Bushey, 105 Mich. 64.

¶ 428. A charter provision authorizing the common council of Detroit to prohibit "all lotteries for the drawing or disposing of money or any other property whatsoever" authorizes the prohibition of policy shops and of the game of policy, which is a lottery. —People v. Hess, 85 Mich. 128.

¶ 429. It is within a city police's power to pass an ordinance making it an offense indecently to expose the person without reference to the intent which accompanies the act.—City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135.

¶ 430. The statutory definition of vagrancy cannot be enlarged by municipal ordinance.—In re Way, 41 Mich. 299.

¶ 431. A village ordinance which provides that any assemblage of persons, in any place in said village, engaged in any noisy, etc., language or strife, shall be deemed disorderly, is not rendered unconstitutional by the fact that its scope is not limited to public places.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 102 Mich. 551.

§ 98. Arrests, procedure, and punishment.

Prosecutions for violations, see post XVI, B.

Noncriminal nature of the prosecution, see post § 217.

General law of arrests and prosecutions for crime, see Arrest; Indictment.

¶ 432. A provision of a city charter authorizing police officers to arrest without process all persons engaged, in the arresting officer's presence, in violating any ordinance of the city, is valid.—Burroughs v. Eastman, 101 Mich. 419.

¶ 433. Whether a municipal ordinance can justify arrests without process where common-law principles do not, quære.—Quinn v. Heisel, 40 Mich. 576.

¶ 434. An ordinance providing for confinement of violators of municipal ordinances in the house of correction is not unreasonable because the legislature has seen fit to permit felons to be sentenced to the same place in the absence of any showing that minor offenders, civil debtors, etc., are confined with the greater criminals and lower characters.—In re Cox, 129 Mich. 635.

§ 99. Abrogation or amendment of penal ordinance by statute or charter.

General rule as to abrogation by statute, see ante § 66.

¶ 435. An ordinance of the city of Adrian regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, enacted under a charter passed prior to the general liquor law of 1887, was repealed by the latter.—People v. Furman, 85 Mich. 110.

¶ 436. Laws 1887, Act No. 34, making the offense of keeping a house of ill-fame a felony, and punishable as such, does not repeal by implication the provision of the charter of the city of Detroit authorizing the common council to prohibit, prevent and suppress the keeping of such houses.—People v. Hanrahan, 75 Mich. 611.

¶ 437. A city charter provision giving authority to enact ordinances to restrain, license and regulate saloons, and prescribe the location thereof, did not abrogate Comp. L. 1897, § 5395, requiring saloons to be closed on legal holidays, as it contained no language in terms suspending the operation of the general law, and therefore the city had no power to pass an ordinance permitting saloons to remain open on July 4th.—Moore v. Kelley, 136 Mich. 139.

X. PUBLIC PROPERTY, BUILDINGS, PLACES, AND WORKS; GRANTS, TITLES, AND CONVEYANCES.

§ 100. Property and titles in general.

Various classes of public properties, buildings, and facilities, see post §§ 101-108 and the cross-references found in those sections.

City plats and plans, see post § 101.

Condemnation of property, see post § 102.

Donations or diversions of property to county or state uses, see post § 103.

Powers of cities to provide for public improvements, buildings, and utilities, see ante §§ 23-26.

Works and properties beyond city limits, see ante § 29.

Municipal regulative powers and control over public places, streets, and buildings, see ante IX, D.

Liability for misuse or injurious use of property, see post XII.

Effect of annexation or division on property rights, see ante § 9.

Reformation of lease with city as judicial interference with contractual functions, see also post ¶ 481.

Boards and departments in charge of public property and works, see also post § 179 et seq.

Title to public property by adverse possession, see Adverse Possession §§ 2, 3.

Adverse possession by city against private person, see Adverse Possession § 29.

Sufficiency of adverse possession of lands bought in by city for taxes, see Adverse Possession § 28.

Limitation of action to recover from city land in public use, see Limitations § 25.

Laches against county seeking land occupied by city, see Equity ¶ 169.

Prescriptive rights in waters, drainage and water rights, see Waters.

¶ 438. The city of Flint, under power granted in its charter, Local Acts 1901, Act No. 346, ch. 1, sec. 2, and also by its inherent power, has power to purchase and hold real estate for its proper municipal needs.—Berston v. City of Flint, 176 Mich. 266.

¶ 439. The erection of a drinking fountain is a proper municipal purpose and a city may take a devise therefor.—Hosmer v. City of Detroit, 175 Mich. 267.

¶ 440. Under a charter authorizing a city "to provide for public squares and parks" land may be purchased for such purposes.—City of North Muskegon v. Rodgers, 188 Mich. 93.

¶ 441. A city, having the general power to purchase, take, accept and hold real estate for park purposes may, in the absence of a charter provision limiting its action, purchase property for such purposes at a tax sale.—City of North Muskegon v. Rodgers, 188 Mich. 93.

¶ 442. Complainant bought one of ten lots advertised as in a residence street, and restricted to that purpose by the contract of sale. The vendor sold one of the lots to the city, which proceeded to put up a fire department building. Held, the city was bound by the restrictions, and could be enjoined from erecting the building until by condemnation it acquired the interests of the other lot owners.—Allen v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 612.

§ 101. Plats, plans, and dedications.

Sufficiency of vote to accept dedication, see also ante ¶ 156.

Adoption of plans as a condition precedent to issuance of public improvement bonds, see also Municipal Bonds § 5.

Dedication to public use and acceptance of same, see Dedication.

Effect of agreement variant from resolution accepting dedication and imposing conditions, see Dedication ¶ 52.

¶ 443. The power to lay out the town of Detroit, given to the governor and judges by the act of congress of April 21, 1806, was fully exercised and executed by them on the 27th of April, 1807, as shown by the recorded order then passed.—People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 273.

¶ 444. The interior open spaces in the original plan of the city of Detroit were, by the acts of the governor and judges, and the early legislation of the territory, set apart to such uses as the city council of Detroit, in its legislative capacity, might "at any time" provide. The land board had no further power or control in the matter, and subsequent attempt by them to confine the dedication was void.—Riggs v. Detroit Board of Education, 27 Mich. 262.

¶ 445. The acts of the common council of Detroit, as a land board under the acts of congress, were under a different authority from their legislative acts under the state or territorial laws, and could not be legally identical with the latter.—Riggs v. Detroit Board of Education, 27 Mich. 262.

¶ 446. The control of the uses of the interior open spaces in the original plan of Detroit was vested in the common council as a legislature, and was to be exercised from time to time, and the uses were variable. One council could not prevent legislative action by a subsequent council to change a former use.—Riggs v. Detroit Board of Education, 27 Mich. 262.

¶ 447. The use for a public library of a triangle in the old city plan is within the original purposes of the dedication, as well as within the power of the city under its authority to vacate open spaces for public improvements.—Riggs v. Detroit Board of Education, 27 Mich. 262.

¶ 448. By Act of Congress of August 29, 1842, a grant of land was made to Detroit, from which was excepted "the court-house"; held, that this term covered the ground on which that building stood, viz., the triangular block bounded by State, Griswold and Rowland streets, and that the city's power over this block is one of legislation and regulation, and not that of a proprietor; also that, under existing legislation the occupancy of it by the board of education is not such a tenancy as the city can terminate by a notice to quit.—Board of Education v. City of Detroit, 30 Mich. 505.

¶ 449. The triangular lot bounded by State, Griswold and Rowland streets, in Detroit, having been reserved by an act of congress in 1807 "for public wells and pumps, for markets, for public schools, for houses for the reception of engines or other articles for the extinguishment of fires and for the preservation of the property of the inhabitants, for houses for the meeting of religious, moral, literary or political societies, or other useful associations, and generally for such purposes of utility or ornament as the city council of Detroit may at any time by law provide," etc., the common council cannot proceed to open a street through it on the ground that this merely changed the uses of public grounds from an educational to some other purpose, for the change is from a use specified in the act to one not there laid down. The italicized words refer to the purposes of the same general nature as those specifically enumerated, and cannot embrace those which are so different as to annihilate the very parks which congress, by this act, sought to establish and perpetuate. The act contemplates, for some of the purposes set forth, a dedication to public uses that are to be wrought out through corporations or associations of citizens, and by means of buildings and improvements erected by the expenditure of their own funds; it clearly does not contemplate that these corporations are to be mere tenants at will of the city, subject to dispossession and deprivation of the benefit of their expenditures on no more notice than the statute requires to be given to a tenant at sufferance.—Board of Education v. City of Detroit, 30 Mich. 505.

§ 102. Condemnation of property for public use.

Necessity of two-thirds vote to appropriate property, see ante ¶ 159.

Liability for trespass for taking without condemnation, see post ¶ 551.

Right to open street by condemnation notwithstanding contract to refrain from opening, see post ¶ 491.

Validity of act authorizing erection of county buildings by city, see also Counties ¶ 51.

Invalidity of law authorizing city to be reimbursed for cost of county buildings erected by it, if county seat should be removed, see Counties ¶ 102.

¶ 451. Although a city cannot be compelled to bear the whole expense of a county building, yet it may do so if authorized and if it sees fit.—Callam v. City of Saginaw, 50 Mich. 7.

§ 104. Public buildings, markets, commons and parks.

Uses to which open spaces on Original Plan of Detroit may be devoted, see ante § 101.

Modes in which lands may be acquired, see ante § 100.

Building restrictions as binding on city, see ante ¶ 442.

Liability for injury from defectively planned market, see post ¶ 545.

Power to rent or to buy premises for markets, see also post ¶ 497.

Proper funds and objects of funds, see post § 142.

[Note. Parks and commons, though usually within or adjacent to a city or village, are for the general public and the law relating to them is general and not merely a municipal incident. Therefore the separate topic, Parks and Commons, has been created to treat such matters.]

"Public building" bonds as excluding bonds for garbage reduction plant, see also Municipal Bonds ¶ 11.

Constitutional power to acquire, own, establish, and maintain parks, boulevards, cemeteries, hospitals, almshouses, and all other works which involve the public health or safety, see Const. art. VIII, § 22.

¶ 452. A city has a right to establish and maintain a public market on premises duly condemned for that purpose, even though it be an incidental consequence that market wagons from which sales are made collect in the neighborhood and to some extent cause the obstruction of the streets. And no private right of action arises against the city for such obstruction, especially where it is under police regulation; and it is proper, for paying the expenses of such regulation, to collect fees from those who sell goods from such wagons.—Henkel v. City of Detroit, 49 Mich. 249.

¶ 453. The city of Detroit having built a market building, under a special statute authorizing it to do so, with the proceeds of bonds sold for the purpose, such statute directing that the rents of the building should be applied to the payment of interest and toward the establishment of a sinking fund to pay the bonds, held, that the city would be restrained from discontinuing, prior to the maturity of the bonds, the use of such building for market purposes.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 71 Mich. 92.

¶ 454. The fact that the city owns the fee of the land upon which the market is situated does not authorize it to deprive the public of the franchise; nor does the fact that the city has neglected its duty to keep up a separate market "sinking fund" affect the principles involved.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 71 Mich. 92.

¶ 455. It seems that a city may change the location of public markets where such change will not injuriously affect public rights, but that it cannot capriciously destroy such markets unless the charter gives it power to do so.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 71 Mich. 92.

¶ 456. The city of Detroit, after it has paid bonds issued by it to erect the central market building, and after it has established other markets, may discontinue the central market on finding it is no longer indispensable.—Petz v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 169.

¶ 457. A city may exercise its right to discontinue a market regardless of the interests of tenants whether yearly or monthly.—Petz v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 169.

¶ 459. The transfer by the Detroit Museum of Art, a private corporation, of its property to the City of Detroit, with the retention of the minority representation on the board of directors, does not convert it into a municipal agency.—Detroit Museum of Art v. Engle, 187 Mich. 432. (Brooke, C. J., and Moore, J., dissenting.)

§ 106. Highways, streets, bridges, and waterways.

[Note. It is the plan of this digest to treat in specific topics such as Highways, Navigable Waters, Bridges, the law pertaining to such subjects. The fact that many of the cases originate with the limits of a municipality or involve incidentally an assertion of liability against a municipality does not afford a sufficient reason for including them in Municipal Corporations as bearing on the law relating to that subject. The first search should therefore be made in the topics mentioned.]

pality which sold it by a claim that the right to the soil was not in the city but in the abutters, where they made no objection and it could not be identified as belonging to any one of them.—Griswold v. Bay City, 35 Mich. 452.

Where the Village of Highland Park was permitted by decree of a court of chancery to empty sewage into the sewers of the City of Detroit on making compensation therefor, held that payment on an acreage basis was equitable, and was sustained by the testimony.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 462. A decree respecting the right of the Village of Highland Park to empty its sewage into a sewer of the City of Detroit and requiring the enlargement of such sewer, held to impose the cost of such alteration upon the village and not upon the city.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

Constitutional provision for acquiring, owning, and operating public utilities for water, light, heat, power, and transportation, see Const. art. VIII, § 23.

¶ 463. Following the rule of George v. Wyandotte Electric Light Co., 105 Mich. 1, a special election properly held by the city on the question of constructing an electric plant by the city of Negaunee under its charter and Pub. Acts, 1891, as amended, is lawful.—Mitchell v. City of Negaunee, 113 Mich. 359.

¶ 464. Under sections 23, 24, art. 8, of the Michigan Constitution, authorizing municipally owned public utilities, the resolution of a city council providing for the erection of a municipal electric lighting plant is not unconstitutional by reason of the fact that such a course will result in competition against a private company which has an unexpired permit to use, but not exclusively, the city's streets for lighting purposes.—Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. v. City of Muskegon, 167 Mich. 331.

¶ 465. Where a charter provides that the city council shall have power to construct an electric lighting plant "whenever two-thirds of the aldermen elect shall by resolution declare that it is expedient," etc., the meaning is plain that the power of the council to carry out the purpose depends upon its first adopting a resolution determining the expediency of the purpose.—Bay City Traction & Electric Co. v. Bay City, 155 Mich. 393.

¶ 466. A city of the fourth class which, under its special charter, had no power to grant an exclusive waterworks franchise, did not, by adopting a resolution declaring it expedient for waterworks to be constructed but inexpedient for the city to construct them, preclude itself from subsequently constructing its own waterworks and make it necessary, in case it desired to operate its own system, to purchase the works of the company that, under franchise, had been supplying it with water, even conceding that by the adoption of the resolution the Waterworks Act (Pub. Acts 1869, No. 113), under which the water company was incorporated but which gave the company no exclusive rights in express terms, became a part of the city charter.—North Michigan Water Co. v. City of Escanaba, 199 Mich. 286.

Estoppel of municipality to deny incorporation of grantee of franchise to use streets and serve public, see Corporations § 12.

¶ 467. A provision in an ordinance, granting a right of way to a street railway company, that the city shall pay for the concrete foundation of the tracks in unpaved streets is not ultra vires of the city.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Ry., 134 Mich. 11.

§ 111. Protection of public property from injury.

Injuries to highways and bridges and liability to public by reason thereof, see Highways § 192; Bridges §§ 23-25.

¶ 468. Where a defendant private corporation is engaged in constructing a tunnel under a city water main, and fails to supply men to watch and protect said main, the city has a right to supply such protection at defendant's expense.—Board Water Com'rs City of Detroit v. Butler Bros. Const. Co., 168 Mich. 137.

¶ 469. Where a private corporation undertakes the building of a tunnel under a city water main and it is necessary that such main be watched during the process of construction of said tunnel, it is a question of fact for the jury and not a question for the court, whether the defendant exercised proper care in watching said main and whether the city supplied an unnecessarily large number of men to look after the main, the suit being by the city to recover for the services of the men supplied by it for said purpose.—Board Water Com'rs City of Detroit v. Butler Bros. Const. Co., 168 Mich. 137.

XI. CONTRACTS AND INDEBTEDNESS.

[Note. The general law of contracts by or with the public is treated in Public Contracts, which see. The present division is restricted to matters of public contract law which are peculiarly applicable to municipalities. These treatments are correlative of each other, however, and ordinarily both should be searched.]

¶ 470. The acts and contracts of a common council are only binding on the city when the council keeps within the scope of its authority.—Dermont v. City of Detroit, 4 Mich. 435.

¶ 471. The contracts of a municipal corporation, to be valid, must be within the scope of the authority conferred upon it by law, and for municipal purposes.—Thomas v. City of Port Huron, 27 Mich. 320.

¶ 472. A municipal corporation has no general authority to exchange promises with other corporations or persons.—Thomas v. v. City of Port Huron, 27 Mich. 320.

¶ 473. The power to make expenditures for entertainment is not within the scope of general municipal powers, but must be expressly conferred.—Black v. Common Council of Detroit, 119 Mich. 571.

¶ 474. The carrying of casualty and indemnity risks for individuals or other corporations is clearly beyond the power of a city in the absence of special charter provision.—Wheeler v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 164 Mich. 338.

¶ 475. An order of a court in which a person has been convicted of crime, remanding him to the police station under suspended sentence to be detained until the trial of a criminal case wherein he is to be a witness for the people, is void, because not according to the statutory mode of committing witnesses, and cannot be made the basis of a valid contract for the board of such prisoner.—Tucker v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 104 Mich. 621.

¶ 476. Clear authority from the legislature is needed to enable a city to make a contract by ordinance with a street railroad for the reduction of fares.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410.

¶ 477. It is competent for a state legislature, unless prohibited by constitutional provisions, to authorize a municipal corporation to contract with a street railway company as to the rates of fare, and so to bind during the specified period any future common council from altering or in any way interfering with such contract.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410.

§ 113. Notice of limitations.

¶ 478. All persons contracting with a municipal corporation are bound to take notice of the limitations by law upon their power to contract.—Tennant v. Crocker, 85 Mich. 328.

¶ 479. The rule that all who deal with a municipal corporation must see that the contracts upon which they rely are within its powers, applied as against a contractor who furnished supplies which a city used in the entertainment of guests, where the money for such entertainment was directed to be paid out of a fund which the common council had no power to use for that purpose.—Black v. Common Council of Detroit, 119 Mich. 571.

§ 114. Mode of contracting and form of contract.

Vote required to pass resolution or ordinance involving appropriation, see ante § 38.
Submission to electors of proposal to contract, see post § 115.
Mode and manner of signing contract for city, see post § 194.

Measure of quantum meruit on implied contracts, see Implied Contracts §§ 22-24.
Requisites and form of bonds, see Municipal Bonds, II.
Meetings and votes to authorize issuance of bonds, see also Municipal Bonds § 4.

¶ 480. A village corporation is bound by a contract which it alone can properly make, but which has been officially made by some of its authorities who have power to contract on its behalf, and have, in making it, declared themselves and their successors in office bound by its conditions.—Gale v. City of Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344.

¶ 481. A lease with a city may be reformed in equity to eliminate a phrase inserted through mistake of the scrivener, though the charter of the city disables it to sell or dispose of any real estate or interest therein unless by ordinance or resolution, where the necessary record of municipal action exists to show what contract was intended; such decree does not encroach on a legislative function or rest on an oral contract which the city could not make.—Bronk v. Standard Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 680.

¶ 482. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 186, § 2, relating to erection of public lighting plants, should be reasonably construed; it is designed only to provide for the erection of municipal plants and cannot be held to prescribe a method of contracting for electric light, which other sections cover and control without requiring the declaration of expediency or other formality required in making a contract, such as section 2 controls.—Belding Land & Improvement Co. v. City of Belding, 128 Mich. 79.

¶ 483. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 186 (Comp. L. 1897, § 3437 et seq.), relating to contracts for public lighting contains no requirement as to competitive bidding.—Belding Land & Improvement Co. v. City of Belding, 128 Mich. 79.

¶ 484. Even if the action of the common council in approving a contract by the city with a water supply company was not equivalent to the adoption of a resolution declaring the expediency of having waterworks constructed and the inexpediency of having the municipality build such works, as required by How. St. § 3110; the city was after 16 years of action under the contract in question, and after the making of large expenditures on the strength of it, estopped to raise such objection.—Ludington Water Supply Co. v. City of Ludington, 119 Mich. 490.

General law of elections, see Elections.

¶ 485. A proposition to borrow a certain sum for the "construction and maintenance" of waterworks is improperly submitted to a vote of the electors of a village, since it does not indicate what proportion of the sum is for construction, and what for maintenance, and the statute does not authorize money to be borrowed for the maintenance of waterworks.—Richardi v. Village of Bellaire, 153 Mich. 560.

¶ 486. Under a statute requiring that a proposition to borrow money must have the approval of "two-thirds of the electors voting" at a general election, or at a special election called for that purpose, an affirmative vote equal to two-thirds of the whole number voting at the election, and not merely a two-thirds vote of those voting upon the particular proposition, is necessary to authorize the loan.—Daniels v. Long, 111 Mich. 562.

¶ 487. Contracts entered into by the public lighting commission of Detroit, under Local Acts 1893, No. 294, § 4, for the purchase of lands, machinery, and appliances necessary for an electric lighting plant, must be submitted to the common council for approval. The provision of Detroit Charter 1893, § 190, that no contract for any public work shall be let "until the contract therefor has been duly approved and confirmed by the common council" applies, since Act No. 294 is itself a part of the charter, and especially since that act also contemplates by express words that the council "shall" or "may" direct the commissioners to enter into certain contracts respecting lighting.—Detroit Common Council v. Detroit Public Lighting Commission, 101 Mich. 362.

¶ 488. The General Village Incorporation Act, chap. 7, § 1, subd. 16 (How. St. § 2847), which authorizes the village council to make ordinances for the organization and regulation of the fire department, and for the prevention and extinguishment of fires, and chapter 10, § 2, of the same act (How. St. § 2959), which provides that "the council may purchase and provide suitable fire engines and apparatus for the extinguishment of fires, and may sink wells and construct cisterns and reservoirs in the streets, public grounds, and other suitable places in the village, and make all necessary provisions for a convenient supply of water for the use of the [fire] department," empower the village to contract with private individuals to furnish a water supply for the prevention of fires, and for the use of the fire department, without a vote of the electors.—East Jordan Lumber Co. v. Village of East Jordan, 100 Mich. 201.

¶ 489. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, chap. 11, § 4, prohibiting any village from borrowing money for waterworks, unless authorized by a two thirds vote of the electors, applies wherever a general water supply is contemplated; and is not overcome by the provisions of chapter 8, section 1, and chapter 10, sections 1-3, which chapters relate respectively to "improvements and assessments" and to "fires and fire department," authorizing the council to purchase and provide "engines and apparatus * * * for a convenient supply of water for the use of the department."—Savidge v. Village of Spring Lake, 112 Mich. 91.

§ 116. Construction, operation, performance, and breach.

[Note. The construction, operation and effect of contracts to which a municipality is a party may depend on the general law of contracts (see Contracts, VI) or on the rules specially applicable to all public contracts (see Public Contracts, IV), or on the rules specially applicable to particular kinds of contracts (see Building Contracts; Sales, II; Municipal Bonds; etc.). Only such decisions as seem to turn on the municipal character of a party have been retained in this classification.]

Contracts looking to acquisition of public buildings, works, and facilities, see post §§ 117, 118.

Contracts for right of use or connection with sewers, see post § 119.

Construction of village bond in which obligor is described as "board of trustees," see Municipal Bonds ¶ 59.

Succession of franchised corporation to franchise rights in reincorporated city, see ante § 11.
Invalidity of contract in which public officer is interested, see Public Contracts, IV.
Effect on contract as a whole of invalidity of part of it, see Public Contracts, IV.
Agreement embodied in franchises and permits to use streets for character of service and rates of fare, see Street Railways, I; Public Service.
Mandamus to compel performance of contracts, see Mandamus ¶ 665.

¶ 491. A contract between a city and a railroad company whereby the city, in consideration of the erection of a railroad station on a part of a street, agrees not to open such street, cannot prevent condemnation proceedings for such opening if the public necessity requires it.—City of Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 66 Mich. 42.

¶ 492. Where the breach of a contract made by village authorities lies in the repeal of an ordinance the village cannot be held liable; such action is only the exercise of a legislative discretion vested exclusively in the municipal authorities, and upon the continuous and unlimited possession and exercise of which neither they nor any other authority than the legislative power of the state can impose any restraints or limitations.—Gale v. Village of Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344.

¶ 493. As to the effect of an agreement to exempt lands from taxation for the "maintenance" of a sewer, where the contract provides for exemption from assessment to construct the sewer, it being separable, quære.—Coit v. City of Grand Rapids, 115 Mich. 493.

¶ 494. The inclusion in a garbage collection and disposal contract of provisions that the commissioner of public works shall designate the stations at which garbage when collected is to be delivered is not objectionable as enlarging the powers of the commissioner beyond those given in the act conferring powers on him, but is to be regarded as making him the agent of the contracting city for that purpose.—Detroit Reduction Co. v. Blades, 143 Mich. 591.

§ 117. Public buildings, markets, and grounds.

Public rights and titles, see ante §§ 100, 104.

¶ 495. No constitutional objection to legislation authorizing a city to take upon itself alone the entire expense of a county building can be based on the probability that such action may affect the subsequent removal of the county seat.—Callam v. City of Saginaw, 50 Mich. 7.

¶ 496. A village corporation will not be bound by a contract made by village authorities which tends to divest the corporation of a portion of its legislative authority, and to create a monopoly in favor of the other contractor. Such a contract is one which transfers the control of a public market to such contractor, confines sales to certain limits, excludes other market-houses from the village for a specified time, and provides that the stalls shall be rented at such rates as shall be fixed by the corporation and the contractor. The last-mentioned provision, though a village ordinance declares that the stalls shall be let by auction, still tends to create a monopoly in the absence of any provision in the contract binding the contractor to assent to the rent offered at auction, or precluding him from arbitrary discriminations among bidders.—Gale v. Village of Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344.

¶ 497. A village with the usual charter powers may provide itself with the proper building for a public market, either by renting or buying it, or contracting for its erection, and its contract therefore binds it to the extent to which an individual's contract would bind him in a matter pertaining to his private business.—Gale v. Village of Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344.

§ 118. Contracts for providing streets, sewers, bridges, and like conveniences.

Contracts for use of sewers or other public service facilities, see post § 119.
Modes of acquiring streets and highways, see Highways, II.
Power of municipal corporation to contract to exempt land from local assessments, see Taxes, III; and see also Local Improvements § 59.

¶ 498. A city which needed an outlet for its drainage led its sewer to the city limits, where the sewer emptied into a county ditch, which was found to be inadequate. It therefore made a contract with the adjoining proprietor to enlarge and straighten the ditch through his premises, so as to provide for carrying off all the water without overflowing or saturating his land, agreeing to keep the ditch in repair, not to injure or obstruct the cross-ditches, and to maintain a good bridge across it on his premises. Held, that the work undertaken by the city could not be regarded as repugnant or foreign to the purposes of its charter, and that the contract was not beyond the corporate powers.—City of Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474.

¶ 499. A private owner proposed to the common council to open a public street across his land if the city would help bridge a stream which it would cross. Held, that if the charter did not hinder, the council could accept such a proposition, and that the mere fact that the measure would benefit the lands of the owner made no difference.—Long v. City of Battle Creek, 39 Mich. 323.

¶ 500. A claim based on an agreement by a city in consideration of a grant of a right of way to construct a street through a tract of land cannot be defeated on the ground that the obligation is ultra vires as creating a debt in excess of a legal limit already reached, where the city has obtained a deed to the street and has removed a large amount of earth for use in other streets and made no attempt to put the plaintiff in statu quo.—Spier v. City of Kalamazoo, 138 Mich. 652.

¶ 501. A city in acquiring land to be used for widening a public street has no authority, in the absence of a special charter provision, to agree to move a building located on such land as a part of the compensation to be paid to the owner and to assume the risks to persons and property incident to such work.—Wheeler v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 164 Mich. 338.

§ 119. Contracts relating to use of sewers, water supply, or other public service.

Contracts for supply to the public, see post § 120.

Liability for cutting off connections, see post § 131.

Decree respecting right of village to use adjoining city sewers, see ante ¶ 462.

¶ 502. The payment of a sum annually by an individual for the privilege of connecting his drain with a public sewer is evidence of a license only, and not of an undertaking and guaranty on the part of the city to furnish ample drainage for his premises.—Dermont v. City of Detroit, 4 Mich. 435.

¶ 503. The board of water commissioners of Detroit do not exceed their powers in contracting to furnish and put in water pipe in private property, in a case which they regard, in good faith, as a proper one for the exercise of their discretion in using means to prevent waste and insure security.—Hale v. Houghton, 8 Mich. 458.

¶ 504. Where the superintendent and engineer of the board contracted in the name of the board to put in water pipe upon private premises, and put the same in accordingly, and the board refused to confirm the contract, held, that such refusal did not take from the owner of the premises the right to the pipe, but amounted to an election on the part of the board to look to the superintendent for payment, and the latter might sue and recover upon the contract in his own name.—Hale v. Houghton, 8 Mich. 458.

§ 120. Contracts for lighting or water.

Power to contract for lighting or water supply service, see ante § 25.

Estoppel by contracting for water to deny power to so contract, see ante ¶ 43.

Mode of contracting, see also ante § 114.

Submission of questions to electors, see ante § 115.

Effect of relationship of councilman to person contracting with municipality, see ante ¶¶ 170, 171.

Agreements for annual payments as creative of debts in excess of debt limit, see post § 123.

Receiving additional bids after opening, see Public Contracts, II.

Sufficiency of specifications in bids and proposals, see also Public Contracts, II.

Implication of power to issue necessary bonds, see Municipal Bonds ¶ 9.

Contracts for providing sewers, streets, and like facilities, see ante § 118.

Contracts for private water service from public water works, see Waters, VI.

Rights in property devoted to public supply and public ownership and operation, see ante §§ 108, 109.

¶ 505. Under How. St. § 4191, and under charter provisions authorizing the city council of Manistee to light the public grounds within the city, and giving the council control over the placing of telegraph and other poles in or over the streets, the city has power to contract for electric lighting with individuals as well as with corporations.—Citizens' Electric Light & Power Co. v. Sands, 95 Mich. 551.

¶ 506. The provisions of How. St. §§ 2970-2980 authorizing the construction, maintenance and protection of water-works in villages incorporated under the general act, were designed to govern the council's proceedings in purchasing or establishing such works to be owned by the village, and do not preclude the power to lease or purchase from individuals a water supply for protection from fire.—East Jordan Lumber Co. v. Village of East Jordan, 100 Mich. 201.

¶ 507. A city of the fourth class, under Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 26, § 11, authorizing such contracts for a period of time not less than 10 years, has the power, through its common council, to contract with a water company for a supply of water for public uses and purposes for five years, for a stipulated sum per month, payable on bills to be presented monthly to the common council, provided that the amount so contracted for will not bring the aggregate amount of the general taxes in the city for the purpose of defraying the general expenses, etc. (exclusive of taxes for schools and schoolhouse purposes), to exceed in one year 1¼ per cent of the assessed valuation of such city, contrary to chapter 30, § 5 of said act.—Monroe Water Co. v. Heath, 115 Mich. 277.

¶ 508. A village incorporated under the general act (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3) has power to contract with one person exclusively for a supply of water for fire and other purposes, and the contract is not rendered void by the fact that the entire territory incorporated in the village is not, under such contract, to be furnished with water.—Lewick v. Glazier, 116 Mich. 493.

¶ 509. The fact that the council might, in the exercise of power given by Pub. Acts,

No. 215, chap. 26, § 11, to make a contract for not more than 10 years for a water supply, tie up the revenues of the city for 10 years for the benefit of the water fund, to the prejudice of other funds, presents a legislative, not a judicial, question, and does not invalidate the contract.—Monroe Water Co. v. Heath, 115 Mich. 277.

¶ 510. Comp. L. 1897, § 2908, providing that village councils may contract from year to year, or for any period not exceeding 10 years, for gas, electric or other lights, does not give a village power to contract for electric lighting during the existence of a contract already entered into for the same purpose.—Village of Morrice v. Sutton, 139 Mich. 643.

¶ 511. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 186 (Comp. L. 1897, § 3437 et seq.), relating to contracts by cities for public lighting, applies to all cities, but requires conformity to charter provisions where they exist and in the absence of charter provision, the council may contract with whomever it chooses.—Belding Land & Improvement Co. v. City of Belding, 128 Mich. 79.

¶ 512. A city council may contract with individuals for light to be furnished through a corporation to be subsequently organized. —Belding Land & Improvement Co. v. City of Belding, 128 Mich. 79.

¶ 512a. A contract by the city of St. Clair, a fourth class city, for the purchase of electric current, also stipulating that "the city shall furnish, install and maintain suitable transformers and purchase pumps," etc., and requiring it to be done "as soon as possible," is more than a contract for the purchase of electric current to be paid for out of current revenues as supplied; since the carrying out of the contract requires the city to furnish necessary apparatus through which the power can be utilized.—Vossen v. City of St. Clair, 148 Mich. 686.

¶ 512b. The power of a city of the fourth class, expressly given by Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 26, § 11, to make a contract for water supply from year to year or for any term not exceeding ten years, construed with chapter 30, § 5, limiting to 1¼ per cent of the assessed valuation the aggregate amount which the council may raise by general tax for general expenses (exclusive of school taxes) does not require the making of an appropriation for water and the incorporation of it into the budget before the water contract can be let; but merely requires that when the annual charge for water is carried into the budget to meet the obligation of a contract it together with other general charges shall not exceed the limit of the leviable amount.—Monroe Water Co. v. Heath, 115 Mich. 277.

Submission of question to electors, see ante § 115.

Power to issue and sell bonds to raise money, see Municipal Bonds, I.

¶ 513. The existence of the power to borrow money cannot be implied unless it is essential to the exercise of the function under which the municipality is acting.—Farr v. City of Grand Rapids, 112 Mich. 99.

¶ 514. Under How. St. § 2953, providing that a village may borrow, "in anticipation of the collection of special assessments actually made for any local improvement, such sum, not exceeding the assessment, as may be necessary for the prosecution or completion of the improvement," a village may borrow money to pay a contractor for street paving work in advance of collecting assessments, even after completion of the work.—City of Gladstone v. Throop, 71 Fed. 341.

§ 122. Incurring debts and limitations on amount of debts.

Agreements for annual future payments as debts within limitation, see post § 123.

Incurring debts after annual appropriations are made, see post ¶¶ 596-598.

Tax limitations, see post § 137.

Debt limit as limitation on power to contract, see also Public Contracts, I.

¶ 515. The limit of the gross debt of the city of Detroit for strictly municipal purposes is fixed by the charter at two per cent of the assessed valuation, and under the Const. 1909, and the Home Rule Act (Act No. 279, Sess. Laws 1909), it can only be changed by a general revision of the city charter made pursuant to the provisions of the Home Rule Act.—Attorney General ex rel. McRae v. Thompson, 168 Mich. 511.

¶ 516. Under Laws 1871, Act No. 277, and Laws 1873, Act No. 214, relating to a public park for the city of Detroit, it was held that all action of the park commissioners appointed to advise the city with regard to the purchase of lands for a park was provisional up to the time when the common council should order an issue of bonds for such purchase, and that no debt was contracted by the city or legal obligation assumed until affirmative action should be taken by that body upon the report of the commissioners. —People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 517. Municipal corporations cannot avoid restrictions upon the amount of indebtedness they may incur by purchasing property for public purposes subject to liens.—Ironwood Water Works Co. v. City of Ironwood, 99 Mich. 454.

¶ 518. A city charter empowering the common council to purchase the pipes, stock, etc., of certain water companies, and to pay the purchase-price by bonding the city, subject to a provision in the charter that the total indebtedness of the city shall not exceed five per cent of the assessed valuation, does not authorize such purchase subject to a mortgage, which, if treated as a debt of the city, increases the indebtedness beyond the charter limit.—Ironwood Water Works Co. v. City of Ironwood, 99 Mich. 454.

¶ 519. Charter of Alpena, § 27 (Local Acts of 1871, No. 249), prohibiting issue by city of any evidence of indebtedness except as provided in sections 9, 14, 50 and 85, does not, when construed with section 14 (which gives council power to regulate times and manner of working upon city streets, and to provide for grading, etc., of sidewalks), exclude council from making contracts for current year so long as it keeps within amount of fund actually provided in annual budget.—City of Alpena v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 550.

¶ 520. Detroit charter (compiler's section 188) provides that "the proceeds of each special assessment levied for the grading or paving of any street or alley shall become part of the street-paving fund, and be credited therein to the amount of the specific improvement for which the assessment was made: Provided, that the common council shall not, in any one year, enter into contracts for the grading and paving of streets, alleys, and public places, the cost of which will exceed in the aggregate $200,000, except upon the petition of the holders of the larger portion of the real estate directly abutting upon the portions of the street or alley proposed to be improved." Held, that said section relates to such paving as might be done upon the petition of abutting owners; that the charter contains no provision for repaving upon petition of abutting owners or others; that, in view of the language used, and of the limitations contained in other sections upon the power of the council to raise money by general taxation for other paving, the limitation in section 188 must be held to be for the benefit of persons liable to special assessment, and to refer to contracts for paving, the cost of which is to be made by such special assessment.—Goodwillie v. City of Detroit, 103 Mich. 283.

¶ 522. The school system of the City of Detroit was created by separate enactments under the article of the Constitution relating to education. The act relating to free schools in Detroit (Laws 1869, No. 233), as amended, provides that the said city should be considered one school district under the direction and regulation of the board of education. Votes cast by members of the board are deposited in separate ballot boxes from those used for other city officials. The school inspectors, mayor, controller, and recorder of the city, who are declared to be ex officio school inspectors with a right to a seat at the meetings of the board, but no power to vote, are a body corporate entitled "The Board of Education of the City of Detroit." Said board has full control over the school funds and authority to apply for and receive all moneys appropriated for primary schools and the Detroit Library. An elaborate provision is made for the control and management of the school system with respect to matters peculiarly affecting said system. Said board is to furnish the common council each year an estimate of financial needs, and so much of the estimate as the council and board of estimates approve is to be levied and collected, "in addition to all other taxes authorized by law to be assessed in said city." School taxes are to be put upon the roll of the city in a separate column distinct from other city taxes. Every resolution or proceeding of the board of education whereby any liability or debt may be created is, before it takes effect, to be approved by the mayor of Detroit. The Detroit Charter, c. 11, § 7, provides that the gross debt of the city after deducting the means in the sinking fund of the city and not including the water debt, shall never exceed two per cent of the assessed valuation. The title of the charter of the city of Detroit gives no notice that the educational system is involved. Held, the school bonds and library bonds of the city of Detroit are not included in the two per cent limit of indebtedness specified in said charter.—Attorney General ex rel. McRae v. Thompson, 168 Mich. 511.

§ 123. ——Agreements to pay future sums from future revenues.

As applied to contract for water rentals payable annually, see also ante ¶¶ 507, 509.

¶ 523. Where a city charter prohibits the creation of liabilities in any one year exceeding the amount to be raised by tax, and provides that payments on a city contract shall be made from sums raised by tax for the year for which such contract is made, the execution of a contract creating future responsibility for annual current expenses will be enjoined at the instance of tax payers.—Putnam v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 416.

¶ 524. A city charter (Local L. 1877, p 565) provided that the common council should not have power "to contract debts, incur liabilities, or make expenditures in any one year which shall exceed the revenue for the same year, unless first authorized so to do by a majority vote of the tax payers." Without such authority a contract was made to supply the city with water for thirty years, at a certain annual rental which did not exceed the average annual levy for previous years, but the aggregate of which did exceed one year's revenue. Held, that the whole contract obligation was a liability to the full extent of the thirty years' limit; that the contract was void, and that there could be no recovery for water furnished under it. —Niles Water Works v. City of Niles, 59 Mich. 311.

¶ 525. The common council of a village incorporated under the general statute cannot, under How. St. § 2957, which provides that "no loans shall be made by the council, or by its authority, in any year, exceeding the amounts prescribed" by the act, anticipate the revenues of succeeding years by contracting for the purchase of water works appliances upon terms of credit that make the price payable beyond the current fiscal year.—Trump Mfg. Co. v. Village of Buchanan, 116 Mich. 113.

¶ 526. If a water works contract offends How. St. § 2957, in that it anticipates the revenues of succeeding years by contracting on credit against them, it cannot be presumed, in order to sustain such a contract, that the council intended to raise the amount during the current year, and to set it aside to meet the payment when due.—Trump Mfg. Co. v. Village of Buchanan, 116 Mich. 113.

¶ 527. Where a village council is authorized by statute (How. St. § 2973) to raise and expend in any one year one-half of one per cent of the assessed valuation in making repairs or alterations upon water works previously constructed, provided such sum is included in the one and one-fourth per cent limitation upon the amount which the council can raise by general tax, it seems that it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence, that the general fund if sufficient in amount has not been otherwise appropriated, and that an indebtedness for water works appliances is payable out of the general fund, and is therefore valid.—Trump Mfg. Co. v. Village of Buchanan, 116 Mich. 113.

¶ 528. A city charter limiting the authority of the council in respect to incurring indebtedness has no application to a contract for future services to be paid for as rendered, as that is not an incurring of indebtedness. —Ludington Water Supply Co. v. City of Ludington, 119 Mich. 480.

¶ 529. A charter limitation on tax levies to meet expenses does not inhibit a contract between a city and a water supply company which was not in excess of the powers of the council in relation to expenditures, and did not prohibit the incurring of such a liability as would from time to time accrue from the performance of the contract on the part of the water company, the aggregate of which would exceed the fixed limit on the tax levy existing at the time of making the contract. —Ludington Water Supply Co. v. City of Ludington, 119 Mich. 480.

XII. TORTS AND CRIMES.

[Note. Since the liability of natural persons for torts to municipalities will depend on ordinary principles of tort, the cases, if any exist, will be found in the topics devoted to a treatment of the specific torts, e. g., the liability for injuring highways and bridges is treated in Highways, XI, and in Bridges, IV. The same is true of crimes injurious to municipalities, for which see Crimes, II.]

For the general law of torts, see specific topics treating of the particular torts, e. g., Conversion; Trespass; Nuisances; Negligence.

Presumptions respecting public authorization of act constituting nuisance, see Nuisances, I.

Power of municipality to define offenses and procedure to punish them, see ante IX, E.

§ 124. Tort liability in general.

Acts of governmental character, see post §§ 125, 126.

Responsibility for acts of officers and employees, see post §§ 189, 190.

Liabilities of separate and independent boards, see post § 133.

For acts of independent contractor on public work, see Independent Contractors ¶ 4.

Obstruction of streets incident to conduct of public market, see ante ¶ 452.

Necessity and sufficiency of presentment and notice of claim for damages for tort, see post § 148 et seq.

¶ 530. Cities may be liable for positive mischief produced by the active misconduct of the municipality itself, and this independently of the fact that the city had or had not, a private or proprietary, as distinguished from a mere public interest in the doing of the act or performing the work which occasioned the injury.—Alberts v. City of Muskegon, 146 Mich. 210.

¶ 531. Inasmuch as at common law a city was not liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of municipal agents employed on public works, a city is not liable in damages for injuries caused by fire from sparks emitted by a steam roller employed by the city in the repair of its streets.—Alberts v. City of Muskegon, 146 Mich. 210.

Liability of municipality for injury to children playing in public places other than on streets and sidewalks, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 624-628.

Liability for injuries to children from attractive nuisances, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 167-181.

Liability of municipality for illness caused by stagnant or impure water permitted to collect in street, alley or other public way, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 522-526.

Liability for injury to or death of volunteer attempting to adjust lights used for street lighting, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 1063-1071.

Liability of municipal corporation for injuries caused by electric wires of company operating under franchise, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 611-623.
Liability of city for negligent operation of automobile used by public library, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 40, 45.
Liability of municipal corporations for injuries or damage by mob violence, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 285-296.
Liability of municipality for maritime tort, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 795-800.

§ 125. Injuries done in exercise or by neglect of governmental functions.

Rules governing city in proprietary capacity, see ante § 74.
What are proprietary and what governmental acts and functions, see ante § 74.
Liability for defects in adopted plans, see post § 126.
Injuries in and about public buildings, see post § 127.
Injuries by street improvements and changes, see post § 130.
Change of grade damages, see post § 130.
Raising grade of bridge approach pursuant to contract, see also post ¶ 559.
Construction of sewer for production of income, see post ¶ 564.
Proper remedy to prevent improper governmental act, see post § 134.
Nonliability for negligence of health officers in permitting person to carry disease, see Health ¶ 29.
Nonliability for mistreatment of prisoners in Detroit House of Correction, see also Prisons ¶ 6.

¶ 532. Legislative power is governmental and discretionary, and no action as for a tort can be based upon any exercise of it unless such exercise would itself be tortious if the act of a natural person.—Burford v. City of Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98.

¶ 533. Municipal corporations, under their charters and ordinances, do not become insurers of the property within their limits from destruction by reason of the neglect or refusal of their officers and agents to enforce their ordinances.—Hines v. City of Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278.

¶ 534. A city which has by ordinance established fire limits and prohibited the erection of wooden buildings therein does not, by failing to enforce the same, become liable to a property owner for loss to his building caused by fire originating in a contiguous building erected, with full notice to the city, within those limits in violation of the ordinance.—Hines v. City of Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278.

¶ 535. Damage from a city's failure in duties of a political nature, such as establishing or enforcing due regulations to protect and preserve right of passage in its streets, cannot be recovered.—Henkel v. City of Detroit, 49 Mich. 249.

¶ 536. A city, by designating a particular street for coasting, does not render itself liable for an injury inflicted by coasters upon a person passing in the street.—Burford v. City of Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98.

¶ 537. In the absence of a statute imposing liability a city is not liable for wrongful death of a workman caused by contagious disease contracted while working on a building on real estate set aside for an isolation hospital; such duties are clearly imposed on the city as a governmental function by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4410 to 4467.—Nicholson v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 246.

¶ 538. The fact that a city is the absolute owner of a large tract of land used for an isolation hospital does not alter the rule of nonliability unless imposed by statute for injuries caused in the exercise of governmental function.—Nicholson v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 246.

¶ 539. The fact that a governmental function of caring for cases of contagious diseases is imposed upon the health officers of the city by statute rather than upon the city itself does not avoid the rule of nonliability for injuries caused through the exercise of a governmental function.—Nicholson v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 246.

¶ 540. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2821 and 2822, delegating to the village council the powers and authority conferred upon boards of health by the general laws and authorizing the council to appoint a local board of health makes it the exercise of a governmental power ascribable to the state rather than a corporate function for the council to raise the level of an adjoining lake upon the recommendation of the local board of health and excuses the municipality from liability for misfeasance or nonfeasance.—Murray v. Village of Grass Lake, 125 Mich. 2.

¶ 541. A municipal corporation in furnishing electric light to its citizens for remuneration is not performing a governmental agency, but is liable for injuries caused by its negligence in failing to keep its electric wires reasonably safe.—Hodgins v. Bay City, 156 Mich. 687.

¶ 542. The providing of a water supply by a city to consumers, as authorized by Pub. Acts 1875, No. 62, ch. 11, § 1, as amended by Pub. Acts 1879, No. 245, is a function of government requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion, and carries with it no liability for negligence in its exercise.—United States v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 137 Fed. 258.

Liability of city for injuries growing out of ball games and other amusements permitted in public places, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 662-665.

§ 126. ——Defects in adopted plans.

Plans for drainage, see also post § 131, ¶ 565 et seq.

Trespass or injury directly due to plan, see post ¶¶ 552, 553.

¶ 543. A municipal corporation cannot be held liable in damages for an injury resulting from the defective plan of a public work, such plan being the exercise of legislative authority.—City of Pontiac v. Carter, 32 Mich. 164; City of Detroit v. Beckman, 34 Mich. 125; City of Lansing v. Toolan, 37 Mich. 152; Toolan v. City of Lansing, 38 Mich. 315.

¶ 544. The rule of nonliability for defective plans applies, no matter how dangerous such plan may be, in the absence of evidence that further action in respect to it was contemplated at the time of the injury. —Toolan v. City of Lansing, 38 Mich. 315.

¶ 545. Where a city under the permissive, not mandatory, provisions of its charter erects a market building, it is not exercising a governmental function and is bound to the same degree of care in plans and construction as a private corporation or individual would be, and is liable for negligence to the same extent.—Barron v. City of Detroit, 94 Mich. 601.

Liability at common law for injury to person on sidewalk or street resulting from plan of construction, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 212-234.

§ 127. Injuries in or about public buildings.

Liability for injuries from condition of school buildings, see Schools, VII.

¶ 546. The government of the Detroit house of correction having been put under the control of a board of inspectors, and the common council having no voice in its internal management or in the election of any officers but the superintendent, whose powers and duties are all fixed by statute, the city cannot be regarded as custodian of the prison, or as jailer and guardian of the prisoners; the officers are not city agents, and the city has no means of directing or of checking their actions, and therefore is not responsible for their misconduct towards the prisoners.—Detroit v. Laughna, 34 Mich. 402.

Liability of municipal corporation for injury sustained in or near city building or court house, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 37-51.

Liability of municipality for injuries growing out of negligent maintenance of fire station, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 884-887.

§ 128. Negligence.

Neglect in governmental character or capacity, see ante § 125.

Responsibility for acts of officers and employees, see post § 190.

Necessity and sufficiency of presentment and notice of claims, see post § 148 et seq.

[Note. Negligence in operation of public utilities in a proprietary capacity, where the case involves nothing but the law governing the operation of similar properties by private persons, has been treated in specific topics, such as Electricity; Waters; Master and Servant, III.]

Liability for injuries in highways due to acts of third persons, see Highways §§ 253-255.

Liability for defects in highway caused by public contractor, see Highways § 254.

Abutting owner's liability over to city for injuries from highways, see Highways § 263.

Injuries sustained on defective bridge, see Bridges § 9; Highways, XII.

Immunity of Bay County Bridge Commission from liability for negligent operation of bridge, see Bridges § 4.

Tort liability of municipal corporation for failure to maintain wires with proper degree of care when furnishing electric light, see Electricity ¶¶ 10, 11.

¶ 546a. The liability of a municipal corporation for negligence has never been held to exist without proof of knowledge of the defect and notice of the defect which cause the injury complained of, or of facts from which notice may be reasonably inferred, has always been held essential to liability.—Campbell v. City of Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655.

¶ 547. A city which, under authority from the state, grants to an electric railway company a franchise, and the use of the streets for its trolley poles, is not liable for the flooding of premises abutting the street, occasioned by the company's negligence in obstructing a gutter while engaged in the construction of its road.—Tatman v. City of Benton Harbor, 115 Mich. 695.

construction of the wire by the city. Held, an instruction sufficiently protected defendant on this point which stated that if the defect arose after the original construction, the defendant was not liable unless the defect had existed for such a time as to enable defendant to discover it by reasonable diligence in inspection.—Hodgins v. Bay City, 136 Mich. 687.

¶ 549. Where third persons have been given the right to construct a dam, a village which secures for itself and inhabitants the right to use the structure itself as a way, and pays the owners of the dam a consideration for building a highway supported by the dam as a part of the way, is not by such fact rendered liable for an injury caused by the giving way of the dam.—Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. Village of Morley, 166 Mich. 66.

¶ 550. Although a city should see that the construction of street-railway tracks does not necessarily interfere with or endanger other uses of its streets, it does not insure street-car passengers against defects in the street-car system itself not accessory to highway travel. So held, where a passenger standing upon one of the side boards of a street-car came in contact with one of the trolley poles placed in the gutter outside of the way intended for travel, and was injured; it appearing that the city did not fix or direct the precise location of the tracks or of the trolley poles or determine the width of the cars.—Kennedy v. City of Lansing, 99 Mich. 518.

Liability of city for injury by electric shock while using telephone, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 684-685.

Liability of municipal corporation for negligent injury or damage caused by condition of waterworks system in street, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 664-678.

Liability of municipal corporation for injuries on toll bridges, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 128-136.

Application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in actions against city, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 45, 46.

§ 129. Trespass or direct injury to property.

Responsibility of city for acts of officers, see post § 189.

Trespass based on ratification of officers' act, see post ¶ 837.

¶ 551. A municipal corporation is liable to an action for an invasion of private property unlawfully and forcibly taken for a way under directions of the corporate board of trustees and corporate officers.—Sheldon v. Village of Kalamazoo, 24 Mich. 383.

¶ 552. When the plan adopted by a municipality in constructing a public improvement (gutter) must necessarily cause an injury to private property equivalent to some appropriation of the enjoyment thereof (surface water easement) to which the owner is entitled, the municipality is liable.—Morley v. Village of Buchanan, 124 Mich. 128.

¶ 553. Municipal corporations are not generally held liable, under the common law, for injuries to individuals arising from defective plans of construction of public works or failing to keep the same in repair, but where the injury is the result of the direct act or trespass of the municipality, it is liable, no matter whether acting in a public or private capacity.—Ferris v. Board of Education of Detroit, 122 Mich. 315.

§ 130. Injuries due to street improvements and changes.

Liability of city for alteration of street grades in separating grades at railroads, see Highways § 121.

¶ 554. A city is not liable for the injury to adjacent property caused by a change lawfully made by the proper authorities in the grade of a public street.—City of Pontiac v. Carter, 32 Mich. 164.

¶ 555. A municipal corporation is not liable as for misfeasance for the legislative action of the common council in widening a street so as to bring within its limits an existing nuisance.—McCutcheon v. Village of Homer, 43 Mich. 483.

¶ 556. A city is liable for damage done to an individual by its raising the grade of a street so as to set back the water in the gutter in front of his property and cause it to overflow his premises.—Rice v. City of Flint, 67 Mich. 401.

¶ 557. A village acting under the general incorporation act, Comp. L. 1897, chap. 87, is liable in damages for cutting down and removing shade trees from a street without previous notice to the abutting owner.—Stretch v. Village of Cassopolis, 125 Mich. 167.

¶ 558. A municipality owning and maintaining a waterworks system was not liable to a landowner for damages for the freezing of her service pipes connecting with the city mains, caused by the lowering of the grade of the street; since in changing the grades of its streets a municipality exercises a legislative power, and since such municipality can enter into no contract which would bargain away such power.—Miller v. City of Kalamazoo, 140 Mich. 494.

¶ 559. Where a city has caused a bridge to be erected at a grade above the street level so that approaches were necessary, and the city was not and in fact did not suppose it was proceeding in the exercise of any charter power in its erection; but the bridge was erected and the necessity therefor created because of an ordinance in form of a contract between the city and private parties, the city is liable to an owner of adjoining property for any injuries resulting to his property arising from the construction.—Ransom v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 143 Mich. 661.

§ 131. Injuries from sewers and drains.

Necessity of presentment or notice of claim, see post ¶ 639.
General law of nuisances, see Nuisances.
Tort liability for diversion or pollution of waters to injury of riparian owners, see Waters, V.

¶ 560. A city is not liable for damages arising from the insufficiency or defective construction of a public sewer, where such damages result directly to the party injured from his use of it for his private convenience.—Dermont v. City of Detroit, 4 Mich. 435.

¶ 561. A city which creates a nuisance, e. g., by digging ditches whereby the surplus water of the city is thrown back upon plaintiff's land, is prima facie liable for its continuance.—Pennoyer v. City of Saginaw, 8 Mich. 534.

¶ 562. A city is liable for an injury done to plaintiff's house by such a cutting of a sewer by the city authorities as to cause large quantities of water, which would otherwise not have flowed there, to collect and be thrown upon his premises.—Ashley v. City of Port Huron, 35 Mich. 296.

¶ 563. A city is liable for the damages resulting if it so negligently and improperly constructs a public sewer outlet above grade that the water therein is set back and discharged upon plaintiff's premises through a sewer connection which he properly made and maintained.—Defer v. City of Detroit, 67 Mich. 346.

¶ 564. A city, in the construction of a public sewer, from which, under its charter, it may derive an income, is engaged in the prosecution of a private municipal enterprise, and not in the exercise of a governmental function, and is liable for its negligence in the manner of doing the work.—Ostrander v. City of Lansing, 111 Mich. 693.

¶ 565. A city is bound to use due caution in establishing a system of drainage; and if, through its negligence in not providing reasonably efficient means to carry off the water that it should reasonably expect to accumulate by reason of its gutters, water is collected and cast upon premises which otherwise would not have been invaded, the city is liable for the resulting damages.—Seaman v. City of Marshall, 116 Mich. 327.

¶ 566. A declaration, in an action against a city, which alleges the ownership by the city of gutters and sewers, its duty to keep them open and clear, and not to permit them to become dammed, or the flow of the water through them to be impeded in any way, and charges that the city negligently permitted and allowed to remain in the gutters and sewers of a certain street divers impediments, by reason of which, and of the improper construction of said gutters and sewers, the water became dammed up until it overflowed the gutter, and ran down upon and injured plaintiff's property,—is sufficient to sustain a verdict for negligence in not removing obstructions, or in constructing a sewer inadequate for the exigencies of ordinary floods.—Seaman v. City of Marshall, 116 Mich. 327.

¶ 568. A city is not liable for damages caused by the overflow of a creek into which its drainage and storm sewers empty, due to the obstruction of the bed of the creek by one who owned both banks and the bed of the stream and built a warehouse over the creek, where the building itself did not interfere with the flow of the stream and the city had no rights or duties in the stream except for drainage purposes.—A. L. Lakey Co. v. City of Kalamazoo, 138 Mich. 644.

Liability for injury or damage to property caused by defective sewer, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 124-144.

§ 132. Conversion by municipality.

Use of paving materials left in street as conversion by city, see also Conversion ¶ 62.

¶ 569. A city is liable for appropriating material not incorporated in a pavement for which it has contracted.—City of Detroit v. Michigan Paving Co., 36 Mich. 336.

¶ 570. It is a conversion for the city to use paving materials torn up by a street railway in repairing the street according to its obligation to repair, which materials the railway company might have rightfully used in relaying the pavement.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Ry., 134 Mich. 11.

§ 133. Liability of boards or departments of municipality.

¶ 571. A paving contractor, who after paving a street under contract with a city, was required to make repairs on account of depressions, was not entitled to recover the cost of such repairs from the Board of Water Commissioners, on the ground that the depressions were caused by the neglect of such board to properly fill and settle a trench in which it had laid a water pipe prior to the time of the laying of such pavement by the contractor; such act of the board having been done in performance of a duty owing to the public and not having been a wrong perpetrated upon any contractor who might subsequently make a contract to pave the street.—Grant v. Board of Water Com'rs of Detroit, 122 Mich. 694.

§ 134. Remedies for torts.

¶ 572. A city council, in passing and enforcing an ordinance which interferes with the rights of the proprietor in a private sewer constructed by authority of the council in the public streets, is in the exercise of its governmental functions, and hence the city is not liable to such person in an action at law for the damages sustained by reason of such action, the proper remedy being a proceeding to restrain an unlawful interference with vested rights.—Stevens v. City of Muskegon, 111 Mich. 72.

¶ 573. The erection of a building to be used for the installation and operation of an electric lighting plant by a village upon a public street is an improper use of the street, and will be enjoined at the instance of an adjoining landowner, and where since the bill had been filed the building had been completed the village may be required to remove it.—McIlhinny v. Village of Trenton, 148 Mich. 380.

§ 135. Crimes and penalties.

[Note. Crimes against municipalities, as well as other crimes, are treated in Crimes. The general law of penalties and penal actions is treated in Penalties. The power of the municipality to legislate on matters of police and public welfare is treated ante IX, and the construction of penal ordinances ante VI.]

Prosecutions for violating municipal ordinances, see post XVI, B.

XIII. TAXES AND REVENUES, MANAGEMENT OF SAME, AND APPROPRIATIONS.

§ 136. In general; power and duty to raise money or lay taxes.

Amount to be levied and limitations on levies, see post § 137.

Requisites and sufficiency of the levy, see post § 139.

Allotment and separation of levies, see post § 140.

Estimates, budgets, and appropriations, see post § 141.

Funds and objects of funds and keeping and custody, see post § 142.

Purposes and proper objects of expenditure, see post § 144.

Following and recovering funds and remedies for diversion, see post §§ 145, 146.

Power to borrow money, see ante § 121.

Debt making limitations, see ante §§ 122, 123.

Power of council in general to act without approval of electors, see ante § 81.

Ratification of invalid vote by later action, see ante § 67.

Effect of annexation to bring annexed property subject to taxation, see ante § 9.

Power to impose licenses for regulation or for revenue, see ante IX, C.

Reasonableness of licensing regulations as affected by purpose of regulation or revenue, see ante § 58.

Charter power to impose license as excluding power to tax, see also ante ¶ 373.

General taxing powers and limitations, levying taxes and assessments, collection thereof, and accountings for tax moneys, see Taxes; Local Improvements.

Collection of and accounting for taxes with county and state, see Taxes, X.

Sale of lands for taxes, see Taxes, XI, XII.

Mandamus to compel levy of taxes and making of assessments, see Mandamus § 87.

Selling bonds of city, see Municipal Bonds § 8 et seq.

¶ 574. The several municipal corporations have no inherent power of taxation, but take only so much as the state sees fit to allow, and under such restrictions as the legislature may impose.—People ex rel. Detroit & H. R. Co. v. Salem Township Board, 20 Mich. 452.

¶ 575. Under the charter of the City of Detroit, c. 7, § 59, and c. 10, § 2, it appears that the common council has no power to tax property unless by the laws of the state it is taxable for state purposes.—Union Trust Co. v. Common Council of Detroit, 170 Mich. 692.

¶ 576. A city council is limited by the grant of power given by the charter as to the purposes for which it may lawfully apportion taxes to be raised and expend the money of the municipality received from taxes or other sources.—Niles Bryant School of Piano Tuning v. Bailey, 161 Mich. 193.

¶ 577. Contracting an indebtedness of $30,000 for the purchase of a city hall site is not an ordinary municipal expense.—Niles Bryant School of Piano Tuning v. Bailey, 161 Mich. 193.

¶ 577a. Tax imposed on a municipality solely must not only be for a public purpose, but must be for a purpose of local interest.—People ex rel. Detroit & H. R. Co. v. Salem Township Board, 20 Mich. 452.

¶ 577b. A municipal body authorized to raise money by tax cannot raise it for the purposes or uses of others, but must apply it to public uses under its own control or care.—Attorney General v. Bay County Sup'rs, 34 Mich. 47.

§ 137. Amount to be levied; limitations.

Limitations on creation of debts in excess of amount levied, see ante §§ 122, 123.

Power of amendment and change of debt limit in freeholders' charters, see ante ¶ 62.

Limitations on purposes of expenditures, see post § 144.
Adding judgments against city to next tax levy, see post § 138.
Limitations on amount of bonds to be issued, see Municipal Bonds § 2.

¶ 578. In general, the discretion of the common council in determining what taxes ought to be levied for city purposes should not be interfered with except for the most imperative reasons.—People ex rel. Board of Water Com'rs v. East Saginaw Common Council, 33 Mich. 164.

¶ 579. The levy of a municipal tax exceeding the aggregate amount limited by the charter for a single year is illegal, and cannot be sustained.—Wattles v. City of Lapeer, 40 Mich. 624.

¶ 580. Inasmuch as the charter of Detroit empowered the common council to make an annual assessment of one per cent on all taxable city property for certain purposes, a higher assessment was void as to the excess.—Connors v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 128.

¶ 581. The city council is only an agency to represent the people of the municipality, and the legislature has seen fit to give them what is deemed ample power to raise money year by year for the need of each year, and no more. When they desire to make larger outlays, or to burden the future revenues of the city, it is left to the parties who are more directly interested to determine how far this shall be done.—Niles Water Works v. City of Niles, 59 Mich. 311.

¶ 582. The word "raised," as used in a city charter which provides that the amount that may be voted or raised in any one year under provisions for the levy and collection of taxes and the borrowing of moneys shall not exceed a certain percentage of the assessed valuation, means "raised by taxation."—Schneewind v. City of Niles, 103 Mich. 301.

¶ 583. Charter of the city of Niles, § 30 (Local Acts of 1893, No. 414) limits the amount of taxes which the council is authorized to levy and collect in any one year to defray the expenses of the city to one and one-half per cent of the valuation of the real and personal property within the limits of the city, and, after authorizing the voting by the freeholders of the city of an additional sum by way of tax or loan, provides that the amount that may be voted or raised in any year under the provisions of the section shall not exceed two per cent of the assessed valuation of the property in the city, as shown by the last preceding tax roll made therein. Held, that the aggregate of the loan authorized by the freeholders and the amount ordered to be assessed by the council in any one year cannot exceed said two per cent.—Schneewind v. City of Niles, 108 Mich. 301.

¶ 584. Sections 2852-2857, Comp. L. 1897, provide for the taxation of villages for different purposes, prescribing a limit of taxation in each case. Section 2873 provides that should any greater sum be needed than can be raised by the foregoing provisions, it may be raised by tax or loan if authorized by a two-thirds vote, and prescribes a limit of two per cent of the assessed valuation for the amount to be raised in any one year. Held, that the limit in section 2873 applies only to the purposes expressed in that section.—Wightman v. Village of Tecumseh, 157 Mich. 326.

§ 138. Addition of judgments to levy.

¶ 585. Under How. St. § 8218, the assessment of a judgment rendered against a city need not be authorized by the city council or the board of supervisors; it is the duty of the city supervisors to apportion the amount among the wards within a reasonable time after receiving the transcript thereof, and to assess it as a part of the city tax upon the next tax-roll.—Shippy v. Mason, 90 Mich. 45.

¶ 586. How. St. § 8218, providing for the payment of judgments against municipalities by the assessment of such judgments upon the taxable property, is not repealed, so far as the city of North Muskegon is concerned, by the charter amendment of 1897 (Local Acts 1897, No. 354, chap. 11, § 9), which provides that the council may issue bonds to pay judgments that the city is unable to pay by reason of the limitation of its power of taxation.—Hammond v. Place, 116 Mich. 628.

¶ 587. Under How. St. § 8218, which provides for the assessment upon a municipality's taxable property of judgments against the municipality, and for the adding of the amount thereof to other municipal taxes, it is no defense that such assessment will increase taxation above the rate allowed by the charter.—Hammond v. Place, 116 Mich. 628.

§ 139. Requisites and sufficiency of the levy.

Allotting and separating levies for different funds and purposes, see post § 140.
Making levies in general, see Taxes, VII.

¶ 588. Where a city charter requires the council to determine "the amount necessary" to be raised by tax for a certain purpose, it does not mean that the council must determine that "it is necessary" to raise a certain amount for such purpose.—Fay v. Wood, 65 Mich. 390.

¶ 589. Where a city charter (Charter of Muskegon, 1871, § 66) prescribed that the common council should, on or before the first day of June in each year, determine the amount necessary to be raised for highway purposes, the council does not lose jurisdiction to act by not acting within the prescribed time, where the law contemplates no hearing with reference to the amount to be raised.—Fay v. Wood, 65 Mich. 390.

§ 140. Allotment and separation of levies.
Separation of funds, see post § 142.

¶ 590. Where a city charter (Local Acts 1875, No. 298, § 57) requires the common council to determine by resolution the amount necessary to be raised by tax for city purposes during the year, and also that necessary to be raised for the payment of the public debt of the city, and the interest thereon, a failure to make such determination for each purpose, the resolution having fixed a gross sum for both, avoids the tax levy.—Fay v. Wood, 65 Mich. 390.

¶ 591. Where a resolution was adopted that a certain sum be raised for the purpose of defraying the contingent expenses of the city one year, and was silent as to interest on its public debt, the whole sum named was for the contingent fund, and the council's failure or neglect to raise any money for the interest fund would not invalidate the tax, though the charter required both to be determined.—Fay v. Wood, 65 Mich. 390.

¶ 592. The city charter of Muskegon (Local Acts of 1875, No. 298, § 57) requires that the common council apportion the amount to be raised by taxation among the several wards according to valuations on the equalized assessment rolls. Held, that as the data for the apportionment were absolutely fixed by the equalization of the rolls, so that the act of apportionment was simply a mathematical calculation, the requirement was directory merely, and that if the correct amount was assessed by each supervisor though not specified in the resolution no one would be injuriously affected, and the tax would not be invalidated.—Fay v. Wood, 65 Mich. 390.

¶ 593. A designation by the common council of the amount of tax to be raised in a village under How. St. §§ 2923-2925, by a fixed percentage, without specifying the exact amount to be raised for each fund, is sufficient.—Boyce v. Peterson, 84 Mich. 490.

§ 141. Estimates, budgets, and appropriations.
Inclusion of water charges, see also post ¶ 600.
Obligation of council to appropriate money for expense of charter commission, see ante § 19, ¶ 70.
Ordinance, resolution or motion as mode of making appropriation, see ante § 30, ¶ 119.
Vote required by councils in passage of appropriation revenue, or tax bills, see ante § 38.
Construction of resolution approving estimates but referring same to board of estimates, see also ante ¶ 203.
Effect of action of board of estimates on amounts of official salaries, see post § 197.
Making appropriation for salaries as ordinance fixing salary, see post § 197.
Limit on appropriation as preventing recovery by officer for overtime pay, see post ¶ 902.
Preliminary estimate of cost as basis for public contract, see Public Contracts, II.
Appropriations to meet cost of local improvements, see Local Improvements, II.

¶ 594. Under Laws 1873, Act No. 331, which requires the board of education to lay before the common council an annual estimate of expenditures for the year, which amount shall not be less than four dollars per child, and if the estimate exceeds five dollars the council may approve or disapprove of such excess, or any part thereof, the council could reject illegal items even though the estimate was within the five-dollar limit.—Board of Education of Detroit v. Common Council of Detroit, 80 Mich. 548.

¶ 595. The action of a city council in drawing a warrant on a fund to make payment of a certain indebtedness is not an appropriation of money for such indebtedness within the meaning of the requirements of the city charter.—Niles Bryant School of Piano Tuning v. Bailey, 161 Mich. 193.

¶ 596. Provisions of a city charter stating that after the passage of the annual appropriation bill no further sums shall be appropriated nor further liability be incurred, do not apply to the purchase of voting machines where their purchase is specially authorized by statute (Act No. 76, Pub. Acts 1895, and Act No. 217 of the Pub. Acts of 1905), the contracts for the purchase of the same having been made in conformity with the provisions of such statutes.—Darling v. City of Manistee, 166 Mich. 35.

¶ 597. Where a city under the authority of Act No. 76, Pub. Acts 1895, and Act No. 217, Pub. Acts 1905, contracts for the purchase of voting machines, provisions for payment, including appropriations therefor, if there is no fund available, are to be made after, and not before the purchase.—Darling v. City of Manistee, 166 Mich. 35.

¶ 598. Where a city charter contains provisions forbidding the appropriation of money after the date for the annual appropriation, these provisions are repealed in cases where they conflict with Act No. 279, Pub. Acts 1909, § 19, which commands the common council to appropriate money to meet the expenses of a charter commission.—Attorney General v. Mayor & Common Council, City of Adrian, 164 Mich. 143.

§ 142. Funds and custody and objects thereof.
Necessity of prior appropriation, see ante § 141.

Use of city funds or property for providing county or state buildings, see ante § 103.
Disposal of fines for violations of ordinances, see post § 231.
Allotment of levies to corresponding funds, see ante § 140.
Market receipts as fund pledged for payment of market bonds, see also ante ¶¶ 453, 454.
Presumption as to existence of necessary fund to support employment of officers, see ante ¶ 313.
Presumption as to fund charged for water appropriation, see also ante ¶ 527.
Setting off claim against funds, see post § 143.

Deposit and protection of public money, see Banking §§ 24, 25.
Right to interest on public deposits consisting in part of money to be accounted for to city, see Counties § 40.
Transfer of funds to successor in office, see Officers, VI, A.
Provision of sinking funds to meet bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 21.
Creation of sinking fund against bonds for erection of public utility, see Municipal Bonds § 21.
Sufficiency of description on face of bond as "refunding bond" to identify proper fund, see Municipal Bonds ¶ 60.
Checks or other security held as collateral to public contract, see Public Contracts, VII.
Indorsee of deposit check from municipal treasurer as taker with notice of want of authority, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII, A.
Collection, accounting and paying over money realized from taxes, see Taxes, X.

¶ 599. Taxes and bonds for schools and educational purposes are not for city or municipal purposes.—Attorney General ex rel. McRae v. Thompson, 168 Mich. 511.

¶ 600. Where the common council of a city of the fourth class has exercised its right to contract for a supply of water for a period not exceeding 10 years, at a stipulated sum per month, payable monthly, the required amount must be raised annually for the purposes of that fund, and be included in the annual budget.—Monroe Water Co. v. Heath, 115 Mich. 277.

¶ 601. Under a contract purporting to bind a village as a corporation for a water supply for protection from fire, and in that form approved by the common council, payment should, under How. St. § 2923, be made out of the "general fund" constituted by the moneys raised by general tax.—East Jordan Lumber Co. v. Village of East Jordan, 100 Mich. 201.

¶ 602. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3310, and under a charter which requires that all moneys loaned or appropriated for the purposes of any particular fund shall be paid in and credited to such fund and shall be applied to the purposes for which such moneys were received, money raised by the sale of bonds authorized to install new boiler and pumps in the city's waterworks cannot be expended by the city's council, with the affirmative vote of the mayor, to enable the city to purchase electrical power to operate its waterworks system.—Vossen v. City of St. Clair, 148 Mich. 686.

¶ 603. A city charter conferred authority to assess and levy taxes for general street improvements, for ordinary municipal expenses, and for paying debts. It provided also that no money should be drawn from the treasury without a previous appropriation specifying the purpose. By ordinance the council created various funds and denominated one of them the "General Fund," and apportioned taxes thereto. This was made up of money received from taxes and from fines, penalties, and forfeitures. Held, no payment of money from this fund could be lawfully made to discharge a contract for the purchase of land for a city hall site.—Niles Bryant School of Piano Tuning v. Bailey, 161 Mich. 193.

¶ 604. Where a city contracted to buy lands for a park with a view to inducing a third person to construct a hotel, and floated park bonds for the purpose of carrying out such contract, transfer to the general fund of the proceeds of the bonds, without complying with the provisions of the purchase, is a wrongful diversion of the funds, and in contemplation of law leaves them in the park fund subject to use for the fulfillment of the contract.—McArthur v. City of Cheboygan, 156 Mich. 152.

¶ 605. The action of a city council in drawing a warrant on a fund to make a certain payment does not raise the presumption that there is sufficient money in the fund lawfully subject to be used for such payment.—Niles Bryant School of Piano Tuning v. Bailey, 161 Mich. 193.

¶ 606. As section 222 of the Detroit Charter empowering the expenditure for entertainments of a sum not exceeding $2,000, to be raised by taxation, was the only grant of power to expend anything for that purpose, the discretionary power given by section 207, to credit moneys not received for the purpose of any particular fund to such fund as the common council might direct, had no application.—Black v. Common Council of Detroit, 119 Mich. 571.

¶ 607. It is to be presumed that the city charter, in providing that fine moneys shall be paid into the city treasury, designs that the subsequent disposition of them shall be in accordance with the constitutional provision, which requires payment into the county for a library fund.—People ex rel. Wayne County Treasurer v. Detroit City Controller, 18 Mich. 445.

§ 143. Set-off of claims on different funds.

¶ 608. Whatever obstacles there may be in the way of setting off a claim, payable out of a special fund, against one due the general fund, where there are no funds in the special fund to meet it, the claim may be set off where there is money to meet it, and where nothing is needed but a single transfer on the corporation's books.—City of Eaton Rapids v. Houpt, 63 Mich. 371.

§ 144. Limitations on and purposes of expenditures.

Restriction of funds to proper objects, see ante § 142.

Right to follow and recover funds paid to improper persons or objects, see post § 145.

Purposes for which contracts may be made which involve expense, see also ante § 112 et seq.

¶ 609. When the charter prescribes the limit of fiscal action it must be assumed to permit all reasonable and proper expenditures within those limits.—Torrent v. Muskegon Common Council, 47 Mich. 115.

¶ 610. A city contracted to pay over to a private corporation certain insurance money which the city had received for the loss of one of its buildings by fire. Said corporation agreed to give the city an interest in the new building to be erected proportionate to said sum of money, which interest was to be relinquished by the city if the corporation spent a specified sum of money each year for labor. Held, the agreement was void as being an attempt to use public moneys in furtherance of a private enterprise.—McManus v. City of Petoskey, 164 Mich. 390.

¶ 611. A resolution of the Common Council of the City of Detroit, appropriating and placing at the disposal of the mayor a certain sum to investigate the street-railway question of the city, and directing the city controller to pay any bills presented and audited by the mayor out of such appropriation, is unauthorized by the city charter and void.—Attorney General ex rel. Maguire v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 157 Mich. 615. (Brooke, Hooker and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 613. Ordinance 230-A of the Detroit City Council, purporting to fix the compensation of the officers, clerks, and employees of the Detroit Museum of Art, is void, since such institution is a private corporation, and the payment of such salaries would constitute the use of public funds for a private purpose, in violation of the Constitution of 1908, art. X, § 12.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

§ 145. Right to follow and recover public funds.

Remedies for misuse or diversion, see post § 146.

Right to recover payment made by mistake, see Payment, VI.

¶ 613a. On repaying funds borrowed from the county treasurer the borrower is no longer liable to the county, since the treasurer is the proper custodian and no one is obliged to do more than put them in his hands.—Perley v. County of Muskegon, 32 Mich. 132.

¶ 613b. If one who received public money from the treasurer with a dishonest understanding could in any way be made liable to the county, it would be by bill in equity or action on the case and not in assumpsit for money had and received; and is it questionable how far the county would be damnified if the treasurer's sureties were responsible. —Perley v. County of Muskegon, 32 Mich. 132.

¶ 614. A village has no power to give a bonus for the construction of an electric light plant and a flour mill to be constructed by private parties, and money paid for such purpose may be recovered in an action for money had and received.—Village of Morrice v. Sutton, 139 Mich. 643.

¶ 615. Although the moneys deposited by the treasurer of a city board of fire and water commissioners in a bank, constituted a trust fund, only such amount as could be traced was subjected to the claim of the board, to the exclusion of the general creditors.—Board of Fire & Water Com'rs of Marquette v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655.

¶ 615a. Where a city board sought to impress a trust upon moneys deposited by its treasurer in his bank, and it could be said justly that a certain amount of the cash received for the board found its way to the general cash fund of the bank within a certain period, and where the court found an amount exceeding that sum was in the bank when the assignees took it, the court presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary that it was the trust fund that remained.—Board of Fire & Water Com'rs of Marquette v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655.

¶ 616. Equity has jurisdiction to determine the rights of parties in a proceeding by a city against assignees for the benefit of creditors of a banker with whom the city had agreed to deposit funds in return for a percentage, and against certain other banks with whom such banker had entered into an agreement regarding such fund, the death of the party to the city's agreement having terminated it; and the court had also jurisdiction to direct the completion of the trust which arose as to such other banks, in favor of the city.—City of Marquette v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 413.

§ 146. Remedies for misuse or diversion of funds.

See also ante ¶ 616, post ¶ 914.

Right to follow and recover funds from taker, see ante § 145.

Actions by and against municipality, see post XVI, A.

Noninterference by courts with municipal discretion, see ante § 34.

Propriety of injunctions and proper person to sue, see Injunctions, II, III.

Injunctive or other relief against issuance of illegal or defective bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 19.

Liability to bona fide holder of bond where proceeds were diverted from legal or intended purpose, see Municipal Bonds § 15.

Implied contract in favor of city to repay illegally disbursed funds, see Public Contracts, V.

¶ 617. Where, under the provision of a city charter, a contractor is only payable out of a particular fund, the city will be liable to him if that sum is transferred to another fund or is misappropriated by the common council.—Chaffee v. Granger, 6 Mich. 51; City of Lansing v. Van Gorder, 24 Mich. 456.

¶ 618. The attorney general cannot maintain information in chancery to make city officers repay moneys unlawfully taken from city treasury.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 107 Mich. 92.

¶ 619. An information filed by the attorney general at the instance of a taxpayer of a city set out the acts of the common council and board of estimates in providing for a tax levy and for bond issues, and asked that they be determined to be valid, or if any illegality be found to direct the correction thereof. It further asked that the mayor and corporation counsel be enjoined from proclaiming the illegality of either the levy or the bond issues. The information did not point out that the mayor or corporation counsel had any official duty to perform in connection with said levy or bond issues, nor was any municipal officer or body charged with any breach of official duty. Held, the court had no jurisdiction to entertain such an information.—Attorney General ex rel. McRae v. Thompson, 167 Mich. 507.

¶ 620. A taxpayer has a right to ask chancery to restrain a threatened misuse of a city fund, in two classes of cases, viz. (1) where his interest in the fund or threatened damage to his property interest by its misuse amounts to one hundred dollars; and, (2) where he has land worth one hundred dollars which is threatened with sale, or liable to a lien, for a tax, in consequence of the proposed misuse.—McManus v. City of Petoskey, 164 Mich. 390.

¶ 621. A taxpayer has a right to ask chancery to restrain a threatened misuse of a city fund already in hand, where the inevitable result of such misuse will be that an equal amount must be raised by a tax which would otherwise have been avoided.—McManus v. City of Petoskey, 164 Mich. 390.

¶ 622. A taxpayer is not estopped from enjoining a proposed illegal expenditure of public moneys by the fact that he made no attempt to restrain a previous expenditure for the same purpose.—Savidge v. Village of Spring Lake, 112 Mich. 91.

¶ 623. Actual notice or knowledge of an intended expenditure by a city for entertainment purposes was necessary to take away the right of a citizen and taxpayer to object thereto on the score of laches, and action within 4 days after knowledge of the proceedings to expend the fund in question was not laches.—Black v. Common Council of Detroit, 119 Mich. 571.

¶ 624. Complainants, residents and taxpayers of defendant village, brought a bill to compel the defendant village to cancel certain contracts had by it with defendant corporation relative to pumping water and supplying light. Held, upon omission of complainants to prove, as required by section 435, Comp. L. 1897, that they were financially affected by the alleged grievance to the extent of more than one hundred dollars, the bill should be dismissed.—Kimmerle v. Village of Cassopolis, 160 Mich. 90.

XIV. CLAIMS AND DEMANDS, PRESENTMENT, AUDIT, AND WARRANTS.

§ 147. In general; proper claims and charges against municipality.

Expenses of prosecutions for violations of ordinances, see post ¶ 935.

Expenses of pursuing and arresting or keeping prisoners as county or city charge, see also Counties §§ 32, 35.

Liability for health department expenses as between city or village and other department of government, see Health § 11 et seq.

Disability of council to revive barred tort claim by calling claimant and witnesses, see Limitations ¶ 330.

Assignment of claim for military bounty, see Bounties § 3.

Presentment of claim and notice of claim, see post §§ 148-154.
Verification of claim, see post § 155.
Waiver of notice or defects in claim, see post § 156.
Evidence respecting presentment and notice, see post § 157.
Audit and hearing, see post § 158.
Compromises and settlements of claims, see post § 159.
Orders and warrants for payment, see post § 160.
Remedies to enforce claims, see post § 161.

¶ 625. A personal claim of a city attorney for services rendered in mandamus to compel the council to pay a certain claim for which the members of the council were personally liable, made at the request of such members of the council is not a valid claim against the city.—Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637.

¶ 626. The provision of a city charter requiring presentation of claims for injuries caused by negligence, within 3 months, was one of limitation and not merely the requiring of a notice as a condition precedent to bringing suit, and the city officers had no authority by consenting to consider a claim absolutely barred, to revive it.—Van Auken v. City of Adrian, 135 Mich. 534.

§ 148. Necessity of presentment of claim or notice of injury.

[Note. In some statutes notice was requisite only in the case of claims for injuries from defective highways. The cases under such statutes are treated in Highways § 266 et seq. Such claims are now covered by the provisions of Comp. L. 1915, § 4591, expressly declaring a purpose to make the law "uniform throughout the state" and to repeal all local and special laws on the subject.]
Notice as prerequisite to action, see post § 149.
Time for presentment or notice, see post §§ 150, 151.
Delivery or service of notice, see post § 152.
Requisites and sufficiency of claim or notice, see post §§ 153-155.
Pleading failure to present claim, see post § 213.
Applicability to department of education of provision for presentment and notice of claim, see Schools, IV.
Statutory notices of claim for injuries suffered from defective highways, see Highways § 266 et seq.
Effect of limitation statute to repeal statute providing for making claim for injuries from defective streets, see also Limitations ¶ 79.
Amendment of pleading to set up proper claim and notice, see Pleading, VI.

¶ 627. A statute requiring notice to the city of a claim for personal injuries is in derogation of common right and should receive a reasonably strict construction.—Oesterreich v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 415.

¶ 628. A charter provision that all claims for damages against the city growing out of the negligence or default of the city, or of any officer or employee thereof, shall be presented to the common council within six months after the claim shall arise, applies to claims for personal injuries, notwithstanding a further provision that no claim shall be allowed unless it exhibits in detail all the items making up the amount claimed, and the true date of each.—Davidson v. City of Muskegon, 111 Mich. 454.

¶ 629. Infants, in the absence of any saving clause exempting them, are bound by a statutory provision limiting the time within which a claim for damages for personal injuries against a city must be presented to the common council.—Davidson v. Muskegon, 111 Mich. 454.

¶ 630. Under the charter of the City of Marshall, chap. 17, § 5, forbidding suits against the city on any account or claim until the same shall have been presented to the council, the presentation of the claim by the claimant was a sufficient compliance with such provision, and the assignee of the claim was not also required to present it.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

¶ 631. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, reincorporating villages and among other things providing for notices of claims for personal injuries, for failure to give such notice as a defense to any action for injuries, for the presentation of such claim to the council for allowance, but saving all rights and liabilities of the former corporation and all pending actions, and providing that any new remedies should be deemed cumulative, is to be construed as prospective in operation of causes of action for injuries.—Atherton v. Village of Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241.

¶ 632. As an action against a village for injuries received from a defective sidewalk prior to the taking effect of Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, which reincorporated thereunder all previously incorporated villages, may, under the saving provisions of chapter 14, section 8, be presented under the former law, the injured person's failure to present his claim to the council for allowance, as required by chapter 5, section 7, and to give notice to the village clerk, within 60 days after the injury occurred, of his intention to hold the village liable for the damages sustained (chapter 7, section 7), will not, in such case, defeat a recovery, where no such provisions were contained in the law under which the defendant village was previously incorporated.—Atherton v. Village of Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241.

¶ 633. A village is not liable for a personal injury caused by a defective sidewalk where the claim required by Pub. Acts 1895,

No. 8, chap. 5, § 7, was not presented to the common council, althought notice of the time and place of the injury was served on the village clerk or his deputy as required by chapter 7, § 7.—Selden v. Village of St. Johns, 114 Mich. 698.

¶ 634. Local Acts 1895, No. 463 (Detroit City Charter, § 46) limiting the time for actions to be begun against the city for negligent injuries, providing that no action shall be brought "unless notice shall be given in writing within three months" from the time of injury, and further providing further that "this section shall not bar a suit * * * for which there is now a lawful cause of action" if suit for such be brought within six months after the act becomes effective, has no application to a claim then pending before the council but not yet a subsisting cause of action because under the former provision of the charter (Detroit Charter, chap. 5, § 17) a reasonable time after presentment and opportunity to pass on it had not elapsed.—Springer v. City of Detroit, 118 Mich. 69.

Provision of statute or municipal charter as to notice of injury as requiring notice from injured servant of municipal corporation, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 44-45.

Incapacity of injured person as excuse for noncompliance with requirement of statute or charter as to notice of injury as condition to recovery from municipal corporation, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 390-405.

Physical incapacity of injured person as excusing notice or claim to city for damages, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 450-466.

Infancy of person injured as excusing failure to give notice of injury to municipal corporations, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 279-285.

Notice of claim for injury caused by defect in or obstruction on sidewalk or crosswalk, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 240, 241.

Notice to municipal corporation of accident or injury sustained from fall of billboard, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 965-967.

§ 149. ——Notice and presentment as prerequisite to action.

Sufficiency of claim or notice to satisfy the statutes, see post §§ 153, 154.

Necessity of presentment anew by assignee of claim, see ante ¶ 630.

Waiver of notice or claim or of objections for defects therein, see post § 156.

Time to sue and limitations of actions by and against municipality, see post § 206.

¶ 635. Recovery cannot be had on a claim against the city of Detroit unless it has been first presented to the common council for audit and allowance as required by the city charter.—City of Detroit v. Michigan Paving Co., 38 Mich. 358.

¶ 636. The charter of Lansing provides that no claim can be prosecuted against the city that has not previously been presented to the common council with an affidavit in support of it. (Local L. 1875, p. 168.) Held, that this applies to a claim against the city to have a tax refunded that has been paid under protest.—Mead v. City of Lansing, 56 Mich. 601.

¶ 637. Presentation to the council of a city incorporated under How. St., ch. 80, of a verified claim of money paid under protest for taxes assessed against the claimant is under How. St. § 2528, a condition precedent to suit for recovery of money so paid.—Crittenden v. City of Mt. Clemens, 86 Mich. 220.

¶ 638. A claim need not be presented to the common council before suing the city of Adrian for negligent personal injury.—Lay v. City of Adrian, 75 Mich. 438.

¶ 639. A city charter provision making the failure to present in verified form, for allowance, accounts, claims or contracts against the city, a defense to any action against such city upon such account, claim or contract, had no application to an action ex delicto for the flooding of premises with filth from the clogging of a sewer.—Pollard v. City of Cadillac, 133 Mich. 503.

Validity of statute or section of municipal charter requiring notice of injury as condition to recovery from municipal corporation, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 437-443.

Validity of requirement as to statement of residence in notice of injury as condition to municipal liability, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 38-43.

Statutory liability of municipality for defective streets and the question of notice as a condition precedent to the right of recovery for personal injuries, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 969-983.

§ 150. Time for presentment or notice.

Reasonableness of time for consideration of presented claim, see post § 151.

Affidavit filed after claim, see also post ¶ 666.

Evidence, jury questions, and instructions as to time of presentment or service, see post § 157.

¶ 640. Where a charter provision that "all claims for damages against the city * * * shall be presented to the common council within six months after such claim shall arise," does not exempt infants from its operation, one who was injured because of a defective sidewalk during infancy cannot claim that the six months did not begin to run until she came of age.—Davidson v. City of Muskegon, 111 Mich. 454.

¶ 641. Since by Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 8, § 20, a claim against a city of the fourth class for a personal injury must be made within sixty days from the time of the injury, and must be "accompanied" by certification or verification, an affidavit served after the sixty days as a verification of a claim previously filed is of no effect.—Griswold v. City of Ludington, 116 Mich. 401.

¶ 642. Under the charter of the village of Highland Park, chap. VIII, § 6, relating to the serving of a notice of personal injuries, within 60 days after an accident on the village and § 5, providing that it shall be a defense in an action for personal injuries that a verified claim has not been presented to the council for allowance, one suffering injuries may serve an unverified notice of injuries on the village at any time within 60 days after the injury and may present a separate verified claim after the expiration of the 60-day period.—Barkley v. Village of Highland Park, 199 Mich. 549.

§ 151. Reasonableness of time to pass on claim before suing.

See also post ¶ 904.

Waiver of reasonable or statutory time for consideration, see post § 156.

Construction of findings as to reasonableness of time to act on claims, see Verdicts and Findings, IV.

¶ 643. One who under protest has paid taxes assessed upon his lands cannot maintain an action for the payment of such taxes against a city whose charter provides that it shall be a sufficient defense to any action or proceeding against the city for the collection of any claim that such action or proceeding was begun before the common council had time to pass upon or investigate the claim, where he commenced his action before the next meeting of the council after one at which the claim was presented to it.—Mason v. City of Muskegon, 111 Mich. 687.

¶ 644. Under Detroit City Charter, chap. 5, § 17, requiring claims against the city to be verified and providing action should not be brought on a claim until it should be presented to the city council and a reasonable time for investigation and decision by the council, there is no lawful cause of action until the presentation of such verified claim and a reasonable time for such investigation and decision.—Springer v. City of Detroit, 118 Mich. 69.

¶ 645. "Reasonable time to investigate and pass upon" a claim for injuries presented to the common council of Detroit within Detroit Charter, chap. 5, § 17, providing that no suit should be brought until such time had elapsed, is not exceeded by holding the claim under investigation from November, 1894, to May, 1896, in good faith and for the convenience of the city; though in a smaller town upon a claim susceptible of quicker action a less time might be reasonable than in a large city where the facts were harder to ascertain.—Springer v. City of Detroit, 118 Mich. 69.

¶ 646. Where a suit against a city has not been commenced until about three months after a claim had been presented to and laid upon the table by the common council, a reasonable time has elapsed, and suit will lie.—Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499.

§ 152. Delivery or service of notice or claim.

Evidence, jury questions, and instructions as to service, see post § 157.

Sufficiency of evidence of delivery of notice and receipt of same by corporation counsel, see also Notices.

Sufficiency of commencement of suit by defective notice, see also post § 206.

¶ 647. A requirement that notice of a claim against a city for personal injuries must be served upon the city attorney, is waived where the common council refers the claim to a committee for investigation on the merits and the committee proceeds to so investigate.—Lindley v. City of Detroit, 131 Mich. 8.

¶ 648. The service of notice of personal injury upon the head of the law department of Detroit as required by Local Acts 1895, No. 463, § 46, is not waived by the presence of the assistant corporation counsel at the hearing before the committee on claims without making objection to the proceedings.—Wilton v. City of Detroit, 138 Mich. 67.

§ 153. Requisites and sufficiency of notice or claim.

Necessity for notice or presentment, time for same, and service of notice, see ante §§ 148-152.

Sufficiency of description of injury and damages, see post § 154.

Waiver of defects, see post § 156.

Provisions in statutes or charters as to notice of claim for highway injuries, see Highways §§ 266, 267.

¶ 649. Statutes requiring notice of claims are given a liberal construction, and when by any reasonable construction the notice can be said to be in substantial compliance with the statute, or when the defect was waived by the Council, relief will not be denied.—Pearll v. City of Bay City, 174 Mich. 643.

¶ 650. A charter provision (Local Acts 1885, No. 296, chap. 15, § 2), that no suit shall be maintained against a city on any account or claim until the same shall have been presented to the common council does not apply to actions ex delicto for negligence in care of a bridge.—Snyder v. City of Albion, 113 Mich. 275.

¶ 651. Comp. L. 1897, § 2754, as amended, providing that every account against a village shall exhibit in detail all the items making up the amount claimed and the true date of each, applies only to an account made up of items, and had no application to a claim for damages resulting from personal injuries. —Hunter v. Village of Ithaca, 135 Mich. 281.

¶ 652. Where a city charter (Local Acts 1903, No. 514, § 204) provided for notice of claims of personal injuries, and was subsequently amended by Local Acts 1907, No. 636, § 204, containing a similar provision with somewhat different requirements, a person sustaining an injury prior to such amendment properly filed a notice complying with the act as it then stood, although the amendatory act was passed ten days subsequent to the injury.—Boughner v. Bay City, 156 Mich. 193.

¶ 653. The statute requiring notice of a claim against the city for personal injury to be filed with the city within a period limited, is to be construed liberally in favor of the claimant, a substantial compliance with the statute as to the contents of the notice being sufficient.—Ridgeway v. City of Escanaba, 154 Mich. 68.

¶ 654. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 3081, providing for notice to a municipality before suit is brought for personal injuries, the words "loose plank upon the sidewalk," used in a notice to a city in regard to a sidewalk injury, may be construed as meaning a plank forming a part of a sidewalk which had become loosened.—Brown v. City of Owosso, 126 Mich. 91.

¶ 655. Under Local Acts 1903, No. 514, § 204, relating to notice of claims against a city for personal injuries, it is not necessary for the notice to state the nature of the claim, and in detail the amount of each item making the amount claimed, nor is it necessary to state the particular manner in which the injury occurred, nor its nature and extent, nor the names and addresses of witnesses.—Boughner v. Bay City, 156 Mich. 193.

¶ 656. The intent of the statute requiring the names of claimant's witnesses to be stated in the affidavit is not to exclude all witnesses not so named, but only that claimant shall state frankly all material things known when the affidavit is made; accordingly witnesses subsequently discovered may be called in discretion of the court, where there was no bad faith and where proper precautions against surprise are taken.—Pearll v. City of Bay City, 174 Mich. 643.

¶ 657. A notice to a municipality of personal injuries, resulting from a fall on a defective sidewalk, held to sufficiently state the name of the street where the accident occurred and the extent of the injuries suffered, "so far as then known."—Pearll v. City of Bay City, 174 Mich. 643.

Mistake of date of injury as affecting sufficiency of statutory notice to city of claim for damages, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 599-603.

§ 154. ——Description of injury and damages.

See also ante ¶ 628.

Waiver of defects, see post § 156.

¶ 658. A notice of claim for personal injuries, under Comp. L. 1897, § 3081, sufficiently specific as to containing a reasonably definite statement of the time, place, manner, and extent of the accident and the damages, is sufficient to set the council in motion and relieve the plaintiff from the charge of noncompliance with the law in regard to notice. —Brown v. City of Owosso, 126 Mich. 91.

¶ 660. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3173, requiring notice to be filed of the extent of the personal injury for which damages are claimed of a city, the statute is not satisfied by a notice stating the amount of damage, without setting forth the nature of the injury.—Ridgeway v. City of Escanaba, 154 Mich. 68.

¶ 661. Where the statutory notice to a city of injuries caused by a fall on a defective sidewalk provides that attachments formed after a certain surgical operation were torn loose, that severe and permanent internal injuries were sustained, the extent of which were unknown at the time and that further developments might show other and different injuries, such notice is sufficient to permit the admission of evidence which tends to prove that the internal injuries caused certain adhesions in the locality of the former operation.—Hayes v. City of St. Clair, 173 Mich. 631.

Sufficiency of statutory notice to municipal corporation of time, place, cause and extent of injury on sidewalk or highway, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 1-37.

Sufficiency of notice to municipality of nature and extent of personal injury, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 409-414.

§ 155. Necessity and sufficiency of verification of claim.

Necessity of affidavit supporting presentment, see also ante ¶¶ 636, 639.

Time for service of affidavit, see ante § 150.

Waiver of verification, see post § 156.

Validity of verification of claim before notary who is also concerned as attorney, see Notaries Public.

¶ 662. A charter provision to the effect that no action shall be sustainable upon any claim against the city unless an itemized statement thereof, duly verified, shall have first been presented to the council for allowance, has no application to a claim for personal injuries resulting from a defective highway.—Mackie v. City of West Bay City, 106 Mich. 242.

¶ 663. West Bay City's revised charter (Local Acts 1897, No. 442, ch. 8, § 20), provides that no account, claim, or contract against the city shall be received for audit or allowance unless accompanied by affidavit that the services charged therein have been actually performed, and it is made a sufficient defense to an action against the city for any demand or claim for personal injuries, "that it had never been presented to the council for allowance, or, if such claim is founded on contract, that the same was presented without the affidavit aforesaid." Held, that an affidavit to a claim for personal injuries is not required.—Angell v. City of West Bay City, 117 Mich. 685.

¶ 664. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, ch. 8, § 20 (charter of a city of the fourth class), so far as it provides that "no account or claim or contract shall be received for audit or allowance unless" certified to or verified, does not cover an unliquidated claim for personal injuries in an action ex delicto; but the remaining part of the section makes it "a sufficient defense * * * to any action * * * for the collection of any demand or claim against the city (for personal injury or otherwise)" that it has not been certified to or verified.—Griswold v. City of Ludington, 116 Mich. 401.

¶ 665. Under the charter of the city of Detroit (chap. 5, § 17), which provides that "the common council shall audit and allow all accounts chargeable against the city, but no unliquidated account or claim or contract shall be received for audit or allowance unless it be verified by the affidavit of the person rendering it," and that "it shall be a sufficient bar and answer to any action or proceeding in any court for the collection of any demand or claim against the city that it has never been presented to the common council for audit or allowance, or, if on contract, that it was presented without said affidavit and rejected for that reason," the presentation for audit and allowance of a claim for damages for injuries received by falling upon a defective sidewalk is a condition precedent to bringing suit to recover the same.—Springer v. City of Detroit, 102 Mich. 300.

¶ 666. Section 2754, Comp. L. 1897, provides that no claim against a village for personal injuries shall be valid unless a sworn statement thereof is presented to the council. Section 2775 requires notice of the time, place, manner, and extent of the injuries to be served on the village clerk within sixty days. Plaintiff filed with the village clerk, within the proper time, an unsworn notice which complied with the other provisions of section 2775, and later, within the sixty days, filed a verified statement of the items of damages sustained by her. Held, that there was a substantial compliance with the statutes.—Hawley v. Village of Saranac, 157 Mich. 70.

§ 156. Waiver of notice or claim or of defects therein.

Waiver of service on law officer of city, see also ante § 152.
Disability of law officer to waive service on law department, see post ¶ 809.
Waiver of bar of limitations, see post § 206.
Disability to revive barred claim, see ante ¶ 626.
Evidence, jury questions, and instructions as to waiver, see post § 157.
Waiver of notices or claims for highway injuries, see also Highways § 268.

¶ 667. The requirement of Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, chap. 5, § 7, that claims against a village for damages for injuries shall be verified, held, to be for the benefit of the village which the village may waive. Public policy does not forbid such a waiver.—Wright v. Village of Portland, 118 Mich. 23.

¶ 668. Defects in the statutory notice of personal injuries required to be given to a municipality may be waived by the common council.—Foster v. Village of Bellaire, 127 Mich. 13.

¶ 669. The benefit of Comp. L. 1897, § 3173, requiring notice of a claim against the city for personal injury to be filed with the city, may be waived.—Ridgeway v. City of Escanaba, 154 Mich. 68.

¶ 670. In order to waive the notice of claim against it required by Comp. L. 1897, § 3173, for personal injury, the city must intentionally give up its right to the notice, either by word or act.—Ridgeway v. City of Escanaba, 154 Mich. 68.

¶ 671. A substantial defect in a notice to a city, required by Comp. L. 1897, § 3173, of a claim for personal injury, is not waived where the city does not know of the defect, and has simply appointed a committee to investigate the claim.—Ridgeway v. City of Escanaba, 154 Mich. 68.

¶ 672. Prompt exception to a statutory notice of claim containing merely technical defects should be taken by a city which proposes to rely thereon as a reason for failure to pass on the claim.—Brown v. City of Owosso, 126 Mich. 91.

¶ 672a. An objection that plaintiff in an action against a city for injuries due to a defective sidewalk failed to comply with a provision of the charter requiring all claims to be presented to the common council for allowance is not available as a defense when raised for the first time by motion for a new trial.—Canfield v. City of Jackson, 112 Mich. 120.

¶ 673. Section 2 of the Detroit Charter, Local Acts 1895, prohibiting the bringing of actions for personal injuries against the city unless written notice be given within three months from the time of the injury to the head of the law department or his chief assistant, as to time, place, etc., of the injury, was not waived by the fact that the common council directed plaintiff to appear and produce his witnesses; as there was no evidence that at the time plaintiff was so notified to appear, the common council knew that plaintiff had failed to give such notice.—Holtham v. City of Detroit, 136 Mich. 17.

¶ 674. The receipt by the common council, of a notice relating to a claim for damages against the city for personal injuries, based upon a repealed statute, and reference of such notice to a committee, was not a waiver of the invalidity of the notice.—Chamberlain v. City of Saginaw, 135 Mich. 61.

¶ 675. The provision of a city charter requiring the presentation of claims for injuries caused by negligence, within 3 months, was not waived by the promise of members of the council, as a matter of grace, to investigate a claim and make a recommendation if they thought claimant ought to have something.—Van Auken v. City of Adrian, 135 Mich. 534.

¶ 676. The provision of a city charter requiring the presentation of claims for injuries caused by negligence, within 3 months, were not waived by the action of the council in referring a claim filed after the expiration of the limited period, to the committee on claims and finance; and by the action of that committee in receiving affidavits and making investigation and reporting adversely after a delay of over two months.—Van Auken v. City of Adrian, 135 Mich. 534.

¶ 677. A city charter provided that it should be a sufficient defense to any action or proceeding for the collection of any demand or claim against the city of any description whatever that it had never been presented to the common council for allowance, or that it had been presented without the required affidavit, and rejected for that reason. A personal injury claim was presented to the council, verified before one of the attorneys who afterwards brought suit for the collection of the claim, but was not rejected because thus verified. Held, that it is unnecessary to decide whether the affidavit was within the prohibition of How. St. § 637, which prohibits attorneys from administering oaths in causes in which they may be professionally engaged, as, by not rejecting the claim for that reason, the alleged defect was waived.—Germaine v. City of Muskegon, 105 Mich. 213.

¶ 679. The requirements of a city charter providing that a notice of claim for negligence must be served in writing upon the head of the law department or upon his chief assistant, are not waived by the fact that the person claiming to have been injured by the negligence of the city is given a hearing before a committee of the common council.—Boyle v. City of Detroit, 152 Mich. 248.

¶ 680. A statement that an injured party believes herself entitled to $5,000, in a notice of personal injury to a municipality as required in Comp. L. 1897, § 3081, is sufficient to infer a claim for $5,000 damages where the council received and considered the notice without objection to its form.—Brown v. City of Owosso, 126 Mich. 91.

¶ 681. A notice of a claim against a city for breach of contract to lay out and construct a street is not too indefinite where the relations of the parties are set out at length concluding with a statement of the nature of the damage but failing to state the amount of the damage, where the claim was received and acted upon without objection by the city.—Spier v. City of Kalamazoo, 138 Mich. 652.

¶ 682. A claim which was treated as sufficient in form by a common council although not verified or accompanied by a certificate of a village officer, as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 2754, and which was unanimously allowed, could not be refused recognition by the president on the ground of such informality.—Kriseler v. Le Valley, 122 Mich. 576.

¶ 683. Where claims are presented to a city without being verified as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 2754, and the city charter, and the city hears evidence on the claim without objection and declines payment, the failure to verify the claim is waived.—Moore v. City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 543.

¶ 684. A claimant for personal injuries who disregards an agreement to arbitrate with a village and brings suit cannot claim that such village waived a provision of its charter (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, chap. 5, § 7), requiring the filing of a verified statement, because of the arbitration agreement.—Clark v. Village of Davison, 118 Mich. 420.

§ 157. Evidence, jury questions, and instructions respecting notice and claim.

Evidence to show notice of claim for injuries from highways, see Highways §§ 297, 302.

¶ 685. A provision in a municipal charter that no action shall be brought against the city for any negligent injury unless written notice shall be given within three months from the date of the injury, to the city attorney or his assistant, places the burden of proving such notice upon plaintiff, and proof of delivery to one employed as a messenger in the city attorney's office is insufficient.—McAuliff v. City of Detroit, 150 Mich. 346.

¶ 686. Evidence that a notice of a claim for personal injuries was delivered to a person employed as a messenger in the office of the corporation counsel, and was delivered by him to a captain of the police department, who was assigned to the office of the corporation counsel as a member of its investigating department, is sufficient to require the submission to the jury of the question of whether notice seasonably reached the corporation counsel or his chief assistant, as required by statute.—McAuliff v. City of Detroit, 150 Mich. 346.

¶ 687. Where plaintiff testified that he delivered a notice of injury sustained by reason of the negligence of a city, to the chief clerk in the corporation counsel's office, such evidence is sufficient to render the question of whether the notice reached the corporation counsel one for the jury, although the chief clerk testified that he did not deliver the notice to the corporation counsel, where there was other evidence tending to discredit and contradict him.—Abbott v. City of Detroit, 150 Mich. 245.

¶ 688. Under Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 8, § 20, requiring claims to be verified, where an unverified claim for personal injuries has been presented against a city, the common council, by appointing a committee, holding the claim under advisement until after the time for filing a new and verified claim, and by notifying plaintiff that no damages will be paid, evidences an intent to waive the nonverification that is sufficient to go to the jury.—Griswold v. City of Ludington, 116 Mich. 401.

¶ 689. Whether a village had waived verification of a claim against it for damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff, in an action to recover such damages, is a question for the jury on offered evidence, it being within the power of a village to waive it.—Wright v. Village of Portland, 118 Mich. 23.

¶ 690. The question as to whether verification of claims against a city was waived by the council by accepting the claims without objection, and acting upon them on their merits, is one of fact.—Ludington Water Supply Co. v. City of Ludington, 119 Mich. 490.

¶ 691. As a matter of law a city waives further notice of an injury to plaintiff on an alleged defective sidewalk, where within the statutory 60 days allowed for the presentation of a claim plaintiff's claim is filed with the proper officer, presented to the council, spread on the records and referred to a committee which investigates as ordered by the mayor and reports to the council, and such claim is referred to the city attorney by the mayor with the council's permission and where it does not appear that any suggestion is made to plaintiff that the notice is deficient or that any further statement of claim is required.—Warner v. City of Wyandotte, 175 Mich. 695.

¶ 692. In an action on a contract against a city, the question of whether or not a claim was presented to the city within the time specified by the charter is not raised by a request pointing out defects in the notice and a subsequent request to charge that the claim is barred by the statute of limitations as the latter request refers to the action, in which the defendant had pleaded the statute of limitations as a defense.—Spier v. City of Kalamazoo, 138 Mich. 652.

¶ 693. One who applies for and receives a warrant upon the treasurer of a municipality for the amount allowed him for services, and thereunder accepts payment, is estopped from making further claim for the same services or disputing the settlement so made.—Perry v. Village of Cheboygan, 55 Mich. 250.

¶ 694. A claimant against a city who is present when council audits his claim and by resolution directs an order to be drawn in payment thereof at a specified sum and the recorder directed to draw an order for the amount in full of the account, and who accepts and cashes such order, must be held to have acquiesced in the action of the council in the settlement of his account, is estopped from suing the city on such claim.—Davey v. City of Big Rapids, 85 Mich. 56.

§ 159. Compromises and settlements.

General law of compromises and settlements and releases, see Accord and Satisfaction; Releases.
Compromises of tax claims, see Taxes, VIII.
Settlements of accounts with officers, see post § 195, and see Officers, VI, A.
Estoppel to collect interest on assessments after settlement remitting interest, see Taxes, VIII.

¶ 695. A municipal corporation has power to adjust claims against a taxpayer for special assessments for paving and by the remitting of interest.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 191 Mich. 308.

¶ 696. A court of equity should not, on the application of a taxpayer, interfere with the settlement of a claim against the city by the common council, where the council appear to have acted in good faith, and there could be no serious doubt of the legality of the larger portion of the demand, and the question as to the remainder was at most one of doubtful construction of the contract under which the claim accrued.—Chaffee v. Granger, 6 Mich. 51.

§ 160. Orders and warrants for payment.

¶ 697. Borrowing money in anticipation of special assessments (Comp. L. 1897, § 2872) does not include issuance of a time warrant to a contractor before his money is due as a means of advancing it to him.—Field v. Village of Highland Park, 141 Mich. 69.

¶ 698. The power of a village to borrow money in anticipation of a special assessment under Comp. L. 1897, § 2872, does not sanction issuance of a warrant exceeding the unused balance of the assessment to be collected.—Field v. Village of Highland Park, 141 Mich. 69.

¶ 699. No estoppel arises against a village by reason of having issued a warrant to a transferee in renewal of a balance remaining due on the original warrant given to a paving contractor, where the contract was not properly performed, but the village had taken a bond for future proper performance and had agreed to postponement of it, and where the first warrant was an attempt to advance money to the contractor without legal warrant, and no new consideration passed from the transferee for the renewal.—Field v. Village of Highland Park, 141 Mich. 69.

¶ 700. Where a city issues a paving warrant as an advance payment and relies upon the contractor's promise to complete the pavement in compliance with his contract, the city is not estopped to defend mandamus proceedings to compel payment of the warrant on the ground that the contractor failed to complete his contract as agreed.—Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Village of Highland Park, 156 Mich. 178.

¶ 701. Where a city receives and uses voting machines for two years without objecting thereto and issues a certificate of indebtedness for the purchase price, in an action on the certificate, the city cannot avoid payment thereof on the ground that the machines are defective and are not as warranted.—Cogswell v. City of Escanaba, 176 Mich. 156.

Actions by and against municipality, see post XVI, A.

¶ 702. Assumpsit will not lie against a city upon city orders if the charter provides that no money shall be drawn from the city treasury unless it shall have been previously appropriated to the purpose for which it shall be drawn, and if it also requires all orders to specify the purposes of the payment.—Peterson v. City of Manistee, 36 Mich. 8.

XV. OFFICERS, EMPLOYEES, AND DEPARTMENTS.

School officers and employees and their relation to the municipality, see Schools, III.

Proper officers to officiate in tax matters, see Taxes.

Municipal court judges and officers, see Municipal Courts, I.

¶ 703. It is not necessary that an ordinance be passed for the creation of a board of assessors to lay special assessments according to How. St. 2427, where section 2643 has expressly provided for such a board.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

¶ 704. The action of a village common council in appointing a person as night watchman and deputy marshal, whose duties were to begin at 6:30 p. m. and continue to 5:30 the following morning, was not construed as an attempt to create the office of a night watchman, but rather as intended to designate such person as a deputy marshal under a village ordinance creating the office of deputy marshal.—Kriseler v. LeValley, 122 Mich. 576.

§ 163. Aldermen, councilmen, and supervisors.

Effect on power to conserve public health of failure to create board of health, see ante ¶ 334.

Power of council over offices and officers, see post § 164.

Councils as judges of qualifications and elections, see post § 167.

Power of presiding officer to adjourn councils, see ante § 35.

Contractual powers of councils, see ante § 112 et seq.

Functions of council in levying taxes, see also ante ¶ 581.

City and village representation on board of supervisors, see Counties § 50.

¶ 705. Aldermen are elected by the electors of the wards, and therefore represent the people of the ward in the legislative body of the city.—Chateau v. Jacob, 88 Mich. 170.

¶ 706. A city charter provided for the annual election of one alderman from each ward for a term of two years. For the purpose of reducing the number of aldermen, and at the same time preserving the term of office and the practice of electing but one-half of the aldermen each year, it was provided by amendment that at the next election one alderman should be elected from each even-numbered ward for a term of two years; that in each odd-numbered ward the alderman whose term was unexpired should hold until the end of his term; and that, at the expiration of the term of office of each alderman, his successor should be elected for a term of two years. Held, that the amendment was not invalid as unjustly discriminating against the even-numbered wards, in that aldermen elected therefrom for a term of two years were removed from office after one year's service.—Attorney General v. Cogshall, 107 Mich. 181.

¶ 707. The proviso to Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 31, § 1 (general act for the incorporation of cities of the fourth class), that any incorporated city which shall become reincorporated under the act, having an assessor, "may" retain its present method of assessing property and levying taxes, and that the assessor in office when the act takes effect "shall" remain in office until the expiration of his term, is permissive merely, and cities not availing themselves of the permission are entitled, under chapter 5, section 2, to elect supervisors in the several wards of the city, who, under the provisions of chapter 7, section 26, are to represent their respective wards upon the board of supervisors.—Ostrander v. Gratiot County Sup'rs, 111 Mich. 64.

¶ 708. The council acts as the legislative body of the city, not less when levying special assessment than when imposing the ordinary taxes, and cannot be regarded as an agent of the benefited property owners on the one side and the contractor on the other.—City of Lansing v. Van Gorder, 24 Mich. 456.

§ 164. Power of municipality or councils over offices and officers.

Power and procedure to remove officers, see post § 170 et seq.

Power over salaries, see post § 196 et seq.

Relative powers of boards to appoint or employ subordinates, see post § 180.

Adding to duties of controller, see post ¶ 814.

Investigations by council, see post § 195.

Power to veto ordinance which creates office and also appoints incumbent, see ante ¶ 182.

Ordinance or resolution employing officers or fixing salary as one "appropriating" money, see also ante § 38.

Power of legislature to establish police or fire system, see Constitutional Law § 78.

¶ 709. The term of office of city marshal under the amended charter of Detroit (Sess. L. 1861, pp. 181, 182) was two years; and the common council had no authority to limit it to one year in making the appointment.—Stadler v. City of Detroit, 13 Mich. 346.

¶ 710. Where a city charter, besides specifying certain conditions to be contained in the bond of the city treasurer, declared that such bond might be further conditioned as the common council should prescribe, it was held that, under the pretext of further conditions, the council could not add any provision which would destroy or conflict with any of the charter conditions, and could not substitute a conditional liability where the charter required it to be absolute; that the bond must secure everything mentioned in the charter, and more, if the council required, but no less.—City of Detroit v. Weber, 26 Mich. 284.

§ 165. Eligibility and qualifications.

Determination of qualifications, see post § 166.
Eligibles for civil service appointments, see post § 168.
Eligibility to office and incompatibility of offices disqualifying incumbent to be appointed to other office, see Officers, I, II.
Sufficiency of official bonds, see Officers, VII.
Approval of the bond, see also Officers, VII.

¶ 711. Section 53 of the charter of the City of Lansing, providing that no "member of a city council shall, during the period for which he was elected, be elected or appointed to, or be competent to hold any office or position or receive any employment directly or indirectly connected with the city government," was enacted for the purpose of preventing the holding of two offices by one man at the same time, and the holding by one man of a second office during the period of the term of his first office, and consequently aldermen may succeed themselves or be elected to other city offices.—People ex rel. Brown v. Parsons, 200 Mich. 39.

¶ 712. Where a city incorporated under the Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, and amendments thereto, How., 2nd Ed., § 5442 et seq., exercises the right conferred thereby to determine the qualification of elective officers, and its charter provides that no person shall be eligible as candidate for any elective office unless he is a citizen, such limitation does not apply to the eligibility of an appointive officer.—Coxe v. Carson, 194 Mich. 304.

§ 166. Election or appointment and determination of qualifications.

De facto officers and the de facto doctrine, see Officers.

¶ 713. Permanent appointments for purely municipal purposes can only be made by municipal authority. Whether the appointment by the legislature of a municipal board (Laws 1871, Act No. 494; 3 Sess. L. 1871, p. 273) can be sustained as provisional or initiatory only for the purpose of a primary organization of the board and to put it in full operation, quære; court equally divided.—People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44.

¶ 714. Municipalities have a constitutional right of self-government, and it is an invasion of that right for the state to make appointment of officers to perform functions of a local governmental character.—Davidson v. Hine, 151 Mich. 294.

¶ 715. A board of estimates is not, under article 15, section 14, of the State Constitution, relating to mode of electing or appointing officers, an unconstitutional board because its members are appointed by the common council instead of being elected by the voters of the city.—Bay City Traction & Electric Co. v. Bay City, 155 Mich. 393.

¶ 716. The Home Rule Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, § 3, providing that each city charter shall provide for the election of a mayor, was not intended to restrict the election of the mayor to a popular election and authorizes the election of the mayor by the commission of a city which has adopted a commission form of government.—Kopczynski v. Schriver, 194 Mich. 553.

¶ 717. The word "majority" use in § 10 of art. V of the charter of the City of Cadillac, to the effect that in certain events the candidate receiving at an election a majority of the first and second choice votes cast shall be deemed elected does not mean "plurality," since a contrary intention clearly appears from the further declaration that the word "majority" as used in such section shall mean more than one-half of all votes cast for the office in question.—Garneau v. Commission of City of Cadillac, 182 Mich. 91.

¶ 718. A charter provision authorizing the common council to appoint a certain officer, and to remove him at pleasure, remains in force after the taking effect of an amendment providing for the creation of a municipal board at a specified time in the future, which should have the appointment of such officer, until the provision last mentioned becomes operative.—Grant v. City of Alpena, 107 Mich. 335.

¶ 719. Local Acts 1893, No. 419, entitled an act "supplemental" to Detroit Charter and "to provide for a law department in said city," and providing that the city counselor "shall be appointed by the mayor," etc., necessarily repeals former charter provisions whereby the mayor had only a nominating power to the councils which made the appointment.—Speed v. Detroit Common Council, 97 Mich. 198.

¶ 720. Where a mayor appointed a city attorney on the third Monday of April as required by the old charter of a city, but after the adoption of a commission form of government under a charter which expressly continued in office all old officers until the expiration of their terms or the appointment by the commissioners of their successors, such appointment is a nullity.—North v. City of Battle Creek, 185 Mich. 592.

¶ 721. The provision of the Charter of Detroit, § 114, that all appointments to office by the "board of aldermen" shall be made by a majority vote of the members-elect, does not, in view of the history of that provision, which originally did not contain the quoted words, apply to appointments which, under the charter, are to be made by the mayor "with the consent" of the council, and a confirmation of such an appointment by a majority of a quorum of the council is sufficient.—Randall v. Schweikart, 115 Mich. 386.

¶ 722. Where a city's charter requires all appointments to office to be made upon mayor's nomination concurred in by majority of common council's members elect, mandamus to compel recognition as an officer of one whose nomination was not concurred in by a majority of the council exclusive of his own vote, must be denied.—Tinker v. Board of Public Works of City of Jackson, 97 Mich. 616.

¶ 723. Mandamus was granted to compel the common council of Detroit to consider and act upon nominations made by the mayor, under Laws 1873, Act No. 392 (3 Sess. L. 1873, p. 175), establishing a board of public works for Detroit.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit Common Council, 29 Mich. 108.

¶ 724. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2769, subd. 26, providing that a village council shall have authority to provide for the care and custody of the public property, a village council, upon the discharge of the marshal by the president and their refusal to confirm his appointee, may hire the discharged marshal to look after the fire apparatus of the village and the president will be compelled to sign orders for sums voted to the marshal as compensation for his services in the latter capacity.—Clapp v. Titus, 138 Mich. 41.

¶ 725. The legislature has power to confer upon cities the right to determine qualifications of elected officers.—Coxe v. Carson, 194 Mich. 364.

§ 167. Council as judge of elections and qualifications.

Power of charter commission to judge of member's qualifications, see ante § 19.
Procedure to remove officers, see post § 171.

¶ 726. The charter of Alpena makes the mayor a member of the common council, and constitutes that body the judge of the election and qualification of its own members. Held, that the council's action in determining the mayor's election is final.—People ex rel. Dafoe v. Harshaw, 60 Mich. 200.

¶ 727. Laws 1887, Act No. 293, to preserve evidence of error or fraud in the counting of ballots, etc., in contested elections, does not apply to an election to the office of mayor of a city—Grand Rapids in this case—whose charter provides that the common council shall consist of the mayor and aldermen, and shall be the judges of the election of its own members and determine all contested elections.—Weston v. Kent Probate Judge, 69 Mich. 600.

¶ 728. Grand Rapids charter, title 2, § 20 (Local Acts of 1877, No. 282), which provides that, on the Thursday following a municipal election, the council of the preceding year shall convene, and determine and certify the persons elected to the several offices, must be construed with title 10, section 4, declaring the common council to be the judge of the election and qualification of its own members; and title 2, section 20, does not therefore relate to the office of alderman which is left to the new board.—Hilton v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 112 Mich. 500.

¶ 729. The charter of Muskegon, § 33, makes the common council judges of the election or qualification of its members. Held, that this power expires with the council that admits a member, and a rehearing of the questions cannot be granted by any subsequent council.—Doran v. De Long, 48 Mich. 552.

¶ 730. Where the common council of a city is by charter made the judge of the qualifications of its members, statutory provisions for a recount of votes do not apply to an election for aldermen; and the incoming council is the judge rather than the one in office at the time of the election.—Hilton v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 112 Mich. 500.

¶ 731. A common council has no authority to declare vacant a seat held by one whose title is regular and who disputes the facts which are claimed to make him incompetent; the question whether he has disqualified himself can be tried only by a judicial tribunal. —Doran v. De Long, 48 Mich. 552.

¶ 732. Where the common council is made the final judge as to the election of its members, the supreme court cannot review its decision on the facts.—Alter v. Simpson, 46 Mich. 138.

¶ 733. By §§ 11 and 12 of the nonpartisan charter of the City of Grand Rapids, the common council is made the sole judge of the qualifications of its members.—Sinclair v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 181 Mich. 186.

¶ 734. A contest for the office of mayor is to be determined by the common council; and under §§ 11 and 12 of the nonpartisan charter of the City of Grand Rapids, its decision is final.—Sinclair v. Common Council City of Grand Rapids, 181 Mich. 186.

¶ 735. The provision of § 12 of the so-called nonpartisan clause of the charter of the City of Grand Rapids, that contested elections to municipal offices shall be decided by the council as nearly as may be according to the laws governing contested elections for state officers, is directory merely.—Sinclair v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 181 Mich. 186.

¶ 736. Section 12 of the nonpartisan provision of the charter of the City of Grand Rapids, providing that in contested elections the council shall be governed as nearly as may be by the regulations of the state law pertaining to contested elections for state officers, is to be construed if possible in connection with § 4 of title 10 of the charter declaring the council to be the judge of the qualifications and elections of its members.—Sinclair v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 181 Mich. 186.

¶ 737. A contest of a mayoralty election is to be determined by the incoming council of the City of Grand Rapids under § 4, title 10 of the charter, declaring the common council to be the judge of the qualification and election of its members, and not under §§ 11 and 12 of the nonpartisan provisions of the charter requiring the common council to meet as a board of canvassers, and to declare the result of municipal elections; and that election contests shall be conducted as near as may be according to the state laws governing contested elections for state officers.—Sinclair v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 181 Mich. 186.

¶ 738. Since § 12 of the nonpartisan provision of the charter of the City of Grand Rapids, providing that the city council shall decide all election contests as nearly as may be according to the state law regulating contested elections for state officers, does not expressly repeal, nor is it inconsistent with § 4 of title 10 of the charter, declaring that the council shall be the judge of the qualification and election of its members and to determine contested elections thereof, a contest for the office of mayor is to be heard under the latter section.—Sinclair v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 181 Mich. 186.

§ 168. Civil service system of appointments.

Application of system to employees of boards and departments, see post § 180.
Applicability of civil service rules to Recorder's Court officers in Detroit, see also Municipal Courts ¶ 12.
Reinstatement by civil service board, see post § 173.

¶ 739. The Civil Service Amendment of 1913 to Detroit City Charter repeals or supersedes all special acts relating to appointments and removals in individual departments, although containing no express repealing clause.—Pryzbylowski v. Detroit Board of Poor Commissioners, 188 Mich. 270.

¶ 740. The so-called civil service act adopted by the election of the City of Detroit April 7, 1913, placing all employees of the city under the control of a civil service commission, became operative from the adoption of the act, and was not suspended until the appointment and qualification of the commissioners.—Grobbel v. Detroit Board of Water Com'rs, 181 Mich. 364. (McAlvay, C. J., Ostrander and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

commissioner of public works has made a mistake by appointing a disqualified person to fill a vacancy, and such appointment is not confirmed by the civil service commission, and is subsequently withdrawn, the person heading the list of eligibles is entitled to the office, as, while some action of the appointing power is necessary before a place can be filled, it must be deemed that it was intended to fill the position, and that the appointing power was simply exercised in favor of the wrong person.—Savage v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 144. (Bird, Brooke, and Kuhn, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 169. Recalling or revoking appointments.

¶ 742. Where, as in Local Acts of 1893, No. 419, the exclusive power to appoint a city counsellor is vested in the mayor, such an appointment once duly made and filed is absolute, and the mayor cannot recall it.—Speed v. Common Council of Detroit, 97 Mich. 198, 98 Mich. 360; Attorney General v. Corliss, 98 Mich. 372.

§ 170. Removals.

Under civil service system, see also ante § 168.

¶ 743. Municipal officers are legislative officers, and the power of removal is inherent in municipalities.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

¶ 744. Pub. Acts 1915, No. 149, § 6, does not repeal § 11, tit. 2, of the charter of the City of Grand Rapids authorizing the common council to remove city officers for official misconduct, but simply gives concurrent power to the governor to remove city officers.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

¶ 745. The common council of Port Huron can remove none but city officers.—Tibbals v. Port Huron Board of Education, 39 Mich. 635.

¶ 747. A provision in Detroit's charter, ch. 4, § 19, that "any officer holding office by appointment, unless otherwise provided by law or ordinance, may be removed at any time by the common council, without charges and a trial thereof," does not apply to the city counsellor appointed by the mayor under Local Acts of 1893, No. 419; since such power of removal would be inconsistent with the power of appointment by the mayor for a fixed term.—Speed v. Common Council of Detroit, 97 Mich. 198; Attorney General v. Corliss, 98 Mich. 372.

¶ 748. The power to remove the city counsellor of Detroit for cause is not inherent in the common council, nor is it vested in that body by the charter, nor can it be implied from Local Acts of 1893, No. 419, § 8 (supplemental to the charter), which provides that upon the expiration of the term of office of the city counsellor and the city attorney, or their resignation or removal, such officer shall forthwith, on demand, deliver to his successor in office all deeds, leases, contracts, and other papers and books in his hands belonging to the corporation, or delivered to him by the corporation or any of its officers, and all papers in actions prosecuted or defended by him, or which are pending and undetermined.—Speed v. Common Council of Detroit, 98 Mich. 360.

¶ 749. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2729, providing that a village president may remove any officer appointed by him when he shall deem it to the public interest, the power of removal by the president has reference to officers appointed by him with the consent of the council; as seemingly no power to remove appointed officers was vested elsewhere.—Kriseler v. Le Valley, 122 Mich. 576.

¶ 750. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 109, § 2, providing for the appointment of police matrons and their removal for cause by written order stating the cause does not require such written order of removal where the matron has been appointed "on probation and during the pleasure of" the board of police commissioners.—McNab v. Common Council of Bay City, 125 Mich. 51.

¶ 751. Under Loc. Acts 1901, No. 416, which provides that the police commissioner shall have power to remove and suspend from office for cause and further provides that he may make such removal upon charges preferred touching character or competency, a police officer may be removed for other cause than violation of the rules and regulations of the police department.—Oesterreich v. Fowle, 132 Mich. 9.

¶ 752. A special clerk appointed by the receiver of taxes of the city of Detroit, and confirmed by the common council, pursuant to an ordinance providing that, when assistants shall be required, the receiver shall apply to the council therefor, and such assistants, when appointed, shall receive such compensation as the council shall by resolution prescribe, holds office at the pleasure of the receiver, there being no charter provision vesting in the council the power of removal as to employees so appointed.—Osborn v. Common Council of Detroit, 111 Mich. 362.

¶ 753. Under the Home Rule Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, § 5, subd. (d), How. 2nd Ed., § 5446, providing that no city shall have power to shorten or extend the term of any public official beyond the period for which he was elected or appointed unless he resign or be removed for cause, the amendment of November 14, 1914, to the Detroit city charter which made appointive officers hold office at the will of the mayor could not become effective against any appointive officer unless he resigned.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

Necessity of charges and opportunity to answer them on hearing, see post § 172.

¶ 754. In proceedings for the removal of a park commissioner upon several charges, it is not necessary that the council vote separately upon each charge and specification thereunder, and upon the question of removal; but where, in the return of the council, the officer is found guilty "of the said several charges and specifications as aforesaid," it will be presumed that each alderman who voted for the affirmative upon the resolution passed upon every one of the charges and specifications enumerated in the resolution, and upon the question of removal.—Bolger v. Detroit Common Council, 153 Mich. 540.

¶ 755. Where, after hearing evidence for a number of days upon charges against a park commissioner, of negligence in permitting the execution of defective work by contractors, the council viewed the work as to which neglect was charged, and in rendering their decision returned that "from such personal examination of the work, and from such evidence as said council and the individual members thereof then and there saw, by being present and examining and viewing such work in detail, and which was apparent to said commissioner had he done his duty, the said council was satisfied of the incompetency and unfitness of the officer," it cannot, from such language alone, be held that the common council based its determination upon its own view and not upon the evidence, and that its determination for that reason is void.—Bolger v. Detroit Common Council, 153 Mich. 540.

¶ 756. The provisions of the charter of the city of Grand Rapids, tit. 3, § 11, relative to providing for and regulating the election and appointment of all officers and for their removal from office, and the filling of vacancies, are permissive and directory, and not imperative, and it is unnecessary that the council prescribe rules or regulate by some preadopted method the manner it shall exercise its power for removing an officer from office.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

¶ 757. In a proceeding by the council under the charter of the city of Grand Rapids, Tit. 2, § 11, to remove a city officer for misconduct, while the council is not a court nor the members judicial officers, so as to be bound in a strict sense by the ordinary rules of regularly constituted courts, yet such hearing is judicial in its nature, the body necessarily acts in a quasi judicial capacity, and the procedure must be of a quasi judicial character.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

¶ 758. The mandatory provisions of the Grand Rapids charter, tit. 2, § 11, relative to the removal of a city officer for misconduct are that steps taken in that behalf be recorded in its proceedings, a copy of the charges be served with 10 days' notice of time and place of hearing, opportunity of the accused to make a defense to such charges, and a two-thirds affirmative vote of all aldermen elect.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

¶ 759. Where, in a proceeding by the council under the charter of the city of Grand Rapids, tit. 2, § 11, to remove a city officer from office, written charges have been preferred and notice given to the accused officer, the council, in session as such, at the legally noticed time and place of hearing, with the necessary quorum in attendance, complies with all requirements of the charter in that particular, and may enter upon the hearing, the proceedings of which are to be entered in its records, without any reorganization or special formalities to resolve itself into a court.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

¶ 760. In a proceeding before the common council of the city of Grand Rapids, pursuant to the charter, tit. 2, § 11, to remove a city officer for misconduct there must be an affirmative vote amounting to two-thirds of the members elect, cast by members who participated in all the proceedings and heard all the evidence given by the witnesses who appeared and testified.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

¶ 761. A city officer of the city of Grand Rapids who is under trial before the common council pursuant to the charter, tit. 2, § 11, is not accorded a fair and impartial trial where three of the members of the council indicate prejudice toward him in statements made to the council, before any evidence is taken, in opposing a motion for a delay of the hearing, and the officer's request for more time to prepare his defense is refused and the hearing continued all night without intermission, there being no special circumstances calling for urgent action.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

§ 172. ——Charges and hearing and order thereon.

In proceedings before councils, see also ante § 171.

¶ 762. Under Comp. L. 1897 (Act 109, Pub. Acts 1897), § 3492, providing that a police matron shall hold office until removal for cause, an attempted dismissal without giving previous notice and an opportunity for a hearing is without effect.—Rowell v. City of Battle Creek, 169 Mich. 19.

¶ 763. Where, by the amended charter of the city of Port Huron (Local Acts 1893, No. 392), the police force, which had been under the control of the common council, and the members of which were not subject to removal until charges had been preferred against them, and they afforded an opportunity of being heard in their defense, was placed under the control and management of a commission created by the act, with exclusive power to appoint members of the force, and to suspend or remove policemen under and for such causes as should be fixed by the ordinances and charter of the city and the rules adopted by the commission, it being further provided that the existing police force should continue to hold their offices until their successors should be appointed and qualified, held, that the members of the police force had no fixed tenure of office at the time of the enactment of said statute; that its evident purpose was to confer upon the commission authority to reorganize the force; and that a policeman who received his appointment under the earlier law cannot complain of his removal by the commission for his alleged physical incompetency, on the ground that charges were not preferred against him, and the question of his physical incapacity tried and determined by said commissioners.—Enright v. Duff, 102 Mich. 446.

¶ 764. The requirements of Loc. Acts 1901, No. 416, § 10, that a complaint against a member of the police force must be under oath, is waived where the point is not raised at the hearing and trial is had on the merits.—Oesterreich v. Fowle, 132 Mich. 9.

¶ 765. A charge that a police officer reported himself as sick when in fact he was engaged in such manual labor at home as to show that he was not sick, is more than a charge of absence from duty merely.—Oesterreich v. Fowle, 132 Mich. 9.

¶ 766. A proceeding under the Charter of Detroit (Local Acts 1901, No. 416) for removal of a policeman on charges is in no sense criminal or to be conducted like a criminal proceeding.—Oesterreich v. Fowle, 132 Mich. 9.

¶ 767. Under Detroit Charter of 1893, § 232, providing that the council should have power to remove certain officers for cause, a copy of the charges made, with notice of the time and place of hearing, being first served, the council, at the time assigned for hearing charges preferred against an official, notwithstanding his protest, adjourned such hearing, upon the recommendation of the mayor, until after a certain report, regarding a matter not necessarily involved in such charges, should have been received. Held, that such officer was entitled either to a hearing at that time, or to have a time assigned therefor; and that the indefinite action of the council must be regarded as equivalent to a dismissal of the charges.—Goodfellow v. Common Council of Detroit, 102 Mich. 343.

¶ 768. In determining the cause of dismissal of a police officer pursuant to charges made, the specifications in the complaint and in the order of dismissal must be looked to rather than the general language therein.—Oesterreich v. Fowle, 132 Mich. 9.

¶ 769. A board of police commissioners, authorized by charter to remove policemen in certain cases, will not be compelled to reinstate an officer improperly removed, if such officer is regularly dismissed before proceedings are taken for his reinstatement.—Michelson v. Board of Police Com'rs of Saginaw, 111 Mich. 587.

§ 173. Reinstatement.

Right to pay for time excluded, see post § 201.

Power of council to re-employ marshal after discharge by mayor, see ante ¶ 724.

¶ 770. A board of police commissioners, authorized by charter to remove policemen summarily "or" on conviction of misconduct, cannot, upon acquitting an officer of specific charges preferred against him, adjudge him guilty of another offense not specified, and order his dismissal; and in such case mandamus will lie to compel the officer's reinstatement.—Wilkinson v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of Saginaw, 107 Mich. 394.

¶ 771. The Detroit Civil Service Commission may not reinstate a city employee because no reasons were given for his discharge; it may reinstate only where the employee was removed for reasons other than the good of the service.—Philbrick v. Dust, 178 Mich. 605.

¶ 772. Where a discharged city employee has erroneously appealed to the civil service commission for reinstatement because no reasons were assigned for his discharge, instead of resorting to action, and then has brought mandamus to compel obedience to the decision of the commission whereupon mandamus was allowed, the application will be treated as having been made to the courts in the first instance.—Philbrick v. Dust, 178 Mich. 605.

§ 174. Term and duration of office and holding over.

Power of council to change term, see also ante § 164.
Validity of act changing terms of aldermen and times of election, see ante ¶ 706.
Term and duration of offices in general, see Officers, IV.
Resignations from office, see Officers, V.

¶ 773. Where a charter of a city (Menominee) authorizes the appointment of a street commissioner for a fixed term, it is presumed, in the absence of express authority for removal, that it is intended such officer shall hold until his term expires, unless removed for cause after notice and trial.—Hallgren v. Campbell, 82 Mich. 255.

¶ 774. The city physicians of Grand Rapids are appointed and not elective officers, and are not authorized by the charter to hold over where their successors are not chosen within a fixed time after their terms expire and a vacancy occurs in the office.—Saunders v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 467.

¶ 775. By the charter of Grand Rapids, title 2, § 6, as amended in 1897 (Local Acts 1897, No. 374), the term of office of the building inspector is fixed at one year from the first Monday in May, thus shortening his term; and accordingly it forms an exception within title 12, section 33, of the revised charter, providing that officers elected for a period longer than until the ensuing first Monday in May shall serve out their terms "except as herein otherwise provided."—People v. Van Auden, 116 Mich. 654.

¶ 776. The term of an officer appointed to fill a vacancy in an elective city office under a charter provision that the person so appointed "shall hold only until the first Monday of May next succeeding" ends at that time, whether a successor is chosen or not, and there can be no holding de facto.—Edison v. Almy, 66 Mich. 329.

¶ 777. Under a new charter for the city of Jackson, providing that the city attorney shall hold office for the term of one year from the first Monday in May and providing that the first appointment of city attorney thereunder shall be made on the first Monday in May, 1904, and that the appointment of city attorney before that date shall be made in accordance with the old charter, an appointment made in 1903 for two years as provided by the old charter does not entitle the attorney to the office beyond May, 1904, the date set for an appointment under the new charter.—Attorney General ex rel. Reece v. Shekell, 138 Mich. 287.

¶ 778. Where one act attempts to amend another it may be valid as to some parts although invalid as to others; and Local Acts 1905, No. 392, amendatory of Local Acts 1899, No. 430, an act amending the charter of the city of Battle Creek, attempting to change the judicial system of the city, while invalid as to that part, is valid as to that part which changes the term of office of the mayor, eliminating his compensation, and restricting the continuous holding of office by the same person.—City of Battle Creek v. Barnes, 143 Mich. 400.

¶ 779. Comp. L. 1897, § 2704, governing the Village of Fairview, provides that all appointive officers shall hold office until their successors are qualified and enter upon the duties of their offices. Held, plaintiff officer, his successor having never been named or qualified, was entitled to his office and the salary attached thereto irrespective of the validity of his reappointment.—Otto v. City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 532.

§ 175. Vacancies and vacancy appointments.

Power of council to declare a vacancy in membership, see also ante § 107, ¶ 731.
Effect of loss of residence in city or ward, see post § 176.
Filling vacancies and duration of vacancy appointment on charter commission, see ante § 19.

¶ 780. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2710, providing that if any person appointed to office shall fail to take the oath or to give the required bond, the council may declare the office vacant unless previously thereto the oath shall be taken and the bond given; the office of a village deputy marshal was not vacated by a failure to give the required bond until some action was taken by the council.—Kriseler v. Le Valley, 122 Mich. 576.

¶ 781. Local Acts 1901, No. 284, containing a void provision for an appointment by the governor of a provisional local superintendent of public works for the city of Detroit and the abolition of the local board of public works, is not wholly unconstitutional and invalid because the governor's power of appointment is void; the office is created and the governor's appointee being without authority, a vacancy exists which the mayor has immediate right to fill, the old board holding until then.—Moreland v. Millen, 126 Mich. 381.

¶ 782. The city council of Grand Rapids is not precluded by the charter from filling an office held by its appointment where there is no one holding for a regular term.—Saunders v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 467.

¶ 783. Whether the mayor of Bay City is entitled to fill by appointment a vacancy in the office of alderman is not determined.—Ross v. Barber, 86 Mich. 380.

¶ 784. A special election was held to choose a village trustee to fill a vacancy caused by resignation. Respondent was chosen. The council met and carried motions declaring him elected, and allowing him to qualify and take his seat. Afterwards it was discovered that the special election was void. Section 2711, Comp. L. 1897, gives the council power to fill vacancies in the office of trustee. Held, on quo warranto, that the action of the council amounted to an appointment of respondent under said statute, and he was entitled to hold his seat.—People ex rel. Sutherland v. Ford, 163 Mich. 359.

§ 176. ——Effect of loss of residence or change of boundaries.

¶ 785. The provision of the charter of Bay City that the office of alderman shall become vacant on the incumbent's removal from his ward applies to a removal effected by a legislative change of boundaries as well as to a voluntary removal by the alderman.—Ross v. Barber, 86 Mich. 380.

¶ 786. Cutting off and taking away a portion of the territory of their wards in creating new ones cannot oust the aldermen of their offices if they still reside in the remaining territory.—Stow v. Common Council of City of Grand Rapids, 79 Mich. 595.

¶ 787. Where an act (Local Acts 1891, No. 324) annexing the larger part of a village (Highland Park) to a city provides that taxes for 1891 shall be collected in the annexed territory as if the act had not been passed, the village treasurer who resides in the annexed part is not retained in office for the purpose of collecting the taxes.—Ketcham v. Wagner, 90 Mich. 271.

¶ 788. Village trustees who in consequence of an act detaching territory from the village have ceased to be residents thereof cannot legally participate in a meeting of the village council for the purpose of ordering a special election to fill the vacancies in their offices.—People v. Village of Highland Park, 88 Mich. 653.

¶ 789. Where most of the electors acted on the validity of the notice of an election specially ordered, and elected new officers to fill the vacancies, such election was held valid notwithstanding the participation of such trustees in the council meeting as had lost office by loss of residence on change of boundaries.—People v. Village of Highland Park, 88 Mich. 653.

§ 177. Disqualification of officer.

Disqualification of councilman or alderman by interest, see ante § 41.

Interpretation of charter provisions disabling officers to be interested in contracts with city, see Public Contracts, I, IV.

Invalidity of contract in which city officer is interested, see Public Contracts, IV.

¶ 790. Members of a city council who had omitted to take a bond from a contractor constructing a public building being personally liable for damages to the materialmen, had a direct pecuniary interest in the allowance of a claim and are legally disqualified from voting on such claim presented to them.—Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637.

¶ 791. Under the charter of the city of Jackson, a member of the common council cannot by mandamus compel his recognition as a member of the board of public works, when his petition fails to show his election by a majority of the common council, exclusive of his own vote.—Tinker v. Board of Public Works of City of Jackson, 97 Mich. 616.

§ 178. Substitutes and vice officers during absence or disability.

Validity of city charter provision allowing the calling in of special justice of the peace, see Justices of the Peace ¶ 17.

¶ 792. The charter of Detroit provides that in case of vacancy in the office of mayor or in his being unable to perform his duties by reason of sickness, absence from the city, or other cause, the president of the common council shall be acting mayor vested with the mayor's powers, the temporary absence of the mayor for a day and a half would not authorize the president of the council to approve of a resolution where the mayor had returned and within the time required had returned the resolution with his objections and the next regular meeting of the council did not occur until five days after his return.—City of Detroit v. Moran, 46 Mich. 213.

¶ 793. Under Grand Rapids charter providing for the mayor's making nominations to city offices, subject to confirmation by the common council, and also conferring (title 3, section 2 of revised charter) upon the president of the council the right to "discharge the municipal duties of the mayor during the absence" of the latter, a nomination by the president of the council, made and confirmed during the mayor's absence from the state, is valid.—People v. Van Auden, 116 Mich. 654.

§ 179. Boards and departments and their status and relation to municipality.

Effect of transfer of powers to board as abrogating existing ordinance by council, see ante § 66.

Fire and police departments, see post § 181.

Law department and its officers, see post § 182.

Mode of action by board, see post § 193.

Power to appoint or employ subordinates, see post § 180.

Tort liability of board, see ante § 133.

Proper officer to negotiate for water board, see post ¶ 825.

Right of water superintendent to sue water taker on contract repudiated by board, see ante ¶ 504.

Construction of ordinance and charter respecting power to permit sewer connections, see ante ¶ 204.

Powers of park commissioners over parks and boulevards, see also ante § 31.
Responsibility of water board for negligence of subordinate, see post § 190, ¶ 850.
Salaries and compensations of boards and their subordinates, see post § 196 et seq.
Functions of board of estimates respecting salaries, see post § 197.
Disability of board of public works to change plans and specifications after letting of contract by council, see also Public Contracts, II.
Health boards and officers and clerks, subordinates and employees, see Health §§ 4, 5.
Necessity of approval of bond issue by board of estimates, see Municipal Bonds § 5.
Function of Detroit Board of Public Works to approve plats and street plans, see Dedication §§ 21, 22.
Power of board of public works to vacate plat, see Dedication § 86.
Board of education as separate corporation or agency, see Schools.
Administration of water department, see Waters, VI.
Right and duty of departments to have and furnish free water service, see Waters, VI.
Status of board of poor commissioners in Detroit, see Poor Persons § 13.

¶ 794. The board of estimates of Detroit, being limited in its jurisdiction to the several funds mentioned in the city charter (Local L. 1887, Act No. 488, chap. 8, § 4), and the educational fund not being specified in the charter as among them (Local L. 1889, Act No. 424), has no supervisory power over the board of education funds except over the fund for purchasing lots and erecting buildings, under Laws 1873, Act No. 331.—Board of Education of Detroit v. Common Council of Detroit, 80 Mich. 548.

¶ 795. The board of public works of the city of Ann Arbor is not the governing body of the city, but is a board of limited powers.—Schneider v. City of Ann Arbor, 195 Mich. 599.

§ 180. ——Power to employ or appoint subordinates.

Power and procedure to remove or reinstate, see ante §§ 170-173.
Power to fix salaries, see post § 196 et seq.
Power to make contract to pay for overtime, see post ¶ 900.
Appointments under civil service system, see ante § 168.
Operation and time of taking effect of provision transferring power of appointment to board, see also ante ¶ 718.

¶ 796. By Local Acts 1901, No. 415, giving the commissioner of public works of Detroit power to "supervise the construction, repairing and alteration of all public buildings," and providing that all moneys for such repairs, etc., shall be expended under his supervision and under contracts and specifications prepared by him, and Charter of Detroit 1893, p. 168, § 10, providing that when peculiar skill is required the common council may authorize the commissioner to employ competent supervisors, the duty of making plans and specifications and of supervising the work of making alterations in, and additions to the city hall is imposed upon the commissioner of public works; and the city controller, though authorized by the council, has no authority to contract with architects to do such work.—Moreland v. Common Council of Detroit, 130 Mich. 343.

¶ 797. Under the charter of Ionia, §§ 83, 92, 93, as amended Loc. Acts 1891, No. 246, the board of public works has authority to appoint an engineer and assistant engineer of the city water works without the approval of the common council of the city.—Willsie v. Common Council of Ionia, 137 Mich. 445.

¶ 798. Under Local Acts 1901, No. 415 (charter of the city of Detroit) § 6, providing that the commissioner of public works may appoint such employees of the department as the common council shall create he need not submit the contract of hiring to the common council for its consent or approval, section 8 requiring it not being applicable.—Gadd v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 683.

¶ 799. The fact that the Board of Water Commissioners of the City of Detroit was created by a separate act of the legislature, does not preclude its being with an amendment to the city charter adopted by the electors, placing the employees of all city departments and commissions on a civil service basis.—Grobbel v. Detroit Board of Water Com'rs, 181 Mich. 364. (McAlvay, C. J., Ostrander and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 800. Employees of the Board of Water Commissioners of the City of Detroit came within the Civil Service Act upon it becoming effective, and not upon the subsequent appointment and qualification of the members of the commission.—Grobbel v. Detroit Board of Water Com'rs, 181 Mich. 364. (McAlvay, C. J., Ostrander and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 801. The employees of the Board of Health of the City of Detroit are not subject to the civil service law of the city.—Detroit Civil Service Commission v. Engle, 184 Mich. 269.

¶ 802. Under Local Acts of 1907, No. 720, relative to the appointment of a board of park commissioners and providing that such board shall have power to employ "such superintendents, engineers, clerks, agents, subordinates and laborers as it may deem necessary and fix their compensation" and that the "city engineer of Bay City shall perform the duties of engineer of said board without additional compensation" the board has authority to employ engineers and pay them compensation for their services.—Bloomshield v. City of Bay City, 192 Mich. 488.

§ 181. Fire and police departments and members thereof.

Vote authorizing police department to offer rewards, see ante ¶ 153.
Removals of officers, see ante § 170 et seq.
Fixing amounts of salaries, see post § 197 et seq.
Vacation allowance and pay, see post § 200.
Powers of policemen in making arrests and liability for illegal arrest, see Arrest; Assault, I; False Imprisonment, I.
Territorial limits of powers of policemen, see also Officers, VI, A.
Class legislation affecting fire or police departments, see Constitutional Law § 216.
Detroit Fire Department as membership corporation, see Associations.
Powers of policemen respecting fugitives from justice and extradition, see Extradition ¶ 1.
Liability of city to fireman for injuries from defective streets, see Highways ¶ 902.
Liability of city for injuries caused by firemen operating in streets, see Highways § 228.
Powers of police officers to execute and serve process from Recorder's Court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14653.

¶ 803. A city's fire department is distinctly a matter which concerns the inhabitants of the city as an organized community apart from the people of the state at large, and is peculiarly within the field of municipal activity and local self-government.—Simpson v. Paddock, 195 Mich. 581.

¶ 804. The relation of master and servant does not exist between the city of Detroit and the members of its fire department.—Coots v. City of Detroit, 75 Mich. 628.

¶ 805. A municipality is not responsible for negligent injuries to persons or property committed by members of a fire department while engaged in work pertaining exclusively to the extinguishment of fires.—Brink v. City of Grand Rapids, 144 Mich. 472.

Liability for injury to member of fire department by explosion, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 302-306.

§ 182. Law department and officers.

Holding over term, see ante § 174.
Officers authorized to control litigation and to employ counsel, see post § 187.
Proper prosecutor and assistants in prosecutions for violating ordinances, see post § 225.
Power to appear or intervene for city, see also post ¶ 917.
Rendition of legal services by mayor or other officer, right to compensation, see ¶¶ 892, 893.
Compensation and salary, see post § 196 et seq.
Right to pay during unlawful appointment, see post ¶ 886.
Distinctive duties of city counselor and police justice with respect to collection of city demands, see also Municipal Courts ¶ 28.
Mode of appointment or selection, see ante § 166.
Recall of appointment, see ante ¶ 742.
Power of removal, see ante § 170.
Service of notice of claims on law department or officer, see ante § 152.
Claim of city attorney for defending mandamus against officers as claim against them, see also ante ¶ 625.

¶ 806. Even though a village ordinance may provide that the village attorney shall prosecute and defend all actions which may be brought by or against the corporation or any officer thereof, and who may have incurred any penalty or forfeiture under the charter and ordinances, or by reason of any breach of the conditions of any official bond when directed by the council to do so, such village attorney would not be precluded thereby from appearing against the village authorities to compel them by mandamus to issue and sign an order to pay a claim presented against the village.—Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637.

¶ 807. Local Acts 1895, No. 389, entitled "an act to provide for a law department of the city of Detroit, etc.," must be construed as requiring the corporation counsel of the city to render legal services to the board of education "in or out of court" without other compensation than that provided for in the act itself; and the act is broad enough to include a case where by resolution the board employed the corporation counsel to appear in court in a case against the auditor general wherein the validity of a statute was attacked by a railroad company, and wherein the board was not itself a party and could not be made a party against its own will.—Tarsney v. Board of Education, 147 Mich. 418.

¶ 808. Where a village passes a resolution electing a firm to be attorneys of the village, it must pay for all services performed on litigation in court and out, and also for work done in pursuance of the appointment with the consent and knowledge of the village, but it is not bound to pay in addition to such full compensation a sum for a retainer contracted for without authority by the president of the village.—Moore v. City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 543.

¶ 809. Section 2 of the Detroit Charter, Local Acts 1895, prohibiting the bringing of actions for personal injuries against the city unless written notice be given within three months from the time of the injury to the head of the law department or his chief assistant, as to time, place, etc., of the injury, could not be waived by an assistant to the corporation counsel, even if it could be waived by the officers named in the act, which latter question was not decided.—Holtham v. City of Detroit, 136 Mich. 17.

§ 183. Authority and functions in general and notice of limitations.

As to particular officers, see post § 184.
Ex officio powers and functions, see post § 185.
Power to contract for or to charge municipality, see post § 186.
Power to control or direct litigation or to employ counsel, see post § 187.
Distribution of powers among councils, officers and citizens, see ante § 31.
Delegability of powers, see ante § 32.
Construction of contracts reposing authority in officer as harmonious with statutory limits of his powers, see also ante ¶ 494.
Ratification of unauthorized acts and contracts, see post § 188.
Noninterference by courts with official discretion, see ante § 34.
General duties and obligations of officers, see Officers, VI.
Liability upon bond of officer, see Officers, VII.
Power and duty of municipal council and other officers or boards to make local improvements, see Local Improvements §§ 5, 6.
Power of municipal officers to levy assessment for local improvement, see Local Improvements §§ 46, 47.

¶ 810. Persons dealing with a municipal corporation through its officers must at their peril take notice of the authority of the particular officer to bind the corporation.—Rens v. City of Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 237.

¶ 811. No one has a right to rely upon the acts of officers of a municipality beyond the limits of their authority, as binding upon the corporation, or to be misled thereby; since all are bound to take notice of the public law which defines the powers of such officers.—Plumb v. City of Grand Rapids, 81 Mich. 381.

¶ 812. Persons dealing with municipalities and their agents act with constructive, if not actual, knowledge of the limitation upon their delegated powers and their instrumentalities.—Building Commission of Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604.

§ 184. ——Particular officers.

Right to pay for extra time or for extra services, see post § 202.

¶ 813. Where the charter of a city (Ionia) provides that the city clerk shall have all the powers and duties of township clerks—see How. St. § 743—such city clerk has power to appoint a deputy to perform his duties in his absence.—Tower v. Welker, 93 Mich. 332.

¶ 814. The duties of the controller of Detroit are prescribed by the charter. In addition to those particularly specified, the common council may require him to perform others, subject to the provisions of the charter. But this will not authorize the council to prescribe duties which do not come within the scope and are in no way subject to the provisions of the charter, and are of an entirely different nature from those required by the charter.—City of Detroit v. Redfield, 19 Mich. 376.

¶ 815. Under a city charter requiring the controller to perform "such duties in relation to the finances as shall be prescribed by ordinance," he may be empowered to negotiate and dispose of city bonds, and the sureties upon his official bond are liable for any misappropriation by him of the proceeds, or for any unauthorized disposal of the bonds themselves.—Stevenson v. Bay City, 26 Mich. 44.

¶ 816. Where a city charter gives the common council the power to audit and allow accounts, and only permits the comptroller to receive, examine and report upon them, the latter cannot modify a contract on the part of the city, and the city is not bound by notice to him that has not been communicated to the council.—Advertiser & Tribune Co. v. City of Detroit, 43 Mich. 116.

¶ 817. An appointment made under Local Acts 1901, No. 284, providing invalidly for an appointment by the governor of a provisional local Superintendent of Public Works for the city of Detroit and the abolition of the local Board of Public Works, is not shown to have been accepted by the city by the fact that the governor's appointee's bond has been accepted by the city controller; as he had no power to ratify the legislative act wherein it was void.—Moreland v. Millen, 126 Mich. 381.

¶ 817a. The harbor-master of Detroit is, like the other police officers, a purely ministerial officer, and he is confined to the exercise of such duties as may be imposed by valid ordinances for the purpose of "preserving and regulating the navigation of said river."—Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221.

§ 185. Ex officio powers and functions.

Effect of conferring on officer ex officio powers in other corporation, see also ante ¶ 24.
Municipal officers ex officio members of board of supervisors, see Counties § 50.

¶ 818. It is within the province of the legislature to make the mayor of a city an ex officio member of the board of education, and to give him the veto power.—Pingree v. Board of Education of Detroit, 99 Mich. 404.

§ 186. Authority to contract or charge municipality.

Disability to revive barred claim by hearing it out of time, see ante ¶ 626.

Ratification of unauthorized contracts, see post § 188.

Statutory provision for issuance of school bonds as excluding implication of power in city to issue bonds for school purposes, see Municipal Bonds ¶ 14.

Authority to sign bonds as excluding authority to deliver them, see Municipal Bonds ¶ 47.

Power of health officers or board to incur expense and charge municipality, see Health § 12.

¶ 819. The director of the poor, under the charter of Saginaw City, whose powers, duties and liabilities are by express reference limited to those of like officers in townships, has no authority to bind the city by the employment of a physician to perform a surgical operation upon a pauper of the city at any agreed price.—Barber v. City of Saginaw City, 34 Mich. 52.

¶ 820. The city surveyor of Grand Rapids has no power to make contracts binding upon the city for the improvement of its public streets.—Rens v. City of Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 237.

¶ 821. The city surveyor and board of public works of the city of Grand Rapids have no power to make contracts for the improvement of streets except under the direction of the common council, and the city can in no way be made liable for such improvements, unless the same are made under contract approved by the council.—Rens v. City of Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 237.

¶ 822. The board of police commissioners of the city of Grand Rapids has no power to contract for the board of a witness for the people in a criminal case while waiting to testify, or of a respondent who, upon his conviction in the superior court of said city, has been remanded to the police station under suspended sentence, to be detained until the trial of said case, and then used as a witness for the people therein. The proper way is to commit the witness in default of recognizance.—Tucker v. Common Council of Grand Rapids, 104 Mich. 621.

¶ 823. Authority to sign municipal bonds does not include power to deliver them.—Portsmouth Savings Bank v. Village of Ashley, 91 Mich. 670.

¶ 824. Promise of compensation by a city surveyor, additional to that provided for in a contract with a city for the construction of a sewer, was not binding upon the city.—Fox v. City of Bay City, 122 Mich. 499.

¶ 825. So far as third persons are concerned, the superintendent and engineer is the proper medium of negotiation with the board of water commissioners. And if he exceed his authority, and make a contract which the board repudiate, third persons are not to be injuriously affected thereby, or deprived of rights acquired in good faith by dealing with an agent upon whose authority they had a right to rely.—Hale v. Houghton, 8 Mich. 458.

¶ 826. An appropriation by the city council for a new pumping station carries with it authority to purchase a site.—Union Trust Co. v. Detroit Common Council, 158 Mich. 198.

§ 187. Authority to control litigation and employ counsel.

Ratification of unauthorized acts, see post § 188.

¶ 827. Where the mayor of a city is involved with some aldermen in litigation growing out of the exercise of his veto power in which litigation the city attorney is engaged on the other side, the question of whether or not an emergency existed so as to make the city liable for fees of another lawyer employed by the mayor without the formal consent of the council is a question of fact for the jury.—Smedley v. City of Grand Haven, 125 Mich. 424.

¶ 828. Where a city council by resolution directed the mayor and clerk to enter into a contract with a named attorney to have him take charge of pending city litigation in conjunction with its own committee there was a sufficient delegation of power to the mayor and the attorney to authorize them to take an appeal in the suit which had been decided adversely in the probate court.—City of Flint v. Stockdale's Estate, 149 Mich. 214.

¶ 829. Under the charter of the city of Grand Haven, where through his veto of an unlawful resolution of the council, the mayor is involved in litigation in which part of the aldermen and the city attorney are on the other side, the jury should be instructed that if they found an emergency existed for the employment of other counsel by the mayor they should find the city liable for the legal services of such counsel.—Smedley v. City of Grand Haven, 125 Mich. 424.

¶ 830. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2752, giving to the president of a village no specific authority to hire an attorney for the village on a retainer, he cannot bind the village by such a contract.—Moore v. City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 543.

¶ 831. Under section 2727, Comp. L. 1897, making it the duty of the president of a village to enforce the ordinances and regulations of the council, the village is liable for services performed by an attorney at the direction of the president and without any action by the council.—Hosner v. Village of Leonard, 163 Mich. 92.

§ 188. Ratification of unauthorized acts and contracts.

Ratification of act of officers in sale of bond issue by vote of council approving their acts, see Municipal Bonds ¶ 44.

¶ 832. Ratification by a municipal corporation of the unauthorized contracts of its agents or officers must be of such contracts as it could legally have made originally.—Township of Taymouth v. Koehler, 35 Mich. 22; Sault Ste. Marie Highway Com'rs v. Van Dusan, 40 Mich. 429; Davis v. City of Jackson, 61 Mich. 530; Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Township of Jasper, 68 Mich. 441.

¶ 833. The rule that a corporation cannot ratify an act that it would have been positively unlawful for it to do does not prevent proceedings to recover back money or property obtained by an act done ultra vires.—Sault Ste. Marie Highway Com'rs v. Van Dusan, 40 Mich. 429.

¶ 834. A municipal corporation may ratify the unauthorized acts and contracts of its agents or officers, when the corporation might legally have authorized such acts and contracts, in the first instance, subject to exception when the mode of contracting operates as a limitation upon the power to contract.—Davis v. City of Jackson, 61 Mich. 530.

¶ 835. In some cases the acceptance and appropriation of work done for the use and benefit of the corporation may amount to ratification if done with full knowledge of all the facts.—Taymouth Township v. Koehler, 35 Mich. 22.

¶ 836. Where a board of park commissioners, whose functions were local and municipal, had been appointed by an act of the legislature, and the common council had ratified their action, afterwards confirming such ratification in opposition to the mayor's veto, it was held that the action of the council necessarily involved an approval of everything necessary to give validity to the action of the board, including, as a primary element of regularity, the right of the public agents to assume the agency.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Lothrop, 24 Mich. 235.

¶ 837. The acts of certain village officers in removing earth from in front of a landowner's premises for the improvement of the street were ratified by the council of such village, and on that ground, a verdict for them might properly have been directed, in trespass quare clausum fregit brought against such officers by the landowner, where it appeared that although there was no record of any action of such council ordering such work to be done, certain bills which included the expense of such improvement had been approved by the council with full knowledge of their contents.—Wheat v. Van Tine, 149 Mich. 314.

¶ 838. Where a village finance committee enters into a contract beyond the powers of the village to furnish a bonus to a manufacturing company, said village cannot ratify the contract so as to be bound by it.—Village of Reed City v. Reed City Veneer & Panel Works, 165 Mich. 599.

¶ 839. The act of the common council of a city in ratifying the acts of its mayor in taking an appeal and signing an appeal bond on behalf of the city, if not necessary, was within the power of the council and forever disposes of any objection that might be raised as to his authority.—City of Flint v. Stockdale's Estate, 149 Mich. 214.

§ 189. Responsibility for acts of officers or subordinates.

Officers as exclusive organs of municipality, see also ante ¶ 116.
Duty to take notice of limitations on officers' powers, see also ante § 183.
For acts of negligence, see post § 190.
Notice to officer as notice to city, see post § 191.
Estoppel of municipality by act of officer, see post § 192.
General doctrine of respondeat superior, see Agency, II; Master and Servant, IV.
Responsibility of county for embezzlement by county officers, see Counties § 36.
Liability of city to bona fide holder of bonds issued by wrongdoing officers, see also Municipal Bonds § 13 et seq.

¶ 840. A municipality is not as such responsible for acts of officers of a public prison, since all criminal prisons are and must be public and not private places of detention, and no imprisonment can be lawful that is not authorized by law.—Detroit v. Laughna, 34 Mich. 402.

¶ 841. A city cannot be held liable for the sickness and death of a workman on land used for the isolation of contagious disease cases under the rule of respondeat superior where the city would not be liable for such injury caused by itself directly.—Nicholson v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 246.

¶ 842. A declaration in case against a city for entering and using plaintiff's dwelling house as a pest house without leave or license (first count), and for entering and expelling plaintiff by force (second count), and for trespass with direct and consequential damage (third count) sounds in tort and will not support a judgment against the city for more than the rental value of the premises, where possession was obtained by a trick of the health officer pretending to rent a house without disclosing the purpose of its use; since though the city is liable for the value of the use it is not liable for the torts of its officers unratified by it.—Bodewig v. City of Port Huron, 141 Mich. 564.

¶ 843. Where the charter of a corporation engaged in municipal water supply was repealed, and the repealing act is sought to be enforced for the benefit of the inhabitants of the municipality at large, their right to have a law enforced cannot be affected by the fact that some agent of the municipal corporation acted improperly in securing the passage of the law.—People ex rel. Ellis v. Calder, 153 Mich. 724, aff'd 218 U. S. 591, 54 L. ed. 1163, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122.

¶ 844. A city cannot be held liable for a nuisance though one of its employees, contrary to express orders, had contributed in a small measure to the nuisance.—McKee v. City of Grand Rapids, 137 Mich. 200.

¶ 845. A city is not liable for the wilful refusal of its common council to approve a sufficient liquor-bond.—Amperse v. City of Kalamazoo, 75 Mich. 228.

§ 190. ——Negligence by employees or contractors.

See also ante ¶ 531.

Negligence or other injurious acts of fire department, see also ante § 181.

¶ 846. Municipal officers are in no such sense municipal agents that their negligence is the negligence of the municipality; the latter cannot be made liable in such a connection.—Amperse v. City of Kalamazoo, 75 Mich. 228; Hines v. City of Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278.

¶ 847. Municipal officers are in no such sense municipal agents that their negligence is the neglect of the municipality; nor will their misconduct be chargeable against it, unless the act complained of be either authorized or ratified.—City of Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84.

¶ 848. A municipality is liable as a natural person would be for a tortious act, but is not, apart from contract or statute, responsible for official neglect involving no active misfeasance.—Hines v. City of Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278.

¶ 848a. Cities and other municipalities are not usually responsible in damages for the neglect of persons in public office, unless made so by statute.—O'Leary v. Board of Fire & Water Commissioners of City of Marquette, 79 Mich. 281.

¶ 849. A municipality, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, is not responsible for injuries caused by the negligence of its employees engaged in so called governmental functions.—Brink v. City of Grand Rapids, 144 Mich. 472.

¶ 850. A board of water commissioners chartered to furnish a city with water and which has no taxing powers but can only levy an equitable water rate is not liable for injuries caused by its servants' negligence.—O'Leary v. Board of Fire & Water Commissioners of City of Marquette, 79 Mich. 281.

¶ 851. By arrangement with the mayor of a city a contractor, engaged in laying water pipe for the city, laid such pipe from the street into adjoining college grounds and the trench was left open and unguarded on said grounds. A traveler falling into it was injured and sued the city, which was held not liable, as the relation of master and servant did not, at the time the work was done, exist between the city and such contractor.—Harvey v. City of Hillsdale, 86 Mich. 330.

Liability of city for negligent operation of automobile used by public library, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 40-45.

Liability of city or county for negligent acts of health officers, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 406-413.

§ 191. Notice through officers or agents.

General doctrine of notice through agency, see Agency, II, E; Corporations, XVII, E.

Presumption that city and officers know the law, see Evidence § 47, ¶¶ 256, 257.

¶ 852. The individual knowledge of officers or agents of a municipal corporation, who in such capacity have powers or duties conferred upon them with reference to a given matter, is the knowledge of the corporation, and notice to them is notice to the corporation, which is bound by such knowledge or notice.—Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499; Fuller v. Jackson, 82 Mich. 480.

Notice to city officer, agent or private citizen, as notice to the city, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 723-739.

§ 192. Estoppel by acts of officers.

¶ 853. A city is not estopped by the neglect of its officers to enforce an ordinance.—Detroit v. Fort St. & E. R. Co., 41 Mich. 413.

¶ 854. In an action of trespass quare clausum against a village in which both parties claim possession, the fact that the village had assessed and collected taxes against the plaintiff for some years does not estop the village from denying the plaintiff's possession or title as the assessor and collector have no power to convey title.—Moore v. Pear, 129 Mich. 513.

¶ 855. A city treasurer's voluntary rendition of a tax statement which omitted some taxes does not bind the city, it not having been any part of his official duty to make such a statement.—Gray v. City of Detroit, 113 Mich. 657.

§ 193. Mode of official action and record or minute thereof.

Manner of signifying approval or veto of ordinances, see ante § 46.

Name in which instruments should be executed to bind city, see post § 194.

Name in which suits or defenses should be made, see post § 212.

¶ 856. Since Laws 1873, Act No. 392, § 13, provides that the board of public works of Detroit may authorize one of its members to inspect the grading and paving of streets, the action of a single member in such regard is presumably within his authority.—Kulwicki v. Munro, 95 Mich. 28.

¶ 857. A municipal board of public works is a quasi-corporation, and its acts in platting streets, approving plats, and establishing a system of grades and sewers, cannot rest in parol, and should be recorded by them in permanent form.—Larned v. Briscoe, 62 Mich. 393.

¶ 857a. Where a power is conferred, a resort to the usual means in its execution must be understood as intended, unless others are indicated.—Grover v. Huckins, 26 Mich. 476.

¶ 858. The mayor of a city is the proper party to sign a claim of appeal on probate from the probate court on behalf of the city.—City of Flint v. Stockdale's Estate, 149 Mich. 214.

¶ 859. It is the duty of the mayor of a city of the fourth class, either as chief executive under the provision of Pub. Acts 1895, No. 215, chap. 7, § 1, or as president of the common council under chapter 8, § 1, to obey the directions of the council in performing the ministerial act of executing a contract for a supply of water to the city, and mandamus will lie to compel the performance of that duty.—Monroe Water Co. v. Heath, 115 Mich. 277.

¶ 860. The common council of a city has a right to investigate the accounts of the police court judge and clerk in a matter of fees belonging to the city, and to have access for such purpose to the files and papers of the court.—Schwartz v. Barry, 90 Mich. 267.

¶ 861. Under Local Acts 1882, Act. No. 48, c. 7, § 3, authorizing the mayor of a city to examine and inspect the books, records, and papers of any employee or officer thereof; section 8, giving the city clerk charge of all books and documents relating to the accounts of the corporation; and chap. 8, § 14, authorizing the common council to cause all the corporate records to be deposited and kept in the office of the city clerk, so as to be convenient of access or inspection by any person interested, a city council may be authorized to inspect and audit the books for the board of water commissioners of such city, appointed pursuant to Local Acts 1903, Act No. 422, at a different time than that provided for in sec. 15 of the last named act, which requires such board to make and file with the city clerk a record on or before a certain day, as such provision does not restrict the exercise of the general powers inherent in the council to investigate the performance of their duties by its officers and agents.—Field v. Board Water Com'rs City of Manistee, 156 Mich. 186.

Nonliability to employees for injuries resulting from governmental acts or omissions, see also ante ¶ 537.
Duty of Wayne county auditors to allow claim for salary of officers of police court fixed by city, see Counties § 45.

¶ 862. The Village Incorporation Act, under which Cheboygan is incorporated, provides that officers, with certain exceptions, "shall receive such compensation as the council shall prescribe" (How. St. § 2825), and it specially authorizes the council to fix the compensation of sewer commissioners and of the fire department. It also authorizes the appointment of a board of water commissioners, but says nothing about paying them, nor does the ordinance creating the board. Held, that the water commissioners are not entitled to a salary, nor to payment for any services done in the line of their official duty. —Perry v. Village of Cheboygan, 55 Mich. 250.

Municipal employees within the Workmen's Compensation Acts, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 960-968.

§ 197. ——Determining and fixing amount.

Increases, reductions, and changes, see post § 198.

¶ 863. When the legislature has delegated to a city council the power to fix the salaries of city officers the passage of ordinances fixing the salaries of such officers constitutes the fixing of salaries by law.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

¶ 864. Merely appropriating, for the payment of a municipal salary, a less amount than had been paid before, is not to be construed as fixing the salary at the smaller sum, if the body making the appropriation continues to allow salary bills at the former rate.—Fountain v. City of Jackson, 50 Mich. 260.

¶ 865. Under the charter of Cadillac (Laws 1873, Act No. 178) the city council has the power to fix the salary of the health officer, and the board of health cannot bind the council by assuming to fix it instead.—Coleman v. Common Council, City of Cadillac, 49 Mich. 322.

¶ 866. In April, 1891, the council of a city adopted a resolution fixing an officer's salary for the year. In April, 1892 by a vote of six to five, one being absent, a resolution to fix the same salary was declared lost by the mayor; and in May, 1892, it attempted by a like vote, the mayor voting also, to pass a resolution fixing his salary at a lower rate, but such resolution was void because not adopted by a majority vote of all the aldermen-elect. The charter provided that the council should "annually" determine the salary to be paid to officers. Held, that the officer was not entitled to the rate fixed by the resolution of April, 1891, for work done after April, 1892, although the resolution of May, 1892, was void, but that mandamus would lie in his behalf to compel the council to determine his compensation for the year 1892.—Fournier v. Mayor, etc., of West Bay City, 94 Mich. 463.

¶ 867. Where a village council has not created the office of village attorney, Comp. L. 1897, § 2700, How., 2nd Ed., § 5919, providing for the appointment of officers by presidents of villages by and with the consent of the council, gives a village president no authority to appoint a village attorney, and where an attorney removed by a president is reappointed by the council, the village is bound to pay him such compensation as the council shall direct.—Gansser v. Vanderveen, 176 Mich. 517.

¶ 868. Local Acts of 1895, No. 366, § 4, empowering the board of estimates of Detroit to disallow any items or parts of items of the various estimates referred to it, and making it unlawful for the common council to expend any moneys as to items thus specifically disallowed, the city has no authority to pay an official the salary fixed by the common council after the board of estimates has reduced the amount.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 113 Mich. 494.

¶ 869. A city council was authorized by the charter to appoint such subordinate officers as might be necessary, and to fix their compensation. The charter further provided that, before any taxes should be levied for the purposes of any of the several funds of the city, the controller should present to the council his estimate of the amount necessary to be raised for the ensuing year for each of said funds; that the council might revise or alter said estimates, and, when finally adopted, should transmit the same to the board of estimates; and that such board should have the right to call upon the council or any municipal officer for information as to any matter pending before it. By subsequent enactment it was provided that the board should have the power, after consideration of the various estimates referred to it, to disallow any item in the different funds, and that it should be unlawful for the council to create any expenditure or expend any moneys as to items specifically disallowed by the board. Held, that, where the board had assumed to deduct the salaries of certain officers from the estimate for the general fund, appointments to said offices thereafter made by the council were illegal, and the payment of salaries thereunder would be enjoined though the estimates certified to the board were not itemized.—Robinson v. City of Detroit, 107 Mich. 168.

¶ 870. The Detroit city charter, § 604, confers upon the board of estimates of the city the power to approve or disapprove the amounts of the salaries of the officers, clerks, and employees of the board of education.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

¶ 871. Under Local Acts 1901, No. 474, as amended by Local Acts 1905, No. 617, § 1, amending the Detroit city charter, the board of estimates of the City of Detroit has no authority to interfere with the raising of moneys to pay salaries which have been fixed by law.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 198 Mich. 195.

¶ 872. The Detroit city charter, § 472, expressly confers upon the board of estimates the power to approve or disapprove the amounts of the salaries of the officers, clerks, and employees of the board of health.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

¶ 873. Where the commissioner of police of Detroit transmitted to the city controller his estimates for the police department, and therein was an item for "356 patrolmen, at $1,000, $356,000," which item was allowed by the common council, but reduced by the board of estimate to "356 patrolmen at $960, $341,760," and as so reduced the common council caused this latter sum to be assessed, levied, and collected by general taxation, the salary of the patrolmen was thereby fixed at $960 a year.—Carney v. Whelan, 147 Mich. 15.

§ 198. ——Increases, reductions, and changes.

Deductions and set-offs, see post § 199.
Effect of new charter to repeal salary ordinance, see ante ¶ 290.
Constitutional provisions as to alteration of salaries, see Constitutional Law § 268; Officers, VIII.
Effect of Home Rule Act in connection with constitutional provisions, see Officers, VIII.

¶ 874. The salary of a municipal officer, when once fixed in the manner prescribed by law, can be changed only by a like compliance with the statutory conditions; and by accepting a smaller amount than that to which he is entitled the officer does not waive his right to recover the full salary.—Ruell v. City of Alpena, 108 Mich. 290.

¶ 875. Under a charter authorizing the common council to fix the compensation of municipal officers, subject only to the provision that the salary of no officer shall be diminished "during the term for which he is elected or appointed," the council may, after the appointment of an officer, but before the commencement of his term, reduce the salary to a nominal sum in good faith.—Wesch v. Common Council of Detroit, 107 Mich. 149.

¶ 876. The charter of Jackson provides that the compensation of the superintendent of public works shall be fixed by the board of public works and approved by the common council. Held, that the council alone could not reduce it.—Fountain v. City of Jackson, 50 Mich. 15.

¶ 877. The charter of Detroit, by a provision made in 1871, forbids the reduction of the salary of any city officer during his term. Laws 1873, Act No. 392, creating a board of public works, provided that "each member of the board shall receive such salary per annum as the common council may from time to time establish." Held, that the provision in the charter had never applied to any public board, and could not restrict later legislation containing independent provisions concerning salaries; and that under the Act of 1873 the council could reduce the salary of a member of the board of public works during his term of office.—People ex rel. Chapoton v. Detroit Common Council, 38 Mich. 636.

¶ 878. Local Acts of 1893, No. 419, which provides for a law department for the city of Detroit, and for the appointment by the mayor of a city counsellor, is supplemental to the charter of said city, and does not disturb existing officers, but, on the contrary, constructs said department with material then on hand; and the provision respecting salary relates as well to the city counsellor acting before the act took effect as to the city counsellor subsequently appointed.—Speed v. Common Council of Detroit, 100 Mich. 92.

¶ 879. In the absence of a contrary allegation a city council will be presumed to have acted in good faith and upon sufficient reasons in reducing the salary of an officer from $1,200 to $5 a year.—Wesch v. Common Council of Detroit, 107 Mich. 149.

¶ 880. Under Local Acts 1905, No. 470, patrolmen in Detroit appointed under such act must be considered as officers and not employees and the term of their office is at least one year. The commissioner cannot reduce or increase the patrolman's salary as patrolman, and although he may reduce his grade and pay, until such reduction takes place, the patrolman is entitled to the compensation originally fixed by the commissioner.—Carney v. Whelan, 147 Mich. 15.

§ 199. ——Deductions and set-offs.

Pay for time excluded or suspended, see post § 201.

¶ 881. Where an alderman has received unlawful extra compensation, the mayor has no power to deduct it from the alderman's salary, and refuse to sign a warrant for the full amount.—Alberts v. Torrent, 98 Mich. 512.

§ 200. ——Pay during leave of absence.

¶ 882. In amending Local Acts 1905, No. 416, by adding section 34a providing that "the leave of absence of every policeman * * * shall be a furlough of twenty days," the legislature recognized an existing custom of the Detroit police department to grant a leave of absence of 10 days with pay. Inasmuch as this customary leave of absence carried with it full pay it must be concluded that the legislature intended the longer leave to be accompanied with pay.—Carney v. Whelan, 147 Mich. 15.

§ 201. ——Effect of unlawful exclusion or suspension from office.

¶ 883. A municipal corporation which has excluded a salaried officer from the performance of his duties is bound to pay him the salary.—Stadler v. City of Detroit, 13 Mich. 346.

¶ 884. A police officer is not entitled to compensation for services during the time he was suspended and during which time he had rendered no "actual service" under the charter and ordinances of Bay City.—Hawkins v. Bay City, 149 Mich. 268.

¶ 885. While an officer is entitled to the salary belonging to the office if prevented from filling it; yet since he can have only such salary as the law fixes for it, under the charter of the city of Saginaw (Local Acts 1889, p. 936), providing that police officers shall be paid such salary, for the time engaged in "active service," as shall be recommended by the board of police commissioners and approved by the common council, an officer who ceases to perform the duties of his office pending proceedings for reinstatement, after an invalid removal is not entitled on re-instatement, to salary for the time lost.—Wilkinson v. Common Council of Saginaw, 111 Mich. 585.

¶ 886. Where a mayor appointed a city attorney on the third Monday of April as required by the old charter of a city, but after the adoption of a commission form of government under a charter expressly declaring that all old officers should continue in office until the expiration of their terms or the appointment by the commissioners of their successors, such appointment is a nullity, and the previous incumbent is entitled to the salary of the office for the time it was paid the last appointee.—North v. City of Battle Creek, 185 Mich. 592.

¶ 887. The village of Fairview was annexed to defendant City of Detroit by an unconstitutional statute, and the city authorities took charge of the property and territory of the village and exercised governmental functions therein. Held, that plaintiff, an officer of the village at the time of the attempted annexation, was entitled to recover his salary for the period during which defendant exercised such functions under the unconstitutional statute.—Otto v. City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 532.

¶ 888. Detroit City Charter, 1904, § 662, provides that the police commissioner shall have power, for cause assigned and on public hearing and due notice, to remove and suspend from office, or for a definite time to deprive of pay, any member of the city force. Relator was suspended without hearing or notice on the basis of a criminal charge which had been made against him. Held, that upon acquittal of such charge, relator was entitled to his salary during the period of suspension.—Newberry v. Smith, 157 Mich. 181.

¶ 889. In a suit against a city by a police matron to recover salary after her attempted dismissal, she may properly testify as to whether she talked with members of the council and informed them of her rights after said dismissal, said evidence being competent on the questions of abandonment and acquiescence.—Rowell v. City of Battle Creek, 169 Mich. 19.

¶ 890. In a suit against a city by a police matron to recover salary after her attempted dismissal, evidence as to payment of salary to another matron is immaterial where by the statute more than one matron may be appointed.—Rowell v. City of Battle Creek, 169 Mich. 19.

¶ 891. The police commission attempted to discharge a police matron of the city of Detroit. She testified that her nonperformance of services thereafter was because the police department made it impossible for her to serve, and that she at all times held herself in readiness to perform her duties, and so notified the proper officers. Held, the question of her acquiescence in said attempted discharge was, in a suit for salary, one for the jury.—Rowell v. City of Battle Creek, 169 Mich. 19.

§ 202. Services or employment and compensation extraneous to office.

Waiver of claim for extra pay, see post § 203.

Right to pay for overtime, see Officers, VIII.

Right of policeman paid by city to claim from county fees for arrests for crime, see also Counties ¶ 126.

¶ 892. The mayor or a councilman of a municipality is not bound by his official position to give the municipality his professional services as an attorney without charge.—City of Niles v. Muzzy, 33 Mich. 61.

¶ 893. A mayor or councilman of a municipality may be employed by it as an attorney to defend a suit against it, and may recover the value of services rendered under such employment.—City of Niles v. Muzzy, 33 Mich. 61.

¶ 894. If the controller is made agent of the city to perform duties not properly pertaining to his office he is entitled to the like compensation for performing them that any other agent would have been.—City of Detroit v. Redfield, 19 Mich. 376.

¶ 895. A city officer is entitled to be paid for acts done, under appointment of the common council, outside of his official duty.—McBride v. City of Grand Rapids, 47 Mich. 236.

tions in rendering unofficial services. Held, that as he was appointed by a resolution of the council the committee had nothing to do with his employment beyond directing the labor, which, however, would bear on the amount of his services; nor were his duties imposed by the city attorney; he therefore had a right of action against the city for compensation.—McBride v. City of Grand Rapids, 47 Mich. 236.

¶ 897. The appointment of a person, who holds office as a police justice, by the common council of a municipality to act with other named persons in revising the municipal ordinances, imposes upon him functions other than those for the performance of which he receives his salary, and hence entitles him to additional compensation; and in an action therefor it is error to charge that he was entitled thereto if the council accepted and adopted the revision, as if that was a condition of his being paid for his labor. So also with extra-official services in aiding the city to collect money from the county, unless his services were meant to be gratuitous. McBride v. City of Grand Rapids, 47 Mich. 236.

¶ 898. A village officer cannot recover from the village for voluntary services outside the line of his duties, if rendered on his own responsibility, in a case in which he alone would not have been competent to hire their performance.—Perry v. Village of Cheboygan, 55 Mich. 250.

¶ 899. The provision of the charter of the city of Muskegon (Local Acts 1889, No. 304, tit. 5, § 40) which limits the compensation of aldermen for services, either as councilmen, aldermen, or otherwise, to a yearly salary of $100, prevents their receiving extra compensation while acting ex officio as members of the boards of registration or as inspectors of election.—Alberts v. Torrent, 98 Mich. 512.

¶ 900. Where there was a city ordinance providing for an eight hour day and a minimum wage, and the city charter provided that the commissioner of public works might employ such help in his department as the council had decided should be employed, a city is bound by a contract of hire whereby the commissioner agreed to pay overtime.—Gadd v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 683.

§ 203. Waiver or estoppel of claim for extra services.

Waiver of reduction or deduction, see ante ¶ 874.

Waiver of claim for overtime, see also Officers, VIII.

¶ 901. The presentation by a clerk in a city office of a bill for extra services, and its allowance, constitute a settlement of all claims by him for extra services prior to such time, where he accepts the sum allowed, and gives his receipt, without in any way indicating that he has a further claim.—Goodson v. Board of Health of Detroit, 114 Mich. 345.

¶ 902. Although Revised Ordinances of Detroit, chap. 47, § 1, provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for laborers, etc., employed by the city or by any of its boards or officers, yet an assistant engineer employed by common council in the city hall and kept at work for eleven hours daily cannot recover for the time over eight hours, where he signed the pay-roll calling for a fixed sum per day which corresponded to the amount of the annual estimate made by the board of estimate for his compensation; since by virtue of Detroit Charter of 1904, § 250, the common council is deprived of power to exceed the funds specifically appropriated for the particular objects.—Kobel v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 38.

XVI. ACTIONS AND SUITS BY AND AGAINST MUNICIPALITY.

A. IN GENERAL.

[Note. The law of actions and procedure, being general, does not admit of treating here all cases in which a municipality was one of the parties. Most of such cases present no law that is specific to municipal corporations and should be sought in the various procedural topics. See the cross-references under the sections following. As to actions involving the law of municipalities, but not having them as parties the same exclusion is necessitated for similar reasons. See the other divisions of this topic and also other topics referred to in the appropriate places. Nothing is proper to this division except such matters as pertain distinctively to actions in which a municipality is one of the parties.]

§ 204. Jurisdiction, power and capacity of municipality.

Officers authorized to control litigation and employ counsel, see ante § 187.

Jurisdiction of prosecutions for violations of ordinances, see post § 218.

General law of jurisdiction, see Courts, V.

Matters within jurisdiction of superior or other local courts as involving city or its officers, see Municipal Courts § 6.

Justices' jurisdiction of actions by and against municipalities, see Justices of the Peace § 25.

Set-off in justices' court against municipality, see Justices of the Peace, § 98.

Liability to or immunity from garnishment, see Garnishment § 13.

¶ 903. The provision in a city charter (in this case St. Clair) that the corporation may sue and be sued in all courts of law and equity, etc., will not confer jurisdiction upon all courts. Such a provision must be understood to mean in all courts of law and equity having jurisdiction of the case.—Gurney v. City of St. Clair, 11 Mich. 202.

§ 205. Rights of action and prerequisites.

[Note. The question whether a given right of action exists and is mature is mainly one of substantive law or of general law not peculiar to municipalities. See such topics as Highways, XII; Injunctions, II; Public Contracts; and see substantive and remedial topics treating of the right in question.]

Presentation and notice of claim as prerequisite to action on it, see ante § 148 et seq.

Time for suit, see post § 206.

Rule of judicial noninterference with or control of municipal administrative functions, see ante § 34.

Suits for sums due for water service, see Waters, VI.

§ 206. Time for suit and limitations.

Time for notice or presentment of claim, see ante § 150.

Reasonableness of time for consideration of claim after presentment and before suing thereon, see ante § 151.

General law of limitations of actions, see Limitations.

General law of laches, see Equity, IV.

Applicability of limitations to actions by or on behalf of city, see Limitations § 26.

Adverse possession of land by or against municipality, see Adverse Possession, I, II.

Prescription of easements or against them, see Easements; Highways, II, A.

¶ 904. Where, after the presentation to a city council of a claim for taxes paid under protest, four meetings of the council are held without any action being taken regarding the claim, a suit brought at the expiration of thirty-six days from such presentation, and two days after the last council meeting, is not premature, under a charter provision barring such action if commenced before the council has had a reasonable time to investigate and pass upon the claim.—Whitney v. City of Port Huron, 88 Mich. 268.

¶ 905. Local Acts 1895, No. 444, requiring notice of sidewalk injuries to a city and fixing the statute of limitations at one year does not apply to injuries sustained prior to its taking effect.—Broffee v. City of Grand Rapids, 127 Mich. 89.

¶ 906. Since under Comp. L. 1897, § 9985, there must be personal service of a copy of the declaration in a suit commenced by filing and serving declaration, a suit against a city is barred at the end of the statutory year, where service on the controller was set aside and proper service not obtained until after the year.—Wilton v. City of Detroit, 138 Mich. 67.

¶ 907. There is not a commencement of suit within a year from the time of the injury, where it occurred on November 16, 1903, and the suit was commenced by summons issued on November 15, 1904 and served on the controller on that day but not served by an officer in the regular way until the following December.—Dedenbach v. City of Detroit, 146 Mich. 710.

¶ 908. Where the city and a claimant for damages received upon a defective sidewalk, treated an investigation as though made within a reasonable time and the delay caused by the investigation resulted in a suit being barred by a limitation of the city's charter, the city was precluded from setting up the statute as a defense to the action.—Springer v. City of Detroit, 118 Mich. 69.

¶ 909. The defense of the City of Kalamazoo that the personal injury action in question was barred by the charter provision limiting the commencement of such actions to four months from the occurrence, was not waived by the reference of the claim, which was received after the expiration of the limited period, to a committee which fixed a time and a place for a hearing.—Woodworth v. City of Kalamazoo, 135 Mich. 233.

¶ 910. The provisions of the City of Kalamazoo charter, requiring personal injury cases to be brought within four months, were not waived by advertising for claims against the city, under an ordinance requiring the city clerk to advertise that claims for the current year must be filed before a stated day.—Woodworth v. City of Kalamazoo, 135 Mich. 233.

§ 207. Remedies and forms of action.

Proper remedy to prevent improper governmental act, see also ante ¶ 572.

Following and recovering public funds, see ante § 145.

Remedies of taxpayers and attorney general for misuse of funds, see ante § 146.

Remedies for enforcement of claims, see ante § 161.

Prosecutions and penal actions for violations of ordinances, see post XVI, B.

Injunctions to restrain acts of municipalities and public officers, see also Injunctions II, D.

Injunction against enforcement of invalid ordinance, see Injunctions, II, H.

Mandamus to compel performance of official duties, see Mandamus, III.

Mandamus by one municipality against another, see Mandamus ¶ 622.

Remedies and procedure to enforce or collect bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 22.

Actions against delinquent water patrons, see Waters, VI.

Sufficiency of execution of agreement for arbitration to bind city, see Arbitration ¶ 17.

¶ 911. Where a city contests all liability as well as the amount claimed to be due plaintiff as his share of the surplus above the expense of a public improvement, which surplus has been turned into the city's general fund instead of being apportioned and paid over as the charter requires, mandamus to compel the common council to apportion and pay over is not the only remedy, but assumpsit lies.—Thayer v. City of Grand Rapids, 82 Mich. 298.

¶ 912. A Michigan municipal corporation may be sued in the federal courts on a liquidated demand, as in such courts a judgment is an essential prerequisite to a mandamus, while in the state courts it is not.—Township of Chickaming v. Carpenter, 106 U. S. 663, 27 L. ed. 307, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600.

¶ 912a. The fact that a municipal contract is awarded to one other than the lowest bidder thereon does not give to the latter a right of action at law to recover profits which he might have made had his bid been accepted, although the charter of the municipality requires that such contracts be let to the lowest responsible bidder.—Talbot Paving Co. v. City of Detroit, 109 Mich. 657.

§ 208. Suits by attorney general.

Power of attorney to appear against municipality, see ante § 182.

Power of attorney general to proceed to prevent action under invalid ordinance or resolution, see ante § 73; and see also Injunctions § 102.

¶ 913. The failure of a municipal council to follow strictly the provisions of their charter in making a public contract does not warrant the state in interfering by its attorney general to set aside the contract, if it does not appear that the council acted in bad faith and sought to usurp authority, or that any loss to the public or injustice to individuals would result from the arrangement made.—Attorney General v. Detroit, 55 Mich. 181.

¶ 914. The remedy by action at law by the city being adequate, an information by the attorney general to compel city officers to pay back to the city treasury money unlawfully taken therefrom, will not lie.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 107 Mich. 92.

§ 209. Taxpayers' suits on behalf of municipality.

Interest entitling taxpayer to restrain action by city, see also Injunction § 21.

Application of clean hands maxim to taxpayer suing for injunction, see also Equity ¶ 23.

Effect of taxpayer's injunction suit to bind city, see Former Adjudication, § 59.

¶ 915. The owners of taxable property may maintain a bill to enjoin the municipality in which it lies from executing a contract if its effect would be to increase their burdens by way of taxation to an amount sufficient to bring the case within the jurisdiction of equity.—Putnam v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 416.

¶ 916. Injunction to prevent the construction of a bridge by a city will not be granted at the instance of a taxpayer on the ground that its construction has not been authorized by the board of supervisors of the county.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 132 Mich. 395.

§ 210. Process, service, and commencement of actions.

General law of process and rules for service on municipalities, see Process.

Mode of commencing suit against municipality, by writ or by filing and serving declaration, see Process, I.

Commencement of actions for purpose of limitations, see Limitations, V.

§ 211. Appearance or intervention.

General law of appearance, see Appearance.

Interventions in general, see Parties.

¶ 917. A city attorney cannot bring the corporation into court by filing a brief in a case in which the city is not impleaded.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Hatch, 60 Mich. 229.

§ 212. Name or title in which to sue or defend.

Name in which complaint for violation of ordinance is to be made, see post § 219.

Name in which penal process should run, see post § 219.

Suits in name of municipality for penalties under statutes, see also Penalties.

Right of ward supervisor to sue under statute empowering "supervisor," see Animals ¶ 11.

Amendment to cure misnomer, see Pleading, VI.

¶ 918. A suit on behalf of a village should ordinarily be brought in its corporate name, but exceptions may be made by statute. And under a statute making the president and trustees ex officio commissioners of highways, with the like powers and duties as township commissioners, a suit on behalf of the village against mill owners, for the expenses of constructing a bridge on a street across their mill-race, should be brought by them in their name of office as commissioners, and not in their name as a common council; but where suit has been brought in the latter name the misnomer may be cured by amendment.—Merrill v. Village of Kalamazoo, 35 Mich. 211.

¶ 919. It is competent for the legislature to direct in what name suits by a municipal corporation shall be brought.—Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495; Village of Romeo v. Chapman, 2 Mich. 179.

¶ 920. Under the act incorporating the village of Romeo (Laws 1837-38, p. 87), a suit to recover a penalty under R. S. 1846, ch. 41, should have been brought in the name of the "Village of Romeo," instead of the "President and Trustees of the Village of Romeo," which was the corporate name of the village authorities.—Village of Romeo v. Chapman, 2 Mich. 179.

¶ 921. Where a bequest had been made to the "corporation of the village of New Baltimore," and a probate order granted leave to sue upon the residuary legatee's bond "for the use and benefit of the common council of New Baltimore," suit was properly brought for the use and benefit of the village of New Baltimore.—Hatheway v. Sackett, 32 Mich. 97.

§ 213. Pleading and trial practice.

Name in which to sue or defend, see ante § 212.

Evidence, jury questions, and instructions respecting claim and notice thereof, see ante § 157.

For matters of pleading, evidence, or trial practice in which the public corporate character of the party is not a controlling or distinctive factor, see Pleading; Evidence; Trial; Instructions; and other like topics.

General rules of practice in negligence cases, see Negligence, V; Highways, XII, H.

¶ 922. In an action against a village a declaration which describes defendant as "the village of North Muskegon, a municipal corporation of the state of Michigan," sufficiently alleges its corporate existence and character.—Clark v. Village of North Muskegon, 88 Mich. 308.

¶ 923. A defense that a verified claim for personal injuries was not presented as required by statute (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, chap. 5, § 7), may be shown under the plea of the general issue.—Clark v. Village of Davison, 118 Mich. 420.

§ 214. Judgments and costs and enforcement of same.

Addition of judgments to tax levy for ensuing year, see ante § 138.

General law of judgments, see Judgments.

Costs in suits by or against municipality or officers in chancery, see Costs § 37.

Right to costs on recovery of less than ordinary statutory limit, see Costs § 19.

Mode of enforcing costs charged against city or village, see Costs § 152.

Mandamus to enforce payment of judgments, see Mandamus ¶¶ 633, 634.

Addition of judgment to next tax levy, see ante § 138.

¶ 924. Judgment against a city for damages for injury from a defective sidewalk must now be enforced under Laws 1887, Act No. 312 (How. St. § 8218), providing generally for the collection of judgments against municipal corporations.—Shippy v. Mason, 90 Mich. 45.

B. ENFORCEMENT OF ORDINANCES AND PROSECUTIONS FOR VIOLATIONS.

§ 215. In general; violations and defenses.

Power of municipality to define offenses and prescribe procedure and punishments, see ante IX, E.

Construction of ordinances to determine unlawfulness of acts charged or proven, see ante § 54.

Liabilities for violations of ordinances, see ante § 69.

Nonliability of city for neglect to enforce ordinances, see ante § 125.

Nonliability to private persons for violating snow-cleaning ordinance, see ante ¶¶ 303, 304.

Crimes under general laws of the state as distinguished from violations or ordinances, see Crimes.

Noncriminal nature of prosecution, see post § 217.

Pleading defenses to complaint, see post § 223.

Prosecutions for nuisances under ordinances, see also Nuisances, IV.

Restraining enforcement of ordinances, see Injunctions, II, H.

Restraining breach of ordinances, see Injunctions § 93.

Advice of counsel as justification for prosecution under ordinance, see Malicious Prosecution § 10, ¶¶ 45, 46.

¶ 925. Under an ordinance regulating auctioneers, a pawnbroker cannot be charged as a principal in a violation thereof, he being outside the designation fixed in the ordinance.—People v. Meisner, 178 Mich. 115.

¶ 926. Where a city ordinance prohibited the depositing of objectionable matter named in the streets and alleys, and also provided that in case any of the matter shall be so deposited it shall be the duty of the owner or occupant of the premises within 24 hours after notification to remove it, in a prosecution for a violation of such ordinance, a conviction may be sustained without showing that the defendant had been notified to remove the matter, the second provision being intended to accomplish the abatement of the nuisance, and a compliance with the order to remove would not relieve from a penalty incurred by a violation of the first part of the ordinance.—People v. Bennett, 83 Mich. 457.

¶ 927. Inasmuch as the validity of an ordinance does not depend on a completely successful enforcement of its provisions it is no defense to show that there are other violators who have not been convicted, or that those whose duty it is to perform the duties required by it have fallen short, through inattention or intentional omission or neglect. —People v. Gardner, 143 Mich. 104.

¶ 928. It is no defense to a violator of an ordinance that others also are violating it.—City of Monroe v. Postal Tel. Co., 195 Mich. 467.

¶ 929. The question of the validity of a contract made under an ordinance by the board of health, giving the exclusive right to remove garbage for a period of years with the right of renewal, cannot be raised by a defendant in a prosecution for removing garbage in an open vehicle without a license in violation of such ordinance regulating the removal of garbage and providing that a contract for the removal of garbage might be entered into by the board of health. —City of Grand Rapids v. De Vries, 123 Mich. 570.

¶ 930. Under an ordinance providing that "no owner, or occupant, or other person having control" of premises "shall allow any nuisance to exist" thereon, an owner of the premises in possession of a tenant cannot be held criminally liable on its violation.—People v. Kent, 151 Mich. 134.

Penal actions under liquor laws, see also Intoxicating Liquors § 74.

¶ 931. Under section 3090, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5612, an action of debt will lie against a corporation for the violation of a municipal ordinance providing for a fine and imprisonment.—City of Owosso v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 688. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

§ 217. Civil or criminal nature of prosecution.

See also post ¶ 942.
With respect to form of verdict allowable, see post ¶ 965.

¶ 932. Prosecutions for offenses under city ordinances are not "criminal cases" as that term is used in the law.—People ex rel. Mixer v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 26 Mich. 422; People ex rel. Fennell v. Bay City Common Council, 36 Mich. 186.

¶ 933. Prosecutions for violations of city ordinances are not criminal cases within the meaning of the term as used in the general laws of the state.—People v. Smith, 146 Mich. 193.

¶ 934. Where a city charter authorizes a city to prosecute civil suits in its own name for the violation of city ordinances, a criminal prosecution before a justice for the violation of an ordinance cannot, on appeal, be transformed into a civil suit, nor can the original criminal sentence be affirmed on the civil side of the appellate court.—Webster v. City of Lansing, 47 Mich. 192.

¶ 935. Offenses against city ordinances are not "criminal cases," and the expenses of detaining persons arrested for such offenses are not county charges, but city expenses.—People ex rel. Mixer v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 26 Mich. 422.

§ 218. Jurisdiction of prosecution.

Place for trial of cases under ordinances, sittings at station houses, see Municipal Courts ¶ 43.

Proper court in which to have review of judgment, see post §§ 232, 233.
Criminal jurisdiction in general, see Indictment, III.
Distinction of cases under city ordinances from general subjects of police court jurisdiction, see also Municipal Courts ¶ 41.

¶ 936. It was not the intent of the legislature by the passage of Local Acts 1893, No. 408, which amended certain sections of the charter of the city of Detroit, to take from the police court of said city jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine cases arising under the city ordinances, which is conferred by Laws 1885, Act No. 161, § 10; where the expressed purpose of the later act was an amendment of a Local Act of 1883 establishing a charter for the city, and where there is no inconsistency with the law of 1885.—In re Busbey, 105 Mich. 64.

¶ 937. The Recorder's Court of Detroit has jurisdiction of prosecutions for violations of ordinances enacted by virtue of contract relations existing between the city and the owners of public franchises, as well as of those for violations of ordinances adopted under the police power of the common council, since both classes of ordinances are within the city's powers, and the court has by Detroit Charter of 1893, § 249, jurisdiction of trials for violation of ordinances. —People v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 132.

§ 219. Complaint, process, arrest, and bail.

Charging part of complaint, see post § 221.

Admission to bail by municipal court clerk, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15701.

¶ 938. Suits commenced by complaint and warrant for the violation of village ordinances, under How. St. § 2839, are in the nature of criminal proceedings, and may be commenced and prosecuted in the name of the people of the state of Michigan.—People v. Vinton, 82 Mich. 39.

¶ 939. Prosecution of an action for violation of a city ordinance to judgment in the name of the village, and, after its appeal, in the name of the people, is not ground for reversal, especially where no objection is made until after adverse verdict in appellate court.—People v. Vinton, 82 Mich. 39.

¶ 940. Under a village charter contemplating process for the arrest of one charged with rescuing impounded animals, substantially like the warrant of arrest for offenses triable by justices of the peace, a warrant commanding the officer to arrest the person named and bring him before the justice to answer a complaint filed against him, etc., "in a plea of debt for the penalty to their damage of $50," etc., is not regular.—Sheldon v. Hill, 33 Mich. 171.

¶ 941. Where the charter of a village fails to provide for the style of process issued to enforce its ordinances, but provides that the village shall in all things not otherwise provided for in the charter be governed and its powers and duties be defined by the general law for the incorporation of villages, a warrant for the arrest of an alleged violator of a village ordinance may properly run in the name of the people of the state of Michigan, as provided by How. St. § 2839.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 85 Mich. 502.

¶ 942. The charter of Charlotte requires suits for penalties under liquor ordinances to be brought in the corporate name. Held, that such suits are not criminal prosecutions, but penal actions on the part of the city, and cannot be maintained in the name of the people of the state of Michigan.—Cooper v. People, 41 Mich. 403.

¶ 943. The remark in Quinn v. Heisel, 40 Mich. 577, that the court "is not at present prepared to say that an ordinance of the city of Grand Rapids could not authorize arrests without process in cases not justified by common-law principles," was mere dictum.—Burroughs v. Eastman, 101 Mich. 419.

¶ 943a. A complaint for violating wharfing regulations is not valid which merely shows that a party has refused to obey the orders of a harbor-master; it must show such conduct as is a violation of the rights of navigation and aver such facts as would justify the orders and render disobedience wrongful.—Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221.

§ 220. Separation and joinder of charges and counts.

Rules for separation and joinder in general civil and criminal cases, see Pleading, II; Indictment, I, C.

¶ 944. Separate and distinct offenses, committed on different days, cannot be alleged in the same complaint and warrant.—Tiedke v. City of Saginaw, 43 Mich. 64.

¶ 945. Separate and distinct offenses, committed on separate days, may be charged in different counts of an information, but the prosecutor must elect on which count he will proceed.—Tiedke v. City of Saginaw, 43 Mich. 64.

§ 221. Substantial or charging part of complaint.

Substantial portions of indictments and informations, see Indictment, I, B.
Averments necessary to bring accused within statutory offense, see also Indictment ¶ 133.

¶ 946. A complaint under a city ordinance, charging a person as an "omnibus agent" with conduct forbidden to an omnibus agent when acting as a porter or runner for a hotel, but not averring that defendant was then acting in each capacity, is fatally defective.—Napman v. People, 19 Mich. 352.

¶ 947. A complaint and warrant, charging that on a specified day, and at "the McElvein House, in said village," the defendants used loud, boisterous and profane language, and that one of them delivered to the other a knife to enable him to make an assault upon a third person, and that he thereupon made such assault, whereby the defendants did commit and promote a disturbance, and did break the peace and quiet of said village, contrary to the provisions of a specified ordinance, entitled "an ordinance relative to disturbances and breaches of the peace," giving the date of its adoption, sufficiently set out an offense under How. St. § 2841.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 85 Mich. 502.

¶ 948. Where a complaint under a city ordinance punishing "any person who shall make any disturbance by which the peace and good order of the neighborhood are disturbed," etc., charges that the person complained of "was and is a disorderly person," for that she was on a specified day, at said city, "making and assisting in making a noise, disturbance, and improper diversion, by which the peace and good order of the neighborhood were disturbed," it is sufficient, and the words "disorderly person" may be treated as surplusage.—In re Bushey, 105 Mich. 64.

¶ 949. A complaint charging generally that the respondent was "guilty of indecent, insulting and immoral conduct, and behavior by peeking into the windows of" an occupied house, which was not his residence, sufficiently charges a violation of an ordinance against "indecent, insulting, or immoral conduct in any public street or elsewhere," though no unlawful or improper purpose is stated.—City of Grand Rapids v. Williams, 112 Mich. 247.

¶ 950. In a complaint under a city ordinance the place of the offense is sufficiently designated as "a house on the corner" of two specified streets within the city.—City of Grand Rapids v. Williams, 112 Mich. 247.

¶ 951. A complaint charging that defendant was "found loitering about in common barrooms and wandering about the streets by day and by night, without being able to give any satisfactory account of himself" for a period of two weeks, did not purport to charge vagrancy, and was therefore not subject to the objection that it failed to conform to the settled definition of vagrancy.—In re Stegenga, 133 Mich. 55.

Surplusage, see also ante ¶ 948.
Disability to try title to land in prosecutions under ordinances, see also Municipal Courts § 9.
Under indictments or informations, see Indictment, I, E.
Under civil pleadings, see Pleading, IX, X.

¶ 952. A city ordinance provided that moving picture and other shows should not be operated without a license and stated that no permit should be given them to show on Sunday. Defendant had a license and conducted his picture show on Sunday. He was prosecuted under the ordinance for running his show without a license. Held, the conviction must be reversed as the offense committed was not the one charged.—City of Lansing v. Brown, 172 Mich. 50.

§ 223. Pleas and objections to complaint.

Proper and available defenses, see ante § 215.
Pleas and objections to declarations, see Pleading, III, IV.
Pleas and objections to indictments, see Indictment, I, D, V.

¶ 953. In a prosecution before a justice of the peace for rescuing animals from a pound, the offenders should be required to plead to the charge contained in the warrant for arrest, rather than to the complaint on which the warrant was issued.—Sheldon v. Hill, 33 Mich. 171.

¶ 954. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon contrary to an ordinance, an objection that the warrant issued on a complaint based on information only, where it is shown that positive sworn testimony was taken by the justice before he issued the warrant, is waived by a plea of not guilty.—Village of Sparta v. Boorom, 129 Mich. 555.

§ 224. Time for trial and adjournments.

Continuances in ordinary civil and criminal cases, see Continuances; Indictment § 651.
Repudiation of postponement procured by attorney, see Attorneys ¶ 84.

¶ 955. Where the charter of a village fails to provide for or regulate the adjournment of causes commenced by warrant for the violation of ordinances, the proceedings are so far in their nature criminal, where commenced by the arrest, that the trial, unless otherwise provided for, should be controlled by the provisions of law relative to criminal proceedings before justices of the peace, where the statute authorizes the trial of the person arrested in justice's court, which trial should be had within one week after the return of the warrant, pursuant to How. St. § 7094, unless longer deferred for reasons stated in said section.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 85 Mich. 502.

¶ 956. The receipt of a telegram from an attorney as counsel for the village, and from an attorney who claimed to be the attorney for the defendants, but whose authority they denied, requesting a longer adjournment than one week, will not authorize such an adjournment.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 85 Mich. 502.

§ 225. Prosecutors and assistant counsel.

¶ 957. An objection on trial of an appeal from a conviction in justice's court for violation of a village ordinance, to the appearance by authority of the village attorney of an attorney who is not admitted to the bar, to prosecute the case, without a formal resolution of the village council, is properly overruled; no prejudice being shown on the part of such attorney.—People v. Vinton, 82 Mich. 39.

§ 226. Juries and jury trials.

General law of juries, see Jury.

Jury trial in criminal proceedings before justices of the peace, see Indictment § 652.

Propriety of jury trial notwithstanding waiver, see Jury, I.

Waiver of jury in prosecutions for breach of ordinances, see Jury § 10.

Jury trial as part of due process in prosecution for violation of ordinance, see also Constitutional Law § 131.

Duty of jury to follow instructions, see Instructions ¶ 13.

¶ 958. Juries in the Detroit recorder's court are not judges of the law and facts in prosecutions for violating ordinances, though in a police court they might be.—People v. Gardner, 136 Mich. 693, aff'd in 199 U. S. 325, 50 L. ed. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106.

¶ 959. In a prosecution for the violation of a city ordinance where the violation of the ordinance is admitted and the only questions upon which a verdict was sought by the defendant were those bearing upon the validity of the ordinance, the court may properly direct a verdict of guilty.—People v. Gardner, 143 Mich. 104.

§ 227. Evidence.

For the general law of evidence and witnesses, see Evidence; Examination of Witnesses; Trial, V; Witnesses; and for criminal evidence, see Indictment, VIII.

Judicial notice and subjects thereof, see Evidence, I.

Judicial notice of municipalities, see Evidence, I; Indictment § 128.

Sufficiency of evidence of existence of alley in prosecution for obstructing, see Highways ¶ 700.

¶ 960. On a trial before the court without a jury for depositing manure in an alley contrary to the ordinance, evidence that the manure piles were offensive to occupants of adjacent premises is immaterial, but the admission thereof must be regarded as harmless error where there is ample uncontradicted evidence to justify the conviction.—People v. Bennett, 83 Mich. 457.

¶ 961. Evidence that police officers and city officials have been lax and discriminating in their enforcement of a municipal ordinance is inadmissible upon the trial of one charged with a violation of such ordinance.—People v. Baker, 115 Mich. 199.

¶ 962. Where the gist of the offense against the defendants for violation of an ordinance is that by carrying red flags in a parade they infuriated the public, and caused disorder, evidence that the people of the city considered red flags as the symbol of anarchy is material.—People v. Burman, 154 Mich. 150.

¶ 963. It is competent to identify accused prosecuted for "indecent, insulting, or immoral conduct" contrary to an ordinance, to show that witnesses observed him in the act, and that a half or three quarters of an hour later they attempted to detain him, and that he broke away and escaped.—City of Grand Rapids v. Williams, 112 Mich. 247.

¶ 964. Evidence that, at a late hour, respondent left the public sidewalk, proceeded to a lighted residence some six feet distant, and looked into a window, the shade to which was raised from six to twelve inches, is sufficient to establish the offence, under an ordinance of "indecent, insulting or immoral conduct or behavior in any public street or elsewhere" in the city.—City of Grand Rapids v. Williams, 112 Mich. 247.

§ 228. Verdict and findings.

Direction of verdict, see also ante ¶ 959.

Judgment and sentence, see post § 229.

General law of verdicts and findings, see Verdicts and Findings.

¶ 965. While prosecutions for the violation of city ordinances are not criminal in the sense that they are the enforcement of general criminal laws they partake of the nature of criminal proceedings, including a verdict of guilty or not guilty as charged, so that the practice of securing by way of findings a number of special verdicts is unwarranted.—People v. Smith, 146 Mich. 193.

§ 229. Judgment or sentence, punishments and penalties.

Finality and character of judgment essential to review, see post § 235.

Judgment as bar to prosecution for crime, see Crimes § 18.

Judgment in action for penalty as bar or evidence in civil action, see Former Adjudication § 11.

Conclusiveness of decision that compliance with ordinance is mechanically impossible, see Former Adjudication ¶¶ 194, 195.

Unlawful commitment after trial and conviction as false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment § 16.

Costs and expenses, see post § 230.

Execution on judgment for penalty or fine, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXV, §§ 4, 41-43; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13396, 13433-13435.

Proper sentence and judgment in minor criminal cases, see Indictment § 656.

Arrest and imprisonment for debt, see generally Civil Arrest.

¶ 966. Where one is convicted before a justice of rescuing animals from a pound, a judgment of imprisonment forthwith, in case of nonpayment of the fine imposed, is void under a law which simply authorizes the immediate issue of execution commanding "the amount of the fine to be made of the defendant's property, if any can be found, and if not, then to commit the defendant to prison, if so adjudged according to law."—Sheldon v. Hill, 33 Mich. 171.

¶ 967. It seems that a woman cannot be imprisoned for a mere violation of a municipal ordinance where the act was not of a criminal nature.—City of Ishpeming v. Maroney, 49 Mich. 226.

¶ 968. In an action for false imprisonment of plaintiff, a woman, by defendants, a justice of the peace who sentenced her and the sheriff who executed the sentence, for violation of a municipal health ordinance prescribing a fine or imprisonment for a violation thereof, promulgated under authority of Comp. L. 1897, § 3131, How. 2nd Ed., § 5653, empowering the municipality to prescribe penalties for violation of any law, rule or regulation made by its board of health or any officer thereof and §§ 4412, 4459, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 3109, 3155, declaring any such violation a misdemeanor, held that such proceeding against plaintiff was not civil process within Comp. L. 1897, § 10342, How. 2nd Ed., § 13043, exempting a female from imprisonment on any process in any civil action, and verdict for defendants was properly directed.—Stewart v. Hart, 196 Mich. 137.

¶ 969. A conviction of keeping open saloon on Sunday, under a city ordinance repealed by the general liquor law of 1887 is of no force, and hence does not bar a prosecution under that statute.—People v. Furman, 85 Mich. 110.

§ 230. Costs and expenses.

See also ante ¶ 935.

City or county liability for costs and expenses, see also Counties § 33.

Expense of keeping prisoners as city or county charge, see Counties § 35.

Adjudgment of costs of prosecution against city on prosecution brought in name of people, see Indictment ¶ 2403.

¶ 970. Upon the setting aside of a verdict and the discharge of the respondent, found guilty of violating an ordinance in proceedings brought under Comp. L. 1897, § 2761, which provided for prosecution by warrant and in the name of the people and that such proceedings shall be governed by the law governing criminal proceedings in justice court, an award of costs of both courts to the defendant, entered in the formal order, will be set aside on motion.—Village of Sparta v. Boorom, 129 Mich. 555.

§ 231. Disposal of fines when realized.

Applicability of moneys received from fines and paid into county treasury for library purposes, see Counties § 38.

¶ 971. Fines collected by the city authorities of Bay City on prosecutions before the recorder for violations of city by-laws do not belong in the county treasury.—People ex rel. Fennell v. Bay City Common Council, 36 Mich. 186.

§ 232. Appeal and review.

Certiorari or exceptions as modes of review, see post §§ 233, 234.

Right to review and waiver of the right, see post § 235.

Record, transcript, and return, see post §§ 236, 237.

Practice and trial on appeal to circuit, see post § 238.

Scope and extent of review, see post § 239.

Harmless error and ground for reversal, see post § 241.

Appeal and review of criminal judgments in minor trials before justices and magistrates, see Indictment § 662 et seq.

¶ 972. The right of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court of a county in a prosecution for violation of a city ordinance does not exist at common law.—Crary v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 197 Mich. 452.

¶ 973. The right of appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace of a city in a prosecution for violation of an ordinance to the circuit court of the county is clearly conferred by the Home Rule Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, § 30, How. 2nd Ed., § 5471, providing that in all suits and prosecutions arising under the ordinances and charter of the city for which such justice is elected the right of appeal from such justice's court to the circuit court of the county shall be allowed as in case of appeal from justices' courts in analogous cases.—Crary v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 197 Mich. 452.

¶ 974. The right of appeal from a conviction in a justice court for violation of a city ordinance exists.—Crary v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 197 Mich. 452.

¶ 975. Convictions under city ordinances in the recorder's court of Detroit are not reviewable on writ of error.—People v. Jackson, 8 Mich. 78; Jackson v. People, 8 Mich. 262.

¶ 976. There may be a review by the supreme court upon a writ of error where after a conviction in the justice's court there has been an appeal to the circuit court, and a judgment there.—People v. Smith, 146 Mich. 193.

¶ 976a. Error is the appropriate remedy in most cases to review the final judgment of a court of law, and is appropriate after a conviction in the justice's court for the violation of a city ordinance where there has been an appeal and judgment in the circuit court.—People v. Smith, 146 Mich. 193.

¶ 977. Respondent was convicted of violating a village ordinance and sought to review the record of his conviction upon exceptions before sentence brought to the supreme court by writ of error. Held, his case should be dismissed, and the trial court advised to proceed to judgment.—People v. Kohler, 168 Mich. 148.

§ 233. ——Certiorari.

Right to seek review and waiver of right, see post § 235.
Scope and extent of review, see post § 240.
General law of certiorari and practice thereon, see Certiorari.

¶ 978. The statutory certiorari does not lie in special proceedings, as in the case of judgment for a penalty under a village by-law.—Warner v. Porter, 2 D. 358.

¶ 979. Where a municipal charter gives a person convicted under an ordinance a remedy by certiorari from the circuit court, or by appeal thereto, the supreme court cannot be called upon to review the proceedings by certiorari.—City of Ishpeming v. Maroney, 49 Mich. 226.

¶ 980. While mandamus may be the more appropriate remedy by which to compel the superior court of Grand Rapids to proceed to the trial of an appeal from a conviction in the police court for violation of a city ordinance erroneously deemed by it to be invalid, the same result is reached by certiorari, which has been held the proper remedy to review convictions for violations of city ordinances.—City of Grand Rapids v. Braudy, 105 Mich. 670.

¶ 981. The recorder's court of Detroit, when acting in proceedings for violations of city ordinances, is exercising a jurisdiction inferior to that of the circuit court, and convictions therein are, therefore, reviewable on certiorari from the circuit.—Swift v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 64 Mich. 479.

§ 234. Exceptions and reservation of questions.

See also ante ¶ 977.

¶ 982. Convictions under city ordinances cannot be reviewed on exceptions before sentence.—People v. Jackson, 8 Mich. 110; City of Grand Rapids v. Roberts, 48 Mich. 198; People v. Hymen, 167 Mich. 216.

¶ 983. Comp. L. 1871, ch. 262, permitting exceptions before judgment to be certified up in a criminal case, does not apply to convictions under city ordinances.—City of Grand Rapids v. Roberts, 48 Mich. 198.

¶ 984. Comp. L. 1897, § 11964, providing for exceptions before sentence to be certified to the supreme court in criminal cases, does not apply to convictions had under city ordinances.—People v. Smith, 146 Mich. 193.

¶ 985. The recorder of Detroit could not reserve for the opinion of the supreme court questions arising upon the trial of offenses against the city ordinances.—People v. Jackson, 8 Mich. 78.

§ 235. Right to review and waiver of right.

¶ 986. Where a defendant prosecuted by complaint and warrant as in a criminal proceeding for the violation of a village ordinance, pursuant to the general law for the incorporation of villages, has been acquitted, an appeal cannot be taken by the village.—Village of Northville v. Westfall, 75 Mich. 603.

¶ 987. No appeal lies on behalf of a city from a judgment of acquittal for the violation of a city ordinance.—City of Muskegon v. Brenan, 156 Mich. 41.

¶ 988. Certiorari will not lie to review an acquittal of a charge under a municipal ordinance.—City of Muskegon v. Brenan, 156 Mich. 41.

¶ 989. The action of the court in refusing to proceed with the trial of an appeal from a conviction in police court for the violation of a city ordinance, and the quashing of the proceedings on the ground that the ordinance is invalid, does not amount to an acquittal irreviewable by certiorari by the city, there having been no trial on the merits.—City of Grand Rapids v. Braudy, 105 Mich. 670.

¶ 990. Certiorari will not lie to review proceedings for the violation of a municipal ordinance wherein the judgment has been satisfied by the voluntary payment of the fine or penalty imposed.—People v. Leavitt, 41 Mich. 470; Powell v. People, 47 Mich. 108; City of Ishpeming v. Maroney, 49 Mich. 226.

¶ 991. Certiorari from the supreme court does not lie to set aside the judgment where a fine imposed has been voluntarily paid by a third person and the respondent released before the writ was taken out.—City of Ishpeming v. Maroney, 49 Mich. 226.

§ 236. Record, transcript, or return.

¶ 992. On certiorari to the recorder's court of Detroit to remove the proceedings on conviction for a violation of a city ordinance, it was held that the evidence was properly returned by the clerk of the court.—Jackson v. People, 9 Mich. 111.

¶ 993. The supreme court will not review and determine upon the merits a case for the violation of a city ordinance where the matter has come before it on exceptions before sentence where the bill of exceptions does not contain all the evidence.—People v. Smith, 146 Mich. 193; City of Muskegon v. Hanes, 146 Mich. 385.

¶ 994. A change of style in appealing a criminal prosecution so that the case on appeal shall appear to be a civil suit introduces a fatal contradiction of the record, and the defect cannot be cured by the statute of amendments.—Webster v. City of Lansing, 47 Mich. 192.

§ 237. ——Construction of record and presumptions thereon.

Rules for construction of record on appeal and intendments in favor of the judgment, see Appeal, XII, C: Indictment § 611 et seq.

¶ 995. In a prosecution for the violation of a city ordinance requiring hawkers and peddlers to procure a license, it appeared that defendant, with two others, was employed by one who was claimed to be an agent of the manufacturer, to sell an article manufactured in another state, but which was not sold in original packages. The officer who made the arrest testified that defendant admitted making the sale set up in the complaint, whereupon defendant's attorney remarked, "We don't dispute the sale; we admit," and then proceeded to state as an admission what was apparently his opening of defense in the case, and upon the strength of which he claimed in the supreme court that the evidence failed to show that defendant was a hawker and a peddler. Held that said statement of counsel cannot, in the absence of both oath and assent by counsel for the people to its truth, be treated as evidence or as admissions.—People v. Thomson, 103 Mich. 80.

¶ 996. On error to a conviction of its agent for peddling without a license, the licensing ordinance being assailed as interfering with interstate commerce, the supreme court may assume that the principal, a foreign corporation, carrying on business in Michigan, has been duly admitted to do business according to the requirements of the statutes, where otherwise it would appear from the evidence to have been violating such statutes.—People v. Smith, 147 Mich. 391.

§ 238. Practice and trial on appeal to circuit.

Practice in criminal trials appealed from justices, see Indictment § 665.

¶ 997. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3100, providing that on an appeal to the circuit court from a conviction for violation of an ordinance, the proceedings shall be the same as on appeal in criminal cases from justices of the peace, the question of trying defendants jointly or separately, rests in the discretion of the court, and is not open to review by the upper court.—People v. Burman, 154 Mich. 150.

§ 239. Scope and extent of review.

Issues and manner of trial in circuit on appeal, see ante § 238.

For analogies to be drawn from scope of issues on appeal with retrial of the facts in justice of the peace civil cases, see Justices of the Peace, V, C.

§ 240. ——On certiorari.

Office and scope of review by certiorari in general, see Certiorari.

¶ 998. Upon certiorari to review a conviction for violation of a city ordinance the sufficiency of the evidence will not be inquired into.—Jackson v. People, 9 Mich. 111; Lynch v. People, 16 Mich. 472.

¶ 999. A judgment of a court without a jury, on prosecution for violating an ordinance, that the ordinance is reasonable and valid, based upon the facts shown by the evidence, cannot be reviewed on certiorari in the absence of specific findings by the court.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 682, per Montgomery, J., in concurring opinion.

§ 241. Harmless error and grounds for reversal.

Misnomer of prosecutor, see also ante ¶¶ 939, 994.

General law of harmless error, see Harmless Error; Indictment, XV.

¶ 1000. The admission, in a prosecution for violating a city ordinance, of immaterial evidence, is harmless error where there is ample uncontradicted evidence to justify conviction.—People v. Bennett, 83 Mich. 457.

¶ 1001. In an action for violating an ordinance by allowing a nuisance "to exist and remain" on the premises, the conviction of the tenant jointly with the owner is not error prejudicial to the tenant, though the owner should not have been convicted.—People v. Kent, 151 Mich. 134.

¶1. The police court of Detroit was the creature of an independent statute, and was perpetuated by a clause in the schedule of the state constitution; it does not derive its authority from the city charter.—People ex rel. Fennell v. Bay City Common Council, 36 Mich. 186.

¶2. Municipal courts are not created by the Constitution, art. VII, § 10, but are authorized and permitted, and they derive all their powers from the legislature.—Dunham v. Tilma, 191 Mich. 688.

¶3. The superior court of Grand Rapids is a municipal court and not a circuit court.—Dunham v. Tilma, 191 Mich. 688.

¶4. The superior court of Detroit was a court of original jurisdiction, proceeding according to the course of the common law, and as to civil jurisdiction was of the same class as the circuit courts.—Wyandotte Rolling Mills Co. v. Robinson, 34 Mich. 428.

¶5. The superior courts of Grand Rapids and Detroit in regard to the subject-matter of suits are of limited but not of inferior jurisdiction; and by plea to and trial upon the merits defendant waived all right to object to the want of averment or showing of jurisdiction.—Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 38 Mich. 461; Gott v. Brigham, 41 Mich. 227.

¶6. A municipal court is presumptively inferior to a circuit court so far as its jurisdiction is not of equal character.—Swift v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 64 Mich. 479.

¶7. A municipal court does not change its relative position to other courts by being invested with new powers which those courts cannot control.—Swift v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 64 Mich. 479.

¶8. The Detroit charter of 1883 repeals all conflicting acts, and gives the recorder's court exclusive jurisdiction of all prosecutions for offenses arising under it or under any ordinance. All cases theretofore triable in the central station police court arose under the charter; and all breaches of the peace had to be defined by ordinance. Held that, in the absence of any provision for the continuance of the central station court, it was abolished.—Roberts' Case, 51 Mich. 548.

Clerk of city justice courts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14744 et seq.

Probation officers, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2035-2045.

¶ 12. The officers of the recorder's court of the City of Detroit are not within the civil service charter amendment of the city.—Detroit Civil Service Commission v. Engle, 187 Mich. 83.

¶ 13. The officers of the recorder's court of the City of Detroit are under the control of the court.—Detroit Civil Service Commission v. Engle, 187 Mich. 83.

§ 4. Substitute and assistant judges.

See also Judges, IV.

Designation of circuit judge to sit as recorder of Detroit, see Judges ¶ 43.

¶ 14. Laws 1879, § 12, p. 70, the police-court act of Grand Rapids, provides that, in case of the "absence, inability or disability" of the police judge, the assistant justice may act in his place. Held, that where a complaint was made before the judge, and the depositions of witnesses were taken before the assistant, and the judge afterwards certified that defendants waived further examination and committed them for trial, the proceeding might be sustained, especially as commitment may be made where examination is waived.—People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 54.

§ 5. Compensations and salaries.

Salaries and emoluments of offices in general, see Officers, VIII.

Salaries of judges of Detroit recorder's court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14638.

Salaries of superior court judges in Grand Rapids, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14687.

Statutory salaries of recorders and superior court judges, and power of supervisors or council to increase same, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12141.

Salaries and fees of city justices of the peace, statutory provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14729.

¶ 15. The increasing of the salaries of the judges of the recorder's court of the City of Detroit, which are fixed by statute, by a city ordinance, as authorized by the charter amendment of November 3, 1914, does not constitute an interference with the jurisdiction of such court in matters of state concern.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

¶ 16. Inasmuch as the salaries of the police justices and clerk of the police court of the City of Detroit are fixed by § 764 of the city charter, the city may not by ordinance fix the salaries of such officers.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

¶ 17. Inasmuch as the charter of the City of Detroit, § 764, provides that the council may fix the salaries of the assistant clerks of the police courts in amounts not to exceed the salary of the clerk, the salaries of such officers may accordingly be fixed by ordinance.—Burton v. City of Detroit, 190 Mich. 195.

II. JURISDICTION AND POWERS.

§ 6. In general; limits of jurisdiction.

Power in granting changes of venue, see post § 12.

Power to enter judgments by confession under warrant of attorney, see post ¶ 56.

Pleading the jurisdictional facts, see post § 14.

Transfer from circuit to superior court and retransfer, see post § 15 et seq.

Power to sentence to particular prisons for crime, see Crimes § 29.
Power to call grand jury, see Grand Jury § 1.
Jurisdiction of prosecutions for violation of ordinances, see Municipal Corporations § 218.
Jurisdiction of justices of the peace, see Justices of the Peace, III; Indictment, III.
Powers in arresting, examining and committing prisoners, and in admitting to bail, see Arrest, Commitment and Bail.
Power and jurisdiction to punish for contempt, see Contempt §§ 19, 20.
Legislation encroaching on jurisdiction of constitutional courts, see Constitutional Law §§ 54, 56.
Legislative power under the constitution to confer or change jurisdiction, see Constitutional Law § 56.
Power of police judge to issue search warrant to be executed beyond city limits within county, see Searches and Seizures ¶ 4.
Jurisdiction of prosecutions for violations of ordinances, provisions of statutes, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14654.
Jurisdiction of claims under Water Craft Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14893.
Condemnation proceedings by cities, jurisdiction of superior courts and recorder's courts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3377.
Jurisdiction of proceedings for separation of highway and railroad grades, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4759.
Power to solemnize marriages, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11368.
Jurisdiction of superior court of Grand Rapids, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14694.
Jurisdiction and powers of city justices of the peace, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14730, 14731.
Powers of judges of recorder's court at chambers, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14650.
Powers of recorder's court or judge thereof to regulate practice by rules or to regulate admission of spectators to court room during trials, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14650, 14651.

¶ 17a. The superior court of Grand Rapids was created by the legislature by authority of Const. art. VI, § 1, and has only such powers and jurisdiction as the legislature conferred upon it.—Nichols v. Judge of Superior Court of Grand Rapids, 130 Mich. 187.

¶ 18. The recorder's court of the city of Detroit is a court of limited jurisdiction, deriving its authority from the statute only.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 195 Mich. 269.

¶ 19. Municipal courts may have jurisdiction of the kinds of cases originally triable in the circuit courts, so long as no constitutional authority of the circuit courts is interfered with.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 20. Municipal courts are created only for the common judicial business of a municipal tribunal.—Scott v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 58 Mich. 311.

¶ 21. Section 18, c. 29, Act No. 648, Local Acts 1907, providing that the municipal court justice of Kalamazoo shall, as against all other justices of the county, have exclusive jurisdiction where both parties to the suit reside in the city, gave to the municipal court justice exclusive jurisdiction from the time when the act became operative; and section 3 of the same chapter, providing that he shall be considered the successor in office for all the justices in the city as their respective terms of office expire, does not mean that other justices in the city have concurrent jurisdiction until their terms expire.—Striffing v. Baden, 155 Mich. 49.

¶ 22. History and jurisdiction of the mayor's court of Detroit considered.—Welles v. Mayor, etc., of City of Detroit, 2 D. 77; People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328; Swift v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 64 Mich. 479.

¶ 23. The mayor's court of Detroit had no jurisdiction of attachments under R. S. 1838.—Welles v. City of Detroit, 2 D. 77.

¶ 24. The twofold jurisdiction of the recorder's court of Detroit over prosecutions for offenses committed within the city against the general laws of the state, and over prosecutions for violations of city ordinances, explained. In the former class of cases the recorder acts under general laws and exercises the power of a circuit judge; in the latter class he acts in the capacity of a municipal officer simply.—People v. Jackson, 8 Mich. 78; People v. Jackson, 8 Mich. 110.

¶ 25. Under Laws of 1875, Act No. 49, § 13, sub. 11, as amended by Laws of 1877, Act No. 147, How. St. § 6576, the superior court had no jurisdiction in bastardy cases.—People v. Harty, 49 Mich. 490.

¶ 26. Proceedings under the bastardy act are within the jurisdiction of the police court of Grand Rapids, which can hear all cases of a quasi criminal nature that were formerly within the jurisdiction of justices. But their determination by the police justice is not necessarily final.—People v. Phalen, 49 Mich. 492.

¶ 27. Under Laws 1885, Act No. 161 (How. St. § 6591*f*7), the police court of Detroit has authority to examine a person on the charge of bastardy, and bind him over for trial at the circuit court.—People v. Kaminsky, 73 Mich. 637.

¶ 28. The collection of municipal demands against other corporations is civil and not criminal business, and properly belongs to the city attorney and counselor, and not to the police justice.—People ex rel. McBride v. Kent County Sup'rs, 38 Mich. 421.

¶ 29. The jurisdiction conferred upon the recorder of Corunna is that of a justice of the peace (Laws 1869, Act No. 265), and he therefore cannot entertain an action for malicious prosecution.—Sheldon v. Sullivan, 45 Mich. 324.

¶ 30. The superior court of Grand Rapids has not exclusive jurisdiction of a civil action against the superintendent, captain and lieutenant of police of such city, they not being "city officers" within the meaning of the superior court act (How. St. § 6576). —Burroughs v. Eastman, 93 Mich. 433.

¶ 31. The police court of the city of Grand Rapids, established under Laws 1873, Act No. 3, subsequently repealed, has jurisdiction under Laws 1885, §§ 5, 6, giving to the police judge all the powers and authority of a justice of the peace, except in the trial of civil cases, to examine and hold to bail persons charged with violating the liquor-law or with other misdemeanors not triable by justices of the peace.—People v. Gooseman, 80 Mich. 611.

¶ 32. A police justice of Detroit cannot admit to bail one whom he has bound over to the recorder's court for trial (How. St. § 6591*g*1).—Mills v. Chambers, 91 Mich. 521.

¶ 33. Whether the recorder of Detroit has authority in any case to issue a habeas corpus to be served out of the city or county, quære; he certainly cannot take a prisoner out of the reform school who has been lawfully sentenced there, unless to testify as a witness.—In re Mason, 8 Mich. 70.

§ 7. Residence of parties and territorial limits.

Necessity that fact of residence appear in the record of the process, see post § 13.
Pleading residence, see post § 14.
Place for bringing actions of a transitory nature, see Venue, I.

¶ 34. Municipal courts, though not inferior tribunals, are limited in their jurisdiction by the residence of parties; and their jurisdiction should be shown on the record, though their judgments and decrees are binding until reversed even if it is not shown.—Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 38 Mich. 461.

¶ 35. The constitutional authority to establish local courts in cities contemplates that in transitory actions they can exercise jurisdiction over persons not shown to be residents but who are served with process within the municipal limits.—Elliott v. Farwell, 44 Mich. 186.

¶ 36. In transitory actions, residence of the defendant within the city was not necessary to give jurisdiction where personal service has been had.—Elliott v. Farwell, 44 Mich. 186.

¶ 37. Under the act of 1879 relating to the superior court of Detroit that court has no jurisdiction unless at least one of the parties resides in Detroit.—Hagar v. Coup, 50 Mich. 54.

¶ 38. The superior court of Detroit has jurisdiction of an action for false imprisonment if plaintiff was a resident of, and the action complained of as an arrest was made in, the city.—Hill v. Taylor, 50 Mich. 549.

¶ 39. The superior court of Detroit had no jurisdiction in divorce where complainant did not reside in Detroit.—Canniff v. Canniff, 49 Mich. 478.

¶ 40. The municipal courts provided for in Const. art. VI, § 1, were intended for the benefit of the cities in which they should be established, and are limited in their jurisdiction; it was not the purpose to give them a jurisdiction coextensive with the county or materially affect the jurisdiction of the circuit courts.—Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 38 Mich. 461.

¶ 40a. An order for the payment of alimony is not such original process as need be served within the territorial limits over which a municipal court has jurisdiction.—Edison v. Edison, 56 Mich. 185.

¶ 40b. Process from the superior court of Detroit cannot be served outside of the county.—Dewey v. Central Car & Mfg. Co., 42 Mich. 399.

§ 8. Place or time for court or sittings.

Terms and times for holding recorder's court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14655.

¶ 41. The police justice of Detroit has no general powers to act when and where he chooses; and cases under city ordinances are not part of his general business as a justice of the peace.—In re Way, 41 Mich. 299.

¶ 42. The power of the police justice of Detroit to sit at the station-house is exceptional and limited; it is confined to the cases of persons under arrest, who are entitled to as speedy an examination as possible, and who cannot be deprived of any right they would have at the regular sessions of the court.—In re Way, 41 Mich. 299.

¶ 43. The former charter of Detroit (see Laws 1861, Act No. 136, § 35) authorized the police justice to sit at the station-house at prescribed times, where "he shall summarily examine into the case of every person confined in said station-house, and if he adjudge any person guilty of vagrancy, disorderly conduct, or any violation of the city ordinances relative to breaches of the peace, he may convict," etc., and inflict the punishment authorized by this section. Held, that the station-house sessions were not designed for the trial of ordinance cases, and that this section excluded any prosecution for vagrancy under the ordinances; that it did not refer to vagrancy and disorderly conduct in connection with the ordinances; and that even in regard to breaches of the peace punishment was to be inflicted under the charter, and not the ordinances, which were merely referred to as restrictive and descriptive, and not as grounds of procedure.—In re Way, 41 Mich. 299.

§ 9. Title to land.

Title to land as extraneous to justice's jurisdiction, see Justices of the Peace § 20 et seq.

¶ 44. Questions of title cannot be tried by a municipal court under city ordinances.—Beecher v. People, 38 Mich. 289.

¶ 45. Where it appears on the face of a prosecution for the obstruction of an alley that the question of title is not incidental, but is the main point in issue, the case is beyond the jurisdiction of the recorder's court of Detroit, and the rights of the parties must be settled in the public courts.—Jackson v. People, 9 Mich. 112.

¶ 46. Questions of title cannot be tried in the recorder's court of Detroit in a prosecution for obstructing and encumbering a public alley.—People v. Stott, 90 Mich. 343.

¶ 47. Title to lands cannot be tried in a prosecution in the recorder's court of Detroit for obstructing a street claimed to be the land in question.—People v. Wolverine Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 455.

¶ 48. In order to oust the jurisdiction of the recorder's court of Detroit to try title to land, it must appear that by a bona fide contention the question is involved; and that does not appear where the prosecution is for obstructing a highway constituting the locus in quo and there is a clear showing that a highway exists there, and that the defendants recognized its existence.—People v. Wolverine Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 455.

¶ 49. The superior court of Grand Rapids has no separate and original jurisdiction in partition of lands outside of the city; but it has jurisdiction of proceedings for a partnership accounting concerning land not in Grand Rapids, if either party resides in the city.—Godfrey v. White, 43 Mich. 171.

§ 10. Chancery powers.

¶ 50. The superior court of Grand Rapids, sitting in equity, has jurisdiction to determine ownership of a homestead, to construe a will, and to instruct and direct the trustee with respect to a trust estate thereunder.—Draper v. Brown, 153 Mich. 120.

¶ 51. An order of the recorder's court of the city of Detroit that building contractors refrain from continuing with their work until the decision in such court of a case relating to a violation of the building code operates as an injunction in restraining such contractors from proceeding with the work of the erection of the building, and is beyond the jurisdiction of such court, as the authority to grant injunctions is inherent in a court of equity, and the recorder's court has, under Local Acts 1883, Act No. 326, as amended, providing for such court, no equitable jurisdiction.—Adler v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 197 Mich. 81. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

§ 11. Appellate jurisdiction.

Applicability to appeal cases of act authorizing transfers from circuit court, see post § 16.

¶ 52. The superior court of Grand Rapids can have no jurisdiction of appeals from justices' courts.—Allen v. Kent Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 474.

¶ 53. The Detroit superior court had no jurisdiction of appeals from findings of commissioners in probate cases.—People ex rel. Schratz v. Detroit Superior Judge, 31 Mich. 407.

Prepayment of costs before commencing suit in superior court of Grand Rapids, see Jud. Act, chap. XLV, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13670.
Fees to be prepaid before commencing suit in superior court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14692.

¶ 54. A jury for a municipal court may properly be chosen from the municipality instead of the body of the county.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 55. In granting a change of venue, the recorder's court of Detroit has the same power as the Circuit Court.—Glinnan v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 173 Mich. 674.

¶ 56. The Detroit superior court has, in its discretion, power to enter judgment upon confession under warrant of attorney without exacting proof of the warrant, when the time is not above a year and a day.—Elliott v. Ives, 44 Mich. 190.

§ 13. Process, service and appearance.

Service of process outside jurisdictional territory of the court, see ante § 7, ¶ 40b.
General law of civil process and appearance, see Process; Appearance.
Record showing of service on one codefendant in Grand Rapids to support jurisdiction of the superior court of Grand Rapids, see also Courts § 79.

Appearance as bar to mandamus to dismiss cause for want of jurisdictional residence, see Mandamus ¶ 34a.
Provisions relative to process from superior court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14695.

¶ 57. In order to confer jurisdiction on the Grand Rapids superior court it must appear upon the face of the process or declaration that one of the parties resides in Grand Rapids and in the court's jurisdiction.—Denison v. Smith, 33 Mich. 155; Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 38 Mich. 461.

¶ 58. If, without any averment or showing of jurisdiction by plaintiff, defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction by pleading the general issue and going to trial on the merits, the judgment binds.—Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 38 Mich. 461.

¶ 59. The power of the court to reach a defendant beyond the city is confined to cases where one at least of the defendants is served within it. There must be proof of service within the city, and a return of "not found" as to those who are without, before plaintiff can sue out further process or deliver a declaration to be served out of the city upon the latter. Service out of the city cannot be made upon an absent joint-defendant until service has been made and proved upon the other in Grand Rapids.—Denison v. Smith, 33 Mich. 155.

§ 14. Pleadings.

Pleading and going to trial as waiving jurisdictional questions of residence, see ante § 13.
General law of pleading, see Pleading.
Time to appear and plead to prevent default, see also Defaults § 3, ¶ 16.
Sufficiency of declaration to show jurisdiction for basis of default, see also Defaults § 1, ¶ 3.

¶ 60. Since the passing in 1879 of the law changing the jurisdiction of the superior court of Detroit, by confining it in transitory actions to cases where one at least of the parties resides in that city (Pub. Acts 1879, p. 90), it seems that the declaration should show the jurisdiction of the court in the cause by proper averments of the residence of at least one of the parties within the city, and that a judgment by default where the proceedings fail to show the jurisdiction of the court cannot be sustained.—Bagley v. Pridgeon, 42 Mich. 550.

¶ 61. Where, in a suit by a resident of or one doing business in Detroit, the declaration describes the plaintiff as "of the city of Detroit" it is sufficient.—Elliott v. Farwell, 44 Mich. 186.

§ 15. Transfer of causes from circuit court and retransfer.

Procedure and bond for removal, see post § 17.
Nontransferability of appeal cases, see post § 16.
Transfers and successions in jurisdiction of courts, see Courts § 67.
Mandamus to correct improper transfer or denial of transfer, see Mandamus ¶ 262.
Statutory provisions as to removals of causes in superior court of Grand Rapids, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14702 et seq.

¶ 62. Under Laws 1875, Act No. 49, establishing the superior court of Grand Rapids, chancery causes in which some of the parties resided out of the city were not removable from the circuit court to superior court.—People ex rel. Jones v. Kent Circuit Judge, 35 Mich. 494.

¶ 63. The amendment of 1877 (Laws 1877, Act No. 147), in so far as it attempts to authorize a transfer of causes from the circuit to said superior court after the former has entered upon the cause upon the merits, is inoperative.—Heath v. Kent Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 372.

¶ 64. Causes may be transferred by stipulation between the parties actually before the court, and notwithstanding the nonassent of absent defendants who have not been brought into court. In an action against a principal and two sureties a stipulation made by plaintiff's attorney and by one of the sureties and the other's attorney, the principal himself not having been served and not appearing, was upheld.—Goebel v. Stevenson, 35 Mich. 172.

¶ 65. An application for the transfer to the superior court of Detroit, made after the act establishing said court had taken effect and a judge thereof elected, could not be denied on the ground that the court was not fully organized, the time for holding its first term not having arrived.—People ex rel. Turner v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 5.

¶ 65a. Foreclosure proceedings pending in the Wayne circuit court at the taking effect of the act establishing the superior court of Detroit were removable to the latter court under that act.—Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622.

¶ 66. An actual resident of Detroit, after service upon him within the city of the declaration in a personal action begun by a resident of another county, could remove the case to the superior court.—Butler v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 654.

¶ 67. Statutory proceedings to take charge of and administer assigned estates are special and peculiar, and not like an ordinary suit in chancery. And they are not removable to a court of merely municipal jurisdiction from the court which is designated throughout the statute as the proper one to take cognizance of them.—Scott v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 58 Mich. 311.

¶ 68. Upon filing a bill for divorce in the circuit court for Kent county, a preliminary injunction restraining the defendant from disposing of his property, was granted ex parte. On the following day a petition for temporary alimony was filed, and, together with the usual subpoena to appear and answer and the injunction, was served upon the defendant, who, three days later, and before any further proceedings had been had in the case, caused his appearance to be entered, and filed a petition and bond for the removal of the case to the superior court of Grand Rapids. Held, that the case had not proceeded so far that a removal could not be made under How. St. § 6584.—Wood v. Kent Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 378.

§ 16. ——Appeal and certiorari causes pending in circuit.

¶ 69. Laws 1877, Act No. 147, makes no provision for a transfer of appeals from justices from the circuit to the superior court of Grand Rapids.—Allen v. Kent Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 474.

¶ 70. Appeals from commissioners on estates of deceased persons were not transferable; the circuit court alone has jurisdiction thereof.—People ex rel. Schratz v. Detroit Superior Judge, 31 Mich. 407.

§ 17. ——Procedure and bond for removal.

¶ 71. The fact that parties were residents of the city of Grand Rapids sufficiently appeared from the allegation of such fact in a petition for transfer of the cause to the superior court of that city, in the absence of any denial of the fact by the return or otherwise.—Wood v. Kent Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 378.

¶ 72. A removal bond, otherwise sufficient in form, will not be invalid by reason of the omission, in the obligation thereof, of the names of the obligors, it being clear enough from the whole instrument who are bound by it, and after performance of the condition the bond is functus officio, and irregularities therein do not warrant dismissal of the cause.—People ex rel. Muir v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 28 Mich. 266.

Criminal jurisdiction of recorder's court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14643.

Applicability to recorder's court of statutes for prosecution on information for crime, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15768.

¶ 73. The circuit court being a court of broader jurisdiction than the recorder's court of Detroit defects in the formation of the grand jury cannot be considered by the recorder, who must take indictments sent to him from the circuit court as valid if on their face they appear valid.—People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

¶ 1. The use by a person of different names is immaterial where the question is one of identity only, and the identity is clearly established.—Boyce v. Danz, 29 Mich. 146.

¶ 2. A girl who has been practically, though not formally, adopted into a family, in pursuance of an understanding that she should be in all things as a daughter, may use the name as her own in bringing suit against the head of the family.—Watson v. Watson, 49 Mich. 540.

¶ 3. One sued by actual service of process under a name by which he is called and known may be held upon a judgment under that name.—Field v. Plummer, 75 Mich. 437.

¶ 4. "Voigt Brewery Company" is not and cannot be the name of a natural person.—Voigt Brewery Co. v. Pacifico, 139 Mich. 284.

¶ 5. A bastard child can only have a name by reputation or baptism, and does not take the mother's name unless gained by reputation.—Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71.

¶ 6. A change of name does not necessarily destroy identity so long as that to which the name pertains remains the same.—Perkins v. Keller, 43 Mich. 53.

¶ 7. The fact that one who contracted in the name of O'Connor calls herself Connor is immaterial where she is known by both names and the identity is clearly made out.—Hibernia Ins. Co. v. O'Connor, 29 Mich. 241.

§ 2. Initials and descriptive additions.

¶ 8. An abbreviation which, according to the common understanding, fully expresses the name thereby intended, is sufficient.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Tisdale, 1 D. 59.

¶ 9. The middle initial in a name is of no consequence.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 10. It seems that there is no rule of law which makes an invariable distinction between the written signs for I and J.—Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68.

§ 3. Identity and variance in names and presumptions and evidence.

Use of two similar but not identical names, see ante ¶ 7.

Similarity in sound overcoming misspelling or variance in spelling of names, see post § 4.

Real party to contract where names of two parties are identical, see Contracts § 11.

Misnomer or misspelling of name on ballot, see Elections § 77.

Appointment naming "William R." intending "Robert R.," see also Drains § 36.

Amendment of pleadings to cure misnomer, see Pleading, VI.

¶ 11. Identity of name raises the presumption of identity of person, unless circumstances cast doubt on it.—Goodell v. Hibbard, 32 Mich. 47.

¶ 12. Identity of persons is prima facie established by the identity of names.—Atwood v. Sault Ste. Marie Light, Heat & Power Co., 148 Mich. 224.

¶ 13. The fact that the grantor named in a deed was in state prison when the deed was executed has no force to cast a doubt upon his identity with a devisee of the same name.—Goodell v. Hibbard, 32 Mich. 47.

¶ 14. It is not a legal presumption that where the family name and initials are the same the persons are identical.—Bennett v. Libhart, 27 Mich. 489.

¶ 15. The identity of a person sued on a transcript of a foreign judgment may be presumed if his full name is identical with that of the party against whom it was recovered.—Campbell v. Wallace, 46 Mich. 320.

¶ 16. The record of a deed purporting to be signed by Harmon Sherman, and to be acknowledged by Hiram Sherman, is not admissible to prove a conveyance by Hiram Sherman. There can be no presumption, in the absence of proof, that the two names belong to the same person.—Boothroyd v. Engles, 23 Mich. 19.

¶ 17. Where the parties in ejectment claim under a person of the same name, and there is evidence to support but none to contradict, the inference of identity, it is reasonable to assume that it was the same individual.—Eames v. McGregor, 43 Mich. 313.

¶ 18. In an action for criminal conversation, proof that the plaintiff's full name is John Gottlieb Kimmell, and that the woman he claims as his wife is known by the name of Philopena Kimmell, and that her maiden name was Utz, is some evidence of the identity of these persons with those named in a marriage certificate as John Gottlieb Kimmel, and Sabrina Philopena Bauchle, born Utz, and the weight of the evidence is only for the jury.—Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 126.

¶ 19. Ashhel Green, "of New York," and a person of the same name "of the township of Palisades, in the county of Bergen, and state of New Jersey," were presumed to be the same person where they followed in a chain of title.—Tillotson v. Webber, 96 Mich. 144.

¶ 20. A deed purporting to have been made by William Hommel was sustained as the deed of Wendelin Hommel on evidence that the grantor was known by the former name and answered to it.—Hommel v. Devinney, 89 Mich. 522.

¶ 21. The law presumes that in executing instruments parties use their real names.

and does not presume them to have different names. The record of a deed purporting to be signed by Harmon Sherman, and to be acknowledged by Hiram Sherman, is not admissible to prove a conveyance by Hiram Sherman. The signing of a deed is as necessary as any other part of it, and only the signer can acknowledge it as grantor. There can be no presumption, in the absence of proof, that the two names belong to the same person.—Boothroyd v. Engles, 23 Mich. 19.

¶ 22. Jonathan and John are not, in contemplation of law, the same.—Moore v. Graham, 58 Mich. 25.

¶ 23. In an action by Isaac N. Gage upon a guaranty of collection by one Reed of certain promissory notes made by one Cole, it was held competent to admit in evidence the proceedings and judgment against Cole to enforce collection of the notes, though those proceedings were taken in the name of Newton Gage as plaintiff, where it is shown that plaintiff's name is Isaac Newton Gage, and that he is the same person named as Newton Gage in the proceedings against Cole.—Reed v. Gage, 33 Mich. 179.

¶ 24. Where the issue in ejectment is solely as to the identity of the Indian woman who selected the land in controversy, and for whom the patent issued by the government was intended, it was proper, the evidence being conflicting, to refuse to direct a verdict for plaintiff on proof of title emanating from an Indian woman of that name.—Litchfield v. Ripley, 73 Mich. 464.

§ 4. ——Idem sonans.

Application of rule idem sonans in election ballots, see Elections § 77.
Sufficiency of name in warrant, name idem sonans, see Arrest ¶¶ 53, 54.
Dunton for Denton in published notice in attachment, see Attachment ¶ 220.

¶ 25. In regard to a grantee in a deed, if two names, although spelled differently, sound alike, they are to be regarded as the same.—Ensley v. Coolbaugh, 160 Mich. 299.

¶ 26. If a foreigner's identity is in doubt by reason of varying modes of spelling his name, whether the sounds of the various forms, e. g., Boyce and Bice, as pronounced by foreigners, are not sufficiently identical to make the rule of idem sonans applicable, quære.—Boyce v. Danz, 29 Mich. 146.

¶ 27. Dickson and Dixon are idem sonans.—Reading v. Waterman, 46 Mich. 107.

¶ 28. Finnegan and Finegan are idem sonans.—People ex rel. Finnegan v. Mayworm, 5 Mich. 146.

¶ 29. Kenney and Kinney are idem sonans.—Kinney v. Harrett, 46 Mich. 87.

¶ 30. Trowbridge and Trobridge are idem sonans.—Buhl v. Trowbridge, 42 Mich. 44.

¶ 31. The proper names "Amel" and "Amiel," and "Brailey" and "Brearley," are idem sonans.—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

¶ 32. The Indian names "Che-gaw-ge-quay" and "Che-gaw-go-quay" may be regarded as of the same sound.—Brown v. Quinland, 75 Mich. 289.

¶ 33. Marcier and Macier are idem sonans.—Detroit v. Macier, 117 Mich. 76.

¶ 34. The name Christian Ott is not idem sonans with O. H. Christian.—Ott v. Brissette, 137 Mich. 717.

¶ 35. A deed running to a grantee named Kenney may be offered in evidence by a party named Kinney, the principle idem sonans applying.—Kinney v. Harrett, 46 Mich. 87.

¶ 36. A deed to grantee is not invalidated from the fact the name is spelled "Ansley" instead of "Ensley."—Ensley v. Coolbaugh, 160 Mich. 299.

¶ 1. In this country those waters are regarded as navigable in law which are navigable in fact, whether tidal or not.—Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18; The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 557, 19 L. ed. 999, reversing Brown Adm. 193; Fed. Cas. No. 8564.

¶ 2. Navigable waters at the common law are those where the tide ebbs and flows.—Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18; Attorney General ex rel. Muskegon Booming Co. v. Evart Booming Co., 34 Mich. 462.

¶ 3. The Ordinance of 1787, in providing that the "navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying places between them, shall be common highways, and forever free," etc., did not by its terms, or in the spirit of its enactment, dignify every little rill or brook whose waters finally reached these great rivers into a navigable stream. It was intended to and did apply only to such streams as were then common highways for canoes or batteaux in the commerce between the northwestern wilderness and the settled portions of the United States and foreign countries, and as to such rivers not then in use as would by law be embraced in the definition of "navigable waters."—Burroughs v. Whitwam, 59 Mich. 279.

¶ 4. The term "navigable waters" as used in Comp. L. 1857, § 5944, How. St. § 9420

(relating to punishment of crimes) is not confined to waters where the tide ebbs and flows.—Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320.

¶ 5. Rivers are navigable when they are used or susceptible of use in their ordinary condition as water highways over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes.—The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 557, 19 L. ed. 999, reversing Brown Adm. 193; Fed. Cas. No. 3564.

¶ 6. Water may be navigable without a current, and water having a current is not necessarily navigable.—Turner v. Holland, 65 Mich. 453.

¶ 7. The principle that navigable streams are public highways does not apply to streams which, in their natural condition, are not adapted to any valuable boat or vessel navigation.—Shepard v. Gates, 50 Mich. 495.

¶ 8. Whether a body of water is a part of a river or a part of a lake cannot be determined merely by its name.—Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting & Fishing Club, 159 Mich. 61.

¶ 9. The fact that a small unmeandered lake entirely surrounded by land belonging to one person is boatable and that fish frequenting it can pass in and out by an underground channel connecting with other waters does not render such lake navigable water.—Giddings v. Rogalewski, 192 Mich. 319.

¶ 10. At the common law the term "navigable" had a technical meaning, and was applied to all streams or bodies of water in which the tide ebbed and flowed, but this definition is not applicable in this country, and all waters are held navigable in law, and subject to public use, which are by their character capable of use as highways, for purposes useful to trade or agriculture. It is the capability of being navigated for useful purposes which is the test.—Toledo Liberal Shooting Club v. Erie Shooting Club, 90 Fed. 680.

¶ 11. An unmeandered body of water, covering 100 acres which has no inlet except small spring-fed streams, has an outlet connecting through various bodies of water with Lake Erie, and through which fish can pass and a small boat can be floated, has a highway around it extending to the low-water mark, and the land underneath which, except a small portion, is owned by one person, as well as the land bordering on it, is a privately owned pond, and not a public navigable body of water.—Winans v. Willetts, 197 Mich. 512. (Kuhn, C. J., and Fellows, J., dissenting.)

§ 2. Previous use or nonuse.

¶ 12. The Ordinance of 1787 superseded the common-law doctrine of the necessity of usage or custom to establish a public right in the navigable waters of the northwest territory, even if that rule would otherwise have prevailed there.—Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 519.

¶ 13. The fact that a stream having capacity for valuable floatage has not been used by the public, or has only been used by persons following a particular occupation, does not prevent such stream's assuming a public character; in the new states of the Union user cannot, in the nature of things, be necessary to found a public right.—Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 519.

¶ 14. The public right is not affected by the fact that the stream has not a capacity for floatage, in its natural and ordinary stage, at all seasons of the year. It is a valuable, and not a continual capacity for use, which determines the right.—Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 519.

§ 3. Logging streams and streams for small boats.

See also post ¶¶ 26, 61.
Intermittent capacity for floatage as affecting navigability, see ante § 2.
Right to use navigable waters for pleasure boating, see post § 6.

¶ 15. To render a stream a public highway it need not be susceptible of navigation by boats or vessels. A capacity for use in floating rafts or logs creates a public easement, leaving the owners of the bed of the stream all other modes of use not inconsistent with it.—Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 519.

¶ 16. A stream that is capable of being used in its natural condition for important purposes of navigation, such as floating forest products to market or the place of manufacture, must be regarded as a public highway.—Thunder Bay River Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 336.

¶ 17. A stream navigable only at certain seasons of the year during periodical stages of high water is to be considered a public highway at those seasons.—Thunder Bay River Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 336.

¶ 18. The possibility of occasional use during annual and brief freshets does not make a stream a public highway.—Thunder Bay River Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 336.

¶ 19. A stream is not a public highway if it cannot be used as such in its natural condition, nor has an upper riparian proprietor a right to make it such by detaining the water until a flood sufficient for floating logs can be caused, to the prejudice of the proprietor below.—Thunder Bay River Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 336.

¶ 20. A stream in which, without improvements, no logs can be floated at any season of the year, and in which, even when improved, no logs can be floated without dams, is not navigable in any sense.—East Branch Sturgeon River Improvement Co. v. White & Friant Lumber Co., 69 Mich. 207.

¶ 21. The fact that the waters of a stream eventually find their way through the lakes into the St. Lawrence does not bear upon the stream's navigability.—Burroughs v. Whitwam, 59 Mich. 279.

¶ 22. Public use of a river, after a dam has been built across it, for pleasure-boating or fishing, has no tendency to prove navigability, and evidence of such use is inadmissible.—Burroughs v. Whitwam, 59 Mich. 279.

§ 4. Particular streams and waters.

What constitutes a harbor, see post ¶ 79.
Judicial notice of navigability, see Evidence § 9.

¶ 23. The Grand river is navigable water of the United States from its mouth in Lake Michigan to Grand Rapids.—The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 557, 19 L. ed. 999, reversing Brown Adm. 193; Fed. Cas. No. 3564.

¶ 24. Thunder Bay river is a public highway for the purpose of running logs.—Thunder Bay River Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 336.

¶ 25. The Emerson bayou, an inlet of the Saginaw river, which has a depth of from six to nine feet, and which is capable of use and is occasionally used by vessels, is navigable water.—Turner v. Holland, 65 Mich. 453.

¶ 26. The Thread river, a crooked and shallow stream never used for travel or transportation, or for the floating of logs, and abounding in "rapids" where the depth of water—except in short periods of high water—is not more than five or six inches, is not navigable.—Burroughs v. Whitwam, 59 Mich. 279.

¶ 27. Where the supervisors had granted a permit for the bridge in question, which could not be built without crossing the bayou, and the depth of water at the point was but four feet and diminishing, and there were other bridges near with no docks above the proposed bridge, there is no warrant for the conclusion that the Emerson bayou adjoining the Saginaw river in the city of Saginaw is navigable for boats or vessels of fifteen tons burden or more, within the meaning of How. St. § 495, requiring the permission of the board of supervisors for the construction of a bridge over a river navigable for boats or vessels of fifteen tons or more.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 28. A body of water, Muskegon Lake, cannot, merely because it is a theoretical expansion of Muskegon river, be treated as anything but a navigable lake if it is such in fact.—Jones v. Lee, 77 Mich. 35.

¶ 29. The Little Portage river in St. Joseph county is not a navigable stream under the tests laid down in former decisions.—Mathewson v. Hoffman, 77 Mich. 420.

¶ 30. Where marsh lands adjacent to an island in a navigable stream, the Detroit river, are dry at certain seasons of the year and are covered at other seasons by water ten or twelve inches deep, they do not lie in navigable waters.—Hall v. Alford, 114 Mich. 165.

¶ 31. The Saginaw river is a highway upon which trade and commerce are carried on between the several states.—The Tittabawassee Boom Co. v. Cunning, How. N. P. 82.

¶ 32. The waters covering the submerged lands of Maumee Bay, a bay or arm of Lake Erie, covering some 4,000 acres, and which had been surveyed and platted as swamp land by the government and later conveyed to the State of Michigan, are not navigable waters and therefore subject to the public right of navigation but are subject to private ownership, even though in certain parts there is water navigable for ordinary commercial purposes, said waters being no more or less than a marsh opening into the lake.—Toledo Liberal Shooting Club v. Erie Shooting Club, 90 Fed. 680.

¶ 33. Act March 5, 1896 (c. 49, 29 U. S. St. 54), relating to the anchorage and movements of vessels in St. Mary's river does not alter the boundary line of Lake Huron; and under it Mud Lake and Munoskong Bay are still a part of Lake Huron, and not a part of St. Mary's river.—Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting & Fishing Club, 159 Mich. 61.

¶ 34. Navigable waters are public highways at common law.—La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. City of Monroe, W. 155; Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18.

¶ 35. Navigable waters are public highways at the common law; and the only object of the clause in the ordinance of 1787 relating thereto was to secure to the citizens of the states such rights, in relation to such waters within the territory northwest of the Ohio, as were already possessed by the inhabitants of that territory, and to prevent any tax or duty on persons navigating them.—La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. City of Monroe, W. 155.

§ 6. Relative public and private rights.

Rights of private users of waters among themselves, see post § 14.
Tolls for use of improvements, see post § 19.
Public right as an easement and riparian right as servient ownership, see post ¶ 45.
Paramountcy of navigation over title in the state of the lands under the waters, see post ¶ 49.
Paramount right of navigation over fishery rights, ice gathering, and the like, see also Shipping § 25.

Right to use nets in St. Mary's river, see also Fish ¶ 22.
Statutory regulations concerning floating of logs and timber, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 127.

¶ 36. The public has the right to use a navigable stream in its fluid state for navigation purposes and in its frozen state for the purpose of traversing its surface, with due regard to the rights of riparian owners to its use for their own purposes.—Parsons v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., 198 Mich. 409.

¶ 37. Frozen navigable rivers are public highways and the traveler ordinarily has the paramount right of passage as necessarily incident to the reasonable enjoyment of his right, but it must be exercised in common with such uses as the frozen surface of the river is adapted to.—Parsons v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., 198 Mich. 409.

¶ 38. The right of navigation over a navigable river does not include the right to anchor a house boat for an indefinite length of time in one location above an island owned by a city and used for park purposes and to contaminate the water by discharging garbage and night soil into it, especially where such practice renders the water unwholesome and unfit for public bathing.—Paterson v. Dust, 190 Mich. 679.

¶ 39. Navigability for pleasure purposes is as sacred in the eye of the law as navigability for any other purpose.—City of Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94.

¶ 40. The state can forbid any erections in navigable waters, and on navigable streams and along the great lakes can fix the distance beyond which private erections cannot be maintained.—Lincoln v. Davis, 53 Mich. 375.

¶ 41. The rights of the public in the use of internal water-ways for the floatage of logs are subject to the determination of the supervisors, who may, in the manner fixed by law, permit dams to be built according to such plans as they approve, and the public use is limited by these conditions and cannot be described as a right to the use of the water in its natural flow.—Wood v. Rice, 24 Mich. 423.

§ 7. Rights in subaqueous lands.

Riparian ownership and limit or boundary thereof, see Waters, IV, A; Boundaries §§ 18, 20.
Division line of submerged land between adjoining shore owners, see Boundaries § 22.
Call for navigable lake as carrying ownership of land under water out to navigable depth, see Boundaries § 18.

¶ 42. The State of Michigan holds the title of lake bed lands in trust for the people, for the purposes of navigation, fishing, etc.—State v. Venice of America Land Co., 160 Mich. 680.

¶ 43. When the state sets up proprietary rights over property in the St. Mary's river, they can only be maintained by proof of a valid grant or a legal appropriation upon an inquest in due form of law.—Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196.

¶ 44. The body of water from Point Detour to the Neebish Rapids, including Mud Lake and Munoskong Bay, is at the outlet of St. Mary's river and joins on to Lake Huron. Its water level is substantially the same as that of Lake Huron, and the current through it is very slight. Held, that the said body of water is a part of Lake Huron, and not a part of St. Mary's river; and that riparian proprietors own only to the meander line, and not to the middle thread of the same.—Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting & Fishing Club, 159 Mich. 61.

¶ 45. Where one owns land bordering a stream, such ownership is private; such public rights as exist are simply easements, or privileges, and, as a general proposition, it is settled that the owner may do what he pleases with the land under the water so long as he does not interfere with the public enjoyment.—People ex rel. Bird v. Grand Rapids-Muskegon Power Co., 164 Mich. 121.

¶ 46. The depth of water upon submerged land is not important in determining the ownership.—State v. Venice of America Land Co., 160 Mich. 680.

¶ 47. The owner of the shore owns to the center of a stream or lake, and may use his submerged land as well as that lying above water, so long as in so doing he does not interfere with such use of the water of the lake as is common to all.—Fuller v. Bilz, 161 Mich. 589.

¶ 48. The title to submerged lands under a navigable river entirely within the limits of a State belongs to the State and not to the United States.—Scranton v. Wheeler, 57 Fed. 803.

¶ 49. The title of a State to submerged lands under a navigable river entirely within the State is held subject to public use, and the property rights are subservient to the power of the Congress of the United States to regulate navigation.—Scranton v. Wheeler, 57 Fed. 803.

¶ 50. The United States never had or asserted any title to the land under the waters under the Ste. Marie river, and cannot by its grant convey to a patentee any title whatever.—Scranton v. Wheeler, 57 Fed. 803.

¶ 51. As an incident to the ownership of lands on the margins of navigable rivers or streams, the law of Michigan attaches the legal title to the submerged lands under the stream comprehended within parallel lines extending perpendicular to the general trend of the shore along his land to the center of the stream, and such title will accrue to the owner who has received a patent from the United States to the riparian lands.—Scranton v. Wheeler, 57 Fed. 803.

¶ 52. The right of Congress to regulate commerce, and as an incident navigation remains unaffected by the question whether the title to the soil submerged is in the State or is in the owner of the shores, and the latter's title is subject to the right of Congress to occupy the lands without compensation for the purpose of erecting structures in aid of commerce between States.—Scranton v. Wheeler, 57 Fed. 803.

§ 8. ——Lands partially or intermittently covered.

Navigability of waters over marsh lands or flats, see ante ¶¶ 30, 32.

Rights of passage over nonnavigable watered area of "swamp lands," see Easements ¶ 92.

¶ 53. Whether the lower part of an island is a part of a lake bed so as to make title to it belong to the State of Michigan depends on the condition of the land as to submergence at the time of the admission of Michigan into the Union.—State v. Venice of America Land Co., 160 Mich. 680.

¶ 54. The evidence disclosed that the lower part of a certain island was part of the time swampy and covered with the vegetation accompanying such land. At certain intervals of years the water of Lake St. Clair rose and entirely covered the said land. The land was unsurveyed and within the meandered lines. Held, it belonged to the lake bed and title to it passed to the State of Michigan upon its admission to the Union.—State v. Venice of America Land Co., 160 Mich. 680.

§ 9. Rights in banks and shores.

Right to subaqueous lands, see ante §§ 7, 8.

Rights of ownership and easements incident to riparian character of the land, see Waters, IV, A.

Right to have wharf or landing, see Wharves.

Ferry landing as highway, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4490.

§ 10. Obstructions and interferences with use.

Power to forbid erection of structures in waters, see also ante ¶ 40.

Removal of logs and other obstructions to navigation, see post § 17.

Right of dam owner to obstruct logs while repairing dam, see post ¶ 84.

Presumption as to neglect of imposed duty having been cause of drawbridge not opening, see post ¶ 78.

Statutory lien on logs for driving or breaking jams, see Forestry § 9.

Extent of county power to remove "obstructions," see also Counties § 24.

State and interstate commercial regulation, see Commerce.

Right of telegraph or telephone lines to carry wires across navigable waters, see Telegraphs.

Constitutional provisions as to bridging and damming, see Const. art. VIII, § 14.
Statutory power of supervisors to permit or prohibit erection of dam or bridge, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2284 et seq.
Right of rafting and booming companies to construct booms, rollways, etc., see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 8624, 8642.
Penalty for obstructing improved river or injuring improvement works or buildings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8841.
Penal statute relating to obstructing stream by felling trees or casting lumber, slabs and waste into the waters, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4461.

¶ 55. A bridge over a navigable stream is not necessarily a nuisance; it may or may not be such according to circumstances; and the vessel-owner who brings suit for an injury occasioned by it must show the circumstances that make the injury fairly chargeable to some one as a wrong.—Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212.

¶ 56. In respect to nuisances by inclosure of part of the way there is a great difference between a land highway, where any inclosure is a nuisance, and waterways, where an inclosure is not a nuisance unless the public use is interfered with.—Attorney General ex rel. Muskegon Booming Co. v. Evart Booming Co., 34 Mich. 462.

¶ 57. A person lawfully using a watercourse cannot be guilty of a public nuisance, unless that nuisance is the consequence of his own conduct; and a mere change in the mode of enjoyment, which involves no increase of evil, cannot be injurious. So, a mill-dam is not a nuisance where the stream without it would produce the same extent and kind of mischief.—Beach v. People, 11 Mich. 106.

¶ 58. One whose land does not adjoin a navigable stream cannot maintain an action for damages for the obstruction of the stream unless he shows that he has thereby sustained some special damage distinct from that sustained by the public at large.—Potter v. Indiana & L. M. R. Co., 95 Mich. 389.

¶ 59. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a dam across a navigable stream will be presumed to have been constructed under proper authority from the board of supervisors.—Pratt v. Brown, 106 Mich. 628.

§ 11. Application, permit and approval of dam or bridge.

Quo warranto to question consent or approval, see Quo Warranto.
Sufficiency of consent as condition precedent to issuance of bridge bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 5.
Bridge or dam as obstruction to use, see ante § 10.

Power and jurisdiction of highway commissioners to establish highways over navigable waters, see Highways § 28.
Liability for injuries from defective bridge over navigable waters, see Highways § 202; and see Bridges.
Responsibility of county for acts of officers in bridging stream so that injury occurs, see Counties § 36.
Powers and procedure of county board to permit bridging or damming navigable stream, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2284-2287.
Statutory procedure by corporations formed for that purpose in the improvement of rivers, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8826 et seq., § 8865.

¶ 60. Const. art. 18, § 4, prohibiting the bridging or damming of navigable streams unless authorized by the board of supervisors, does not apply to waters that form part of the state boundary.—Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196.

¶ 61. Const. art. 18, § 4, prohibiting the damming or bridging of navigable streams unless authorized by the board of supervisors, has no application to streams that have no naturally valuable capacity for floatage purposes.—Shepard v. Gates, 50 Mich. 495.

¶ 62. Boards of supervisors have no jurisdiction to act upon petitions for leave to bridge navigable streams, unless the petitions comply with Comp. L. 1871, §§ 487-89 (How. St. §§ 493-495). Such a petition must specify the proposed location of the bridge with reasonable precision; this may depend largely on the extent of the commercial interests that may be involved in the location, and the convenience of the public; greater particularity would be needed if the bridge is to be built where there is a town than where there is not. The petition must also describe the bridge with particularity; as by indicating the location of the draws.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453.

¶ 63. The authority conferred upon boards of supervisors to regulate the bridging of navigable streams is a trust that must be executed by themselves; they cannot delegate it to others, especially to parties concerned in any details requiring the exercise of their judgment, such as the location or character of the bridge.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453.

¶ 64. Under Const. art. 18, § 4, providing that no navigable stream shall be either bridged or dammed without authority from the county supervisors under provisions of law and that no such law shall prejudice the right of individuals to free navigation of such streams and Comp. L. 1897, § 2494 et seq., giving authority to the supervisors to permit dams across navigable streams, the board of supervisors have ample power to grant the right to build a dam across a navigable stream.—Valentine ex rel. Dudley v. Berrien Springs Water-Power Co., 128 Mich. 280.

¶ 65. Where a corporation has a franchise to build a dam 16 feet high across a navigable stream no public notice of a petition to raise the dam to 20 feet is necessary as the difference in the height is not material to the question of the obstruction to navigation.—Valentine ex rel. Dudley v. Berrien Springs Water-Power Co., 128 Mich. 280.

¶ 66. Where a corporation has a franchise to build a dam 16 feet high across a navigable stream no publication of notice is necessary in filing a petition to increase the height to 20 feet where option for the purchase of all flowing rights have been secured. The failure to give notice is no violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 2495, providing that the board of supervisors shall have no power to grant the right to take or injure lands by the construction of such dams.—Valentine ex rel. Dudley v. Berrien Springs Water-Power Co., 128 Mich. 280.

¶ 67. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2494, 2495, specifying the manner in which boards of supervisors may permit or prohibit the construction of dams across navigable streams is to be read in connection with the provisions in article 18, § 4, Const. 1850, Michigan, relating to that subject, and when so read the intended purpose of both the statutes and the Constitution is that the public right of navigation in the streams of the state should be preserved, and the county supervisors have no powers outside the accomplishment of this purpose.—People ex rel. Bird v. Grand Rapids-Muskegon Power Co., 164 Mich. 121.

¶ 68. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2494, 2495, giving boards of supervisors power to grant leave to construct dams on rivers, the boards may limit the time for the completion of the work but may not insist that three dams instead of one be constructed.—People ex rel. Bird v. Grand Rapids-Muskegon Power Co., 164 Mich. 121.

¶ 69. A board of supervisors granted respondent leave to build three dams across Muskegon River with a provision that if all three dams were not completed by a specified date, respondent's rights should be forfeited. Respondent built only one of them. Under quo warranto brought to test the right of respondent to maintain such dam, held, that Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2494, 2495, giving boards of supervisors power to grant leave to construct dams gives such boards power only to protect the navigation interests of the public in rivers, and since the failure to build two of the dams did not injure the navigability of said river, respondent could not be ousted of its right to maintain its dam.—People ex rel. Bird v. Grand Rapids-Muskegon Power Co., 164 Mich. 121.

¶ 70. Where leave is given a respondent by a county board to construct three dams with a provision that the fish and log chutes shall be of certain dimensions, and that respondent's rights shall be forfeited if all three dams are not completed by a certain date, and the respondent later embodies the resolution granting such leave in a second petition in which it asks permission to make said chutes smaller, such second petition can have no bearing on the right of respondent to erect and maintain only one dam instead of three.—People ex rel. Bird v. Grand Rapids-Muskegon Power Co., 164 Mich. 121.

¶ 71. Where a drawbridge has been located and maintained at a given point for twenty-nine years, first by a private corporation and then by a township which purchased from the corporation, without objection from any person or municipality, during all of which time it has been recognized by the legislature as a lawful structure, and has occasionally been made the object of appropriations by the board of supervisors, it is too late for taxpayers to question the legality of it on the ground that it is not at the exact point authorized by the board.—Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298.

¶ 72. Act 62 of 1889 (How. St. §§ 1310a-1310f), providing for the construction of bridges on township lines, does not apply to navigable rivers where it would be necessary to construct and maintain a drawbridge.—Ecorse Township Board v. Wayne County Sup'rs, 75 Mich. 264; Osborne v. Lindow, 78 Mich. 606.

¶ 73. A petition to the board of supervisors, under Comp. L. 1857, § 356, How. St. § 494, for leave to dam a stream and construct in connection therewith a chute or apron for the passage of rafts, but containing no description whatever of said chute or apron, is fatally defective and would not give the board jurisdiction to act. The petition must set forth in detail the whole plan of the proposed dam, and the capacity and character of any chute or passage to be constructed therein.—Powers v. Irish, 23 Mich. 429.

¶ 74. A stream being navigable, the township officers had no right to erect a bridge obstructing it without action by the board of supervisors under Const. 1850, art. 18, § 4, and How. St. § 495, which provides that, when any township officers shall wish to construct any bridge across any stream at a point where the same is navigable for boats or vessels of fifteen tons burden or more, they shall apply to the board of supervisors by petition for permission to do so.—Stofflet v. Estes, 104 Mich. 208.

¶ 75. A statute authorizing the construction by a township of a bridge across a navigable stream, is not to be held incomplete or invalid because it contains no provision for repairing the bridge or for operating its draw; the duty to make repairs and to provide the necessary funds for operating the draw necessarily follows the acquirement of the bridge.—Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298.

¶ 76. The assent of the supervisors of the county being essential to the right to construct or maintain a toll-bridge over a navigable stream, and such board being also the competent authority to fix the rate of tolls, a corporation organized to build a toll-bridge over such a stream which has obtained assent by resolution of the board of supervisors "to erect, rebuild, repair and keep up and use, for its sole use and profit, a toll-bridge," etc., "for the term of twenty years," the tolls being fixed by the board at the same time, has no authority after the expiration of the twenty years to enforce the payment of tolls, notwithstanding the corporation was organized for the period of thirty years, for the purpose of building this bridge, in pursuance of a statute authorizing it.—Grand Rapids Bridge Co. v. Prange, 35 Mich. 400.

§ 12. Structure or form of dams and bridges.

Necessity and sufficiency of specification of manner or form of structure in application for permit, see ante § 11.
Right to prescribe manner or form of dam as condition of approval, see ante ¶ 68.
Construction and maintenance of bridges generally, see Bridges.
County duty to maintain fishway in dam, see also Counties § 24.
Preservation of free use of navigation against permits to make dams and bridges, see Const. art. VIII, § 14.

¶ 77. Const. art. 18, § 4, providing that no law shall authorize damming of a navigable stream so as to prejudice the right of individuals to the free navigation of such stream does not require that such dams shall have locks for the passage of vessels.—Valentine ex rel. Dudley v. Berrien Springs Water-Power Co., 128 Mich. 280.

¶ 78. Const. art. 18, § 4, providing that no navigable stream shall be bridged without permission from the board of supervisors under provisions of law and, further, that "no such law shall prejudice the right of individuals to the free navigation of such streams," coupled with How. St. § 495, authorizing the board to impose such terms on granting permission "as they may deem just and reasonable," does not raise an inference that a permit for a drawbridge must have been on terms that it would admit of the passage of boats adapted to the stream and would be kept in working order, and that a city which built the bridge must therefore have been negligent of its imposed duty when the draw failed to open properly; since even though the bridge may have become a nuisance, the city maintaining it as part of its governmental functions would have been under no liability aside from a statute making it so.—Corning v. City of Saginaw, 116 Mich. 74.

Lines separating Lake Huron and St. Mary's river, see also ante ¶ 33.
Wharves and wharfage rights, see Wharves.
Presumption as to reasonableness of dock lines as established by authority, see Wharves.

¶ 79. The Grand river at a point three miles up from its mouth beyond where vessels usually go is not a harbor in the common-law sense or within the meaning of the statutes regulating fisheries; and the common council of Spring Lake has no power to establish harbor lines in said river.—People v. Kirsch, 67 Mich. 539.

§ 14. Relative private rights of use.

Rights of riparian owner with respect to general public, see ante §§ 7, 8.
Common rights of use under Ordinance of 1787, see ante ¶ 35.
Maritime torts and injuries in course of navigation, see Shipping, V.
Injunction to prevent interference with rights on navigable waters, see also Injunctions § 87.

¶ 80. The use of navigable waters is equally open to all persons.—Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 Mich. 22.

¶ 81. It is the owner's duty to see that running logs do not obstruct the watercourse.—Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 Mich. 22.

¶ 82. In navigating a stream for any lawful purpose, the navigator may make all such reasonable use of such stream as may be necessary, and which does not deprive the riparian proprietor of his rights.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log-Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

¶ 83. A riparian owner who has used a navigable stream for many years as a means of ingress and egress from his property to a larger body of water, may enjoin a lower riparian proprietor from obstructing the stream so as to interfere with the free and unobstructed use thereof.—Lepire v. Klenk, 180 Mich. 481.

¶ 84. The owner of a dam lawfully maintained across a navigable stream is entitled to a reasonable time within which to repair an accidental break therein, and for that purpose, if necessary to the protection of the dam from further serious injury, may temporarily detain the logs of a navigator.—Pratt v. Brown, 106 Mich. 628.

¶ 85. No occupancy, in hindrance of free navigation, of the waters of a deep navigable lake, can be lawfully enjoyed.—Jones v. Lee, 77 Mich. 35.

III. IMPROVEMENTS AND TOLLS FOR USE.

§ 15. Improvements in general.

Canalization of waters, see post § 16.
Removal of sunken logs and the like, see post § 17.
Drainage or alteration of water level, see post § 18.
Toll rates for use of canals and improvements, see post § 19.
Water-power corporations and improvements, see Waters, IV, VI.
Disability of state to improve waterways, see Constitutional Law § 281 et seq.
Constitutional provisions as to bridging or improving, see Const. art. VIII, § 14.
Preservation of power of state to make improvements under permit to make dam or bridge, see Const. art. VIII, § 14.
Statutes for formation of river improvement companies, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 171.

¶ 86. Although the public authorities can regulate and improve water highways as well as land ones, though the soil of neither belongs to the state; Const. art. 14, § 9, precludes the state from itself engaging in the work of improving its navigable waters.—Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 269; Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628; Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 52 Mich. 203; Manistee River Improvement Co. v. Sands, 53 Mich. 593, aff'd in 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; 123 U. S. 297, 31 L. ed. 152, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 117; Anderson v. Hill, 54 Mich. 477; Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 Mich. 23.

¶ 87. The public authorities can regulate and improve water highways as well as land highways, though the soil of neither belongs to the state.—Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18.

¶ 88. The navigable waters of the United States, though forever free, are nevertheless subject to state control and regulation, and may be improved by the states or bridged or dammed under their legislation.—Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628.

¶ 89. A state can authorize any improvement of a river wholly within its limits, which, in its judgment, will enhance its value as a means of transportation from any part of the state to another.—Sands v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113, affirming 53 Mich. 593.

¶ 90. The state may constitutionally authorize the formation of corporations to improve its navigable streams, and to levy toll, at rates fixed by the legislature or by a board of control, upon those who make use of the improvements.—Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628; Nelson v. Cheboygan Slack-Water Navigation Co., 44 Mich. 7; Manistee River Improvement Co. v. Sands, 53 Mich. 593, aff'd in 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; 123 U. S. 297, 31 L. ed. 152, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 117.

¶ 91. The state may authorize the improvement of navigable waters by corporations.—La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. City of Monroe, W. 155; Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628; Nelson v. Cheboygan Slack-Water Navigation Co., 44 Mich. 7; Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 52 Mich. 203; Manistee River Improvement Co. v. Sands, 53 Mich. 593, aff'd 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; 123 U. S. 297, 31 L. ed. 152, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 117.

¶ 92. Comp. L. 1871, chap. 85, How. St., chap. 111, contemplates the improvement of navigable rivers, not the creation of navigable rivers from streams not naturally navigable.—Clay v. Pennoyer Creek Improvement Co., 34 Mich. 204.

¶ 93. Since How. St., chap. 111, does not contemplate the incorporation of companies to improve any but navigable streams, a company organized thereunder cannot subject the lands of other persons on a non-navigable stream to any easement or right of flowage.—East Branch Sturgeon River Improvement Co. v. White & Friant Lumber Co., 69 Mich. 207.

¶ 94. The right of the public for purposes of navigation must be considered as appurtenant to the ordinary means of navigation rather than to small and insignificant boats, and it is no nuisance to erect wharves and similar improvements unless under exceptional circumstances, such as narrows, bends, etc.—Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196.

¶ 95. In proceedings by quo warranto against a corporation authorized by law to deepen the channel of a river, it pleaded that it had removed obstructions by cutting channels through jams, and by confining the water at various points. Held, on demurrer, that it could not be said as matter of law that this was not an exercise of the power given to deepen the channel.—Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628.

¶ 96. The state has no power to authorize the entire obstruction of a navigable stream used in interstate commerce by authorizing the erection of docks.—Tittabawassee Boom Co. v. Cunning, How. N. P. 82.

¶ 97. Incorporation under How. St. § 3845 of a company to improve a navigable stream, and approval by the canal board of such company's application, cannot legalize previous unauthorized improvement and possession of the stream which was falsely described as a "proposed" improvement.—East Branch Sturgeon River Improvement Co. v. White & Friant Lumber Co., 69 Mich. 207.

§ 16. ——Canalization of waters.

¶ 98. A canal that is purely a private enterprise is like a road constructed and maintained at a private expense over which the public is permitted to travel, but in which it obtains no vested rights.—Potter v. Indiana & L. M. R. Co., 95 Mich. 389.

§ 17. Removal of logs and other obstructions.

What constitute obstructions and interferences with use, see ante § 10.
Contract to clear out sunken logs as grant of the logs, see Contracts ¶ 884.
Validity of contract with county to clear stream of sunken logs as menace to navigation, see also Forestry ¶ 10.
Rights in lodged, sunken and abandoned logs, see Forestry § 4; Abandonment.
Statutory powers of rafting and booming companies to clear obstructions and jams, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8646.

¶ 99. The internal commerce of a state—the commerce which is wholly within its limits—is as much under its control as foreign or interstate commerce is under the control of the general government; and, to encourage the growth of this commerce and render it safe, the states may provide for the removal of obstructions from their rivers and harbors, and deepen their channels and improve them in other ways, if the free navigation of those waters, as permitted under the laws of the United States, is not impaired, or any system for the improvement of their navigation provided by the general government is not defeated.—Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113, affirming 53 Mich. 593.

¶ 100. Comp. L. 1897, § 2494, authorizing the board of supervisors to provide for the removal of obstructions "arising from the erection of booms or collecting of logs or rafts in navigable streams by any individual," limits the power to such obstructions as have arisen from operations of the class mentioned, and does not extend to obstructions to navigation of long standing.—Gainor v. Nelson, 147 Mich. 113.

§ 18. Drainage or changing of water level.

¶ 101. Comp. L. 1897, § 4339, providing for drainage of lakes or other bodies of water surrounded by swamps, marshes or other low lands, but not so as to impair the navigation of any navigable water, does not authorize a drain for the avowed purpose of lowering the water in a navigable lake four feet, thereby rendering it less navigable for steamboats and skiffs.—Cole v. Dooley, 137 Mich. 419.

§ 19. Toll rates for use of canals and improvements.

Regulations of public service, see Public Service.
Tolls and charges of rafting and booming companies, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8648.
Statutory provisions as to tolls by canal and harbor companies, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8821.
Statutory provisions as to tolls for use of river improvements, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8834 et seq., § 8860.

¶ 102. The terms tax, impost and duty mentioned in the Ordinance of 1787 mean a charge for the use of the government, not compensation for the improvement of navigable waters.—Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113, affirming 53 Mich. 593.

¶ 103. It seems not to be competent for the state to give the control of one of its navigable streams to private parties for improvement, with power to charge toll at discretion.—Nelson v. Cheboygan Nav. Co., 44 Mich. 7.

¶ 104. Where the legislature legalizes rates of toll fixed by a board of supervisors for the use of a bridge previously erected without authority of law, the action of the two bodies precludes the public from questioning the legality of the bridge.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 Mich. 278.

¶ 105. Corporations organized to improve navigable streams may be empowered to charge tolls at rates fixed by the legislature or by a board of control.—Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628; Nelson v. Cheboygan Slack-Water Navigation Co., 44 Mich. 7; Manistee River Improvement Co. v. Sands, 53 Mich. 593; aff'd in 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113, 123 U. S. 297, 31 L. ed. 152, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 117.

¶ 106. It seems that corporations organized to improve navigable streams cannot be empowered to charge toll at their own discretion.—Nelson v. Cheboygan Slack-Water Nav. Co., 44 Mich. 7.

¶ 107. The statute (Comp. L. 1871, ch. 85; How. St., ch. 111) empowering the board of control of the St. Mary's Falls ship canal to fix the rates of toll to be charged by the river improvement companies sustained; fixing such rates is not a judicial act, and the statute is not objectionable for not requiring a hearing and notice to parties interested; and the annual affidavit required to be filed by each company (Comp. L. 1871, § 2730; How. St. § 3859) does not preclude the board from using its own methods of getting information.—Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628.

¶ 108. Where the rate of tolls has not been fixed by the state board of control as provided by How. St. § 3859, a navigation company organized under How. St. §§ 3845-3873, cannot recover from the owners of logs for the use of its improvements, in the absence of a special agreement by such owners to pay for such use.—Ocqueoc Improvement Co. v. Mosher, 101 Mich. 473.

NE EXEAT.

TREATS of the writ to prevent a defendant from departing from the state pending the decision of the court.

Analysis.

§ 1. In general.

¶ 1. In general.
Constitutional inhibition of imprisonment for debt, see Constitutional Law § 194.
Disability of court commissioner to issue writ, see Courts § 86.
Construction of conditions for release from forfeiture of bond, see Contracts ¶ 794.
Power of circuit courts to issue writ, see Jud. Act, chap. VI, § 1, ¶ 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12299, ¶ 2.
Provisions relative to second application for ne exeat after refusal, see Jud. Act, chap. IV, §§ 15, 16; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12262, 12263.

¶ 1. History of the practice as to the writ in England and the United States.—Bailey v. Cadwell, 51 Mich. 217.

¶ 2. The writ is never granted in any case except as equitable bail for a sum due and ascertainable as a money demand.—Fitzhugh v. Maxwell, 34 Mich. 138.

¶ 3. A statute is invalid which gives a circuit judge or court the power to issue a ne exeat against a debtor at discretion.—Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

¶ 4. In general the writ of ne exeat will not be granted unless a case of equitable debts and claims and the debts must exist at the time or so far matured that present payment can rightly be demanded.—Drolet v. Drolet, How. N. P. 14.

¶ 5. Ne exeat cannot issue in divorce cases before decree.—Bailey v. Cadwell, 51 Mich. 217.

¶ 6. A writ of ne exeat is not authorized in cases of temporary alimony.—Drolet v. Drolet, How. N. P. 14.

¶ 7. A circuit court commissioner or injunction master cannot issue a ne exeat in any case.—Bailey v. Cadwell, 51 Mich. 217.

¶ 8. A subpoena is the first process. It is irregular to have injunction and ne exeat issued and served before the issue of subpoena.—Peltier v. Peltier, H. 19; Sullings v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co., 36 Mich. 313.

¶ 9. The writ cannot be issued and served before service of subpoena.—Peltier v. Peltier, H. 19.

¶ 10. In a bill of ne exeat the existence of a debt should be positively stated, except in matters of account, and there should be also a positive averment of the defendant's intention to go abroad or of his threats or declarations so to do.—Drolet v. Drolet, How. N. P. 14.

¶ 11. A writ of ne exeat by a wife who had commenced suit against her husband for divorce, alleging that the complainant's husband "has given out that in case proceedings for a divorce are commenced against him he will speedily leave this State and go to Canada, and will thus endeavor to avoid the payment of alimony," is insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court.—Drolet v. Drolet, How. N. P. 14.

¶ 1. Negligence consists in a want of that reasonable care which would be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence under all the existing circumstances, in view of the probable injury.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 2. Negligence is neither more nor less than a failure of duty.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 3. Negligence consists in the failure to observe that degree of care which the law requires for the protection of the interests likely to be injuriously affected by the want of it.—Flint & P. M. Ry. Co. v. Stark, 38 Mich. 714; Kendrick v. Towle, 60 Mich. 363.

¶ 4. Negligence is the failure to observe, for the protection of another's interests, such care, precaution and vigilance as the circumstances justly demand and the want of which causes him injury.—Brown v. Congress & B. St. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 153.

¶ 5. Negligence is the want of ordinary care.—Montgomery v. Muskegon Booming Co., 88 Mich. 633.

¶ 6. Negligence is a failure of duty. It implies fault.—Burke v. Parker, Webb & Co., 107 Mich. 88.

¶ 7. Negligence is correctly charged "a failure of duty to observe that degree of care which the law imposes for the protection of interests likely to be injuriously affected by the want of it."—Webster v. Symes, 109 Mich. 1.

¶ 8. Negligence consists of a failure to exercise due care depending upon the circumstances attending action or the failure to act.—Hemmila v. Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co., 184 Mich. 567.

¶ 9. Negligence is the absence of such care as persons of ordinary prudence are expected to exercise under like circumstances.—Lillebridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84.

¶ 10. Actionable negligence is the absence of ordinary care.—Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 173 Mich. 57.

¶ 11. Ordinary care is that exercised by the great mass of mankind.—Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 173 Mich. 57.

¶ 12. Negligence consists of a want of that reasonable care which should be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence under all the existing circumstances in view of probable injury; it is the failure to observe for the protection of another's interest such care, precaution, and vigilance as the circumstances justly demand, and the want of which causes injury.—Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 466.

¶ 13. Where a right and duty concur, as where the exercise of the right is contingent on the performance of the duty, the mere failure to discharge the duty is negligence if a third person is injured in consequence.—Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 Mich. 430.

¶ 14. Gross negligence is an intentional disregard of duty or a reckless disregard of the consequences of an act.—Putt v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 171 Mich. 216.

§ 2. Necessity of existent duty toward injured person.

Predicating negligence on lawful use of one's own premises, see post § 11.
Duty toward licensees, volunteers and trespassers, see post § 12.
Violation of statutory duty as proximate cause of injury, see post § 14.

Statutory basis of public liability for injury suffered from neglect to keep highway safe for travel, see Highways § 266.
Liability for act of independent contractor, see Independent Contractors, II.
Statutory duty to maintain guards and fences along railroads, see Railroads.

¶ 15. To charge a person or a corporation for negligence in the performance of any public work, whereby any person has sustained special damage, the law must have imposed a duty, so as to make that neglect culpable.—Dermont v. City of Detroit, 4 Mich. 435.

¶ 16. One who ships lumber over a railroad is not liable for an injury to a brakeman while coupling cars which happened because of the lumber's shifting, it having been negligently loaded; there being between the parties no relation upon which an action for negligence could be based, and it having been the railroad company's duty to provide for the inspection of the car before it came to the brakeman.—Fowles v. Briggs, 116 Mich. 425.

¶ 17. The general rule is that one who lets property for use, like one who sells it, is not responsible to third persons injured by reason of defects.—Griffin v. Jackson Light & Power Co., 128 Mich. 653.

¶ 18. In an action for negligent injury to property rightfully stored on another's premises, it is unimportant that a third person was joint owner of it with the plaintiff, or that defendant was not aware of plaintiff's interest; plaintiff was not bound to give notice of his interest.—Moomey v. Peak, 57 Mich. 259.

¶ 19. A duty owing to every one in general cannot become the foundation of a private action at law until some individual is placed in a position which gives him particular occasion to insist upon its performance.—Molin v. Wisconsin Land & Lumber Co., 177 Mich. 524.

¶ 20. One who invites another to bring upon his premises for use a dangerous implement, knowing it to be such, will take upon himself the consequences which naturally follow.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Spear, 44 Mich. 169.

¶ 21. Where the jury's special findings, in an action for a negligent injury, negative not only the case made by the declaration, but also any agency of defendant's in plaintiff's going upon the place of danger at any time, judgment should be entered for defendant upon such findings.—Thorsen v. Babcock, 68 Mich. 523.

Bite of rabid dog as inevitable accident, see Animals ¶ 60.
Nonliability of innkeepers for inevitable accidents, riots and accidental fires, see Inns § 2.

¶ 22. No action lies for injuries from extraordinary or accidental circumstances for which no one is at fault.—Elliott v. Herz, 29 Mich. 202; Underwood v. Waldron, 33 Mich. 232; Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576; Barry v. Peterson, 48 Mich. 263; Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 51 Mich. 236; Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 54 Mich. 55; Palmer v. Harrison, 57 Mich. 182; Allen v. Johnston, 76 Mich. 31.

¶ 23. Falling downstairs, where the mishap is not imputed to unknown or concealed defects, belongs to that class of ordinary accidents which ought to be imputed to the carelessness or misfortune of the sufferer.—Davis v. Buss Mach. Works, 169 Mich. 498.

When "disease" not an "accident," see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 238.

Care required of keeper of captive wild animal, see Animals § 12 et seq.
Degree of care required of livery stable keeper in caring for horse left with him, see Animals § 24.

¶ 25. The law does not hold any one responsible upon the ground of negligence for not doing that which it was practically impossible to do.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6.

¶ 26. The law does not impose impracticable rules of duty, but is satisfied with what is fairly reasonable under the circumstances.—Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 184.

¶ 27. The degree of care required in any business must be in proportion to its nature and risks, but the law cannot require business to be conducted on any unusual basis, though the business be one of great risks, and requiring great caution. All rules applied must be reasonable and not oppressive, and must be applied with reference to the ordinary conduct of affairs.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 28. The nature of the business determines whether the degree of care exercised by those employed in it is such as the law requires.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 Mich. 176.

¶ 29. Ordinary care has relation to the situation and condition of the parties, and varies according to the exigencies which require vigilance and attention.—Baker v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 68 Mich. 90.

¶ 30. Where the danger is to human safety the care required is such as may reasonably be regarded as enough to prevent the probability of mischief.—Carver v. Detroit & S. Plank-Road Co., 69 Mich. 616.

¶ 31. Reasonable care is that care which an ordinarily reasonable man would take under the particular circumstances.—Burroughs v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 199 Mich. 672.

¶¶ 32, 33. What constitutes reasonable care in a given case depends upon all the facts and circumstances of that case.—Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., 85 Mich. 519.

¶ 34. Whether a person's act is negligent depends on whether he omits to do something which a reasonable man guided by considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would have done, or did something which a prudent and reasonable man would not have done.—Schneider v. C. H. Little Co., 184 Mich. 315.

¶ 35. Where there is a comparatively safe and a more dangerous way of discharging a duty, it is negligence to select the more dangerous way.—Wight v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 161 Mich. 216.

Duty to skaters of persons carrying on operations resulting in melting or cutting of ice, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 625-632.

Liability of owners of property in custodia legis for injuries to third persons caused thereby, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 1018-1020.

§ 8. Machinery and other objects attractive to children.

¶ 38. Children must be expected to act upon childish instincts, and those who are answerable for their safety must take precautions accordingly, and must expect them to meddle with anything that is likely to tempt them if left exposed to their view and within their reach.—Powers v. Harlow, 58 Mich. 507.

¶ 39. The principle of the "attractive nuisance" or turntable cases as applied to children is condemned and held to be exceptional and in contravention of well established rules of law.—Ryan v. Towar, 128 Mich. 463. (Montgomery, C. J., and Moore, J., dissenting.)

¶ 40. The proprietor of premises leased from a railroad company is not liable for injury caused to a child who trespasses on the railroad premises and crawls through a hole in a building for the purpose, on that occasion, of rescuing another child crying for help, in immediate danger of injury from a water wheel upon which the children were in the habit of playing without permission or authority.—Ryan v. Towar, 128 Mich. 463.

¶ 41. A small, four-wheeled, flat car is not such a dangerous machine as to render guilty of negligence one who leaves it upon his property so unsecured that children may put it in motion.—Kaumeier v. City Electric R. Co., 116 Mich. 306.

¶ 42. It is negligence to leave a wagon alone and unattached in a public street, where it carries a tank full of explosives and had its top vent open, and where a custodian of the wagon had seen boys playing on the highway and on the wagon and had put them off of the wagon and told them to keep away but had taken no further precautions to keep them away, after which they returned and ignited it by putting a match to the vent.—Iamurri v. Saginaw City Gas Co., 148 Mich. 27, affirming judgment by divided court, four justices dissenting on the ground that the boys were trespassers, and one of them on the ground that it was for the jury to say if the result ought to have been foreseen.

Care required of children, see post § 20.
Imputing negligence to children, see post §§ 33, 34.

Pond covered with ice as attractive nuisance, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 243-249.

§ 9. Manufacture or sale of dangerous substances or articles.

Proximate cause of poisoning from spoiled meat, see post ¶ 79.
Contributory negligence as preventing recovery for injury from spoiled meat, see post ¶ 104.
Sufficiency of evidence to show knowledge on the part of the manufacturer, see post § 47.
Liability of seller of hogs, infected with dangerous and infectious disease, to ultimate purchaser, see Animals § 22.
Manufacturer's or seller's liability to user for injuries from explosives or combustibles, see also Explosives and Combustibles § 3.
Personal liability of corporate officer of manufacturer of dangerous substance to purchaser injured by it, see Corporations ¶ 602.
Liability to person made sick by negligently selling impure or deleterious food, see Food § 6.
Rights and liabilities growing out of sales generally, see Sales.

¶ 43. The seller of an article of commerce, not in itself dangerous, is not responsible for consequences to a purchaser from his vendee resulting from defects in the article sold, which were unknown to the original seller.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 44. One who manufactures goods ordinarily not of a dangerous nature so negligently that they will obviously endanger those using them, is liable, in case he sells such articles without notice of their dangerous character, to anyone into whose hands they may come for use in the usual course of business, and who is injured without fault on his part, although there is no contractual relationship.—Pierce v. C. H. Bidwell Thresher Co., 153 Mich. 328.

¶ 45. A vendor of an article is not liable on account of his carelessness or negligence, to others than the immediate purchaser, for mistakes in the nature or quality of an article sold, where the thing sold is in itself harmless, so far as the vendor knows, and where he has no false representations.—Gerkin v. Brown & Sehler Co., 177 Mich. 45.

¶ 46. Where it is known that a commodity apparently harmless contains concealed dangers, and when distributed through the usual course of trade and properly used is sure to injure the health of a small percentage of purchasers, the manufacturer and dealer has a duty to warn the ignorant consumer of the hidden danger.—Gerkin v. Brown & Sehler Co., 177 Mich. 45.

¶ 47. Where a wholesaler buys dyed fur coats, harmless in themselves, in the usual course of trade and sells them to a retailer without warning, knowing that in some cases the dye may be injurious to some persons, a purchaser of a coat from the retailer, injured by the dyed fur coming into contact with his skin, may recover from the wholesaler.—Gerkin v. Brown & Sehler Co., 177 Mich. 45.

¶ 48. A nineteen-year-old son residing with his parents is not a bare licensee in the household and a stranger to the duty which defendant seller of kerosene owes to the household not to supply a dangerous combustible, and hence the vendor of such oil through an intermediate dealer is answerable for injuries to the son due to lighting a fire with the aid of what was sold as kerosene but was in fact gasoline.—McLawson v. Paragon Refining Co. of Michigan, 198 Mich. 222.

Liability of manufacturer of automobile for personal injuries caused by defects in machine, see notes, 3 N. C. C. A. 79-84; 13 N. C. C. A. 1029-1043.
Liability of manufacturer or seller of gasoline or acetylene lighting system for injury to purchaser, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 499-518.
Liability of manufacturer or seller of cloth or wearing apparel for injuries caused by poisonous dyes or other substances in material, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 254-265.
Liability of maker or distributor of serum or vaccine for injury to animals treated therewith, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 880-891.
Liability of manufacturer or retailer of shoes for injury caused by defects therein, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 801, 802.
Liability of manufacturer or independent contractor for injury to third person caused by instrumentalities dangerous only because of defective construction, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 562-589.
Liability of one, illegally selling gun or pistol to infant, for injuries to third person caused by infant's use of same, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 447-453.

§ 10. Misusing firearms.

Criminal negligence in use of firearms, see Crimes § 134.

Negligence in use of explosives and combustibles, see Explosives and Combustibles.

¶ 49. One who snaps a gun, knowing it to be pointed at another person, is guilty of negligence per se, and is liable to such person in damages, both at the common law and under the statute (How. St. §§ 9110-9113) designed to prevent the careless use of firearms, for injuries occasioned by the discharge of the weapon; and it is no defense that he used the ordinary means to satisfy himself that the gun was unloaded, and believed it to be so when he snapped it off.—Babel v. Manning, 112 Mich. 24.

¶ 50. An air gun is not so obviously and intrinsically dangerous as to charge a father with negligence in placing it in the hands of his nine-year-old son, and make him liable for injuries sustained by reason of its use by another boy not a member of his family to whom it is delivered by his wife in his absence and without his knowledge or consent.—Chaddock v. Plummer, 88 Mich. 225.

Liability for injury growing out of the negligent use of firearms, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 518-529.

Liability for personal injuries caused by toy pistol, gun or cannon, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 149-151.

C. USE OR CONDITIONS OF LAND, BUILDINGS OR STRUCTURES.

§ 11. In general.

Jury questions as to negligence in allowing materials to fall from building, see post ¶ 301.

Contributory negligence of tenant injured by a defective floor, see post ¶ 126.

Contributory negligence as defeating recovery for injury from falling shed, see post ¶ 105.

Liability of agricultural societies, see Agriculture § 4.

Duty to maintain division fences as affecting right to distrain cattle, see Animals § 7.

Of adjoining owner in withdrawing support or undermining buildings, see Adjoining Owners.

Notice of defect in bridge, see Bridges § 9.

Evidence of general condition of bridge on issue of nonrepair, see Bridges §§ 16-19.

Protection due from occupier of premises, see Buildings §§ 4, 5.

Statutory liability for negligence in permitting fire to escape to premises of another as a "taking," see Eminent Domain ¶ 76.

Duty and liability for negligence in conduct of public shows, expositions and theater, see Exhibitions and Shows.

Liability for injuries by animals because of want of fence or imperfect fence, see Animals § 6 et seq.; Fences § 2; Railroads, VIII, F.

In using or setting out fire, see Fires §§ 2, 3.

Liability of landlord for injury arising from negligence of tenant in making alterations under landlord's permission, see Landlord and Tenant ¶ 370.

Negligent management of ships and vessels, see Shipping.

¶ 51. Negligence implies fault, and cannot be predicated of a lawful and customary use of one's own premises.—Alpern v. Churchill, 53 Mich. 607.

¶ 52. The rule is well settled that there can be no fault in a perfectly lawful and customary use of one's own premises.—Pittsburgh & Conneaut Dock Co. v. Detroit Transp. Co., 122 Mich. 445.

¶ 53. Persons engaged in a manufacturing business must be allowed to use the premises for that purpose in such manner as they choose, so long as that management is not dangerous to the ordinary use of the public having business with the manufactory, or to the employees.—Armstrong v. Medbury, 67 Mich. 250.

¶ 54. Where the owner of an opera-house, fronting on a public street, provided side entrances opening on a private alley, which was used by the public as a common way with his permission, and only protected them from falling into an area, opening into a cellar belonging to said building, by an iron railing so low as to come below the knee of a man of ordinary height, he was guilty of negligence.—Brezee v. Powers, 80 Mich. 172.

¶ 55. In a building where the public is invited, one passing through its halls is not required to bestow upon the placing of his feet the same degree of attention as he would upon a public highway.—Branch v. Klatt, 165 Mich. 666.

Liability of owner of premises for injury to employee of public utility company on premises in connection with service furnished owner, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 313-315.

Liability for injury to person catching foot between planking and rail at crossing, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 198-208.

Injury by vicious animal to person visiting owner's premises on business errand, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 380-388.

Liability of proprietor of tent show for injury to patron by blowing down of tent, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 535-548.

Liability for injuries caused by revolving doors, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 975-982.

§ 12. Duty toward licensees, volunteers and trespassers.

See also ante ¶ 48.

Necessity of existent duty toward injured person, see ante § 2.

Duty and care required in general, see ante § 5.
Contributory negligence of trespassers, see post § 27.
Imputing to voluntary passenger negligence of the driver, see post § 32.
Injuries resulting from voluntary exposure to risks, see post § 24.
Duty and negligence in respect to persons in buildings other than defendant's servants, see Buildings §§ 4-6.
Liability to licensee or trespasser falling into open mine shaft or pit, see Mines ¶ 52.
Licensees and trespassers on railroad property, see Railroads; Street Railways.
Duty of electric railway toward trespassers, see also Electricity § 6, ¶ 18.

¶ 56. Whoever expressly or impliedly invites others upon his premises assumes the duty of warning all who may accept the invitation of any danger in coming of which he knows or ought to know but of which they are not aware.—Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164.

¶ 57. The owner of land is liable in damages to those coming thereon, using due care, at his invitation or inducement, express or implied, on any business to be transacted with or permitted by him, for an injury occasioned by the unsafe condition of the premises, which is known to him, which he has suffered negligently to exist, and of which they have received no notice.—Donaldson v. Wilson, 60 Mich. 86.

¶ 58. A gas manufacturer, who has provided driveways to and from the gas house for teams coming to haul coke is not obliged to anticipate that customers will use the premises in other than the customary ways of ingress and egress, or to make the premises safe for any purpose not reasonably to be anticipated.—Armstrong v. Medbury, 67 Mich. 250.

¶ 59. The rule that even as to mere licensees, the owner of premises cannot change their condition, so as to render them dangerous, without giving reasonable warning of the danger, is limited to cases where the use by the licensees is definite, long, open, and continuous.—Habina v. Twin City General Elec. Co., 150 Mich. 41.

¶ 60. If a licensee has been using a well defined path over the property of another openly and continuously he takes only such risks as have existed during the time of using the same, but not risks on said path made afterwards by the licensor without the knowledge of the licensee.—Morrison v. Carpenter, 179 Mich. 207.

¶ 61. Though owing no duty of reasonable care to prevent the injury of trespassers, the owner of premises must make them reasonably safe for invitees.—Blakely v. White Star Line, 154 Mich. 635.

¶ 62. After the owner of premises is aware of the presence of a trespasser or licensee, or if in the exercise of ordinary care he should know of their presence, he is bound to use ordinary care to prevent injury to them arising from active negligence.—Schmidt v. Michigan Coal & Mining Co., 159 Mich. 308.

¶ 63. Defendant provided a regular road approaching its dock. Another way was frequently used as a short cut across defendant's lot, and the lot of another. Plaintiff was injured by falling over an embankment while taking this latter way. Held, defendant could not be held liable on the theory that it had invited the public to use the way in question.—Woods v. White Star Line, 160 Mich. 540.

¶ 64. Where uninclosed premises adjacent to a power plant have been used in connection therewith for the storage of fuel, ashes, and refuse, and persons have crossed such premises at different places to suit their own convenience, and to the extent that the condition of the ground and the material upon it permitted, such public use must be regarded as casual, in an action by a girl who, becoming frightened while walking upon a sidewalk adjoining the premises, ran across them, fell into an open ditch, and was injured.—Habina v. Twin City General Elec. Co., 150 Mich. 41.

¶ 65. Where defendant's occupancy and use of uninclosed premises is visible and constant, and for the purpose of its business exclusive, and no path or way is shown to have existed at or over them, the fact that persons are allowed to go upon the premises, and to cross them, does not confer upon them or the public any right upon the premises.—Habina v. Twin City General Elec. Co., 150 Mich. 41.

¶ 66. One whose uninclosed grounds people cross without objection is not liable for injury caused by falling into an unguarded cistern; nor is he any more liable in the case of a child's falling into such cistern than he would be in the case of an adult's doing so.—Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1.

¶ 67. Where contractors excavate under a railway track along which the public have established a pathway without guarding the same, they are liable to a pedestrian using the pathway and falling into the excavation.—Morrison v. Carpenter, 179 Mich. 207.

¶ 68. Where an automobile company engages a person to inspect and test machines it purchases before they leave the factory, such employee is not a mere volunteer as he has a direct interest in the work, and can recover for injuries sustained through the negligence of an employee of the factory assisting in the tests.—Johnson v. E. C. Clark Motor Co., 173 Mich. 277.

¶ 69. A mere volunteer who receives injuries due to a fall from a defective ladder while assisting in putting out a fire cannot recover for the injuries sustained by him.—Smedley v. Mashek Chemical & Iron Co., 189 Mich. 64.

Ponds, wells or reservoirs, and pools or water holes, as attractive nuisances, see notes, 10 N. C. C. A. 243-249; 12 N. C. C. A. 966-983.

Liability for drowning of trespassing child in place attractive to children, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 186-209.

Liability of owner for injury to policeman caused by defects in or instrumentalities upon premises, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 706-709.

Persons entering wrong room, apartment, or building by mistake, as trespassers, exempting owner from liability for negligence, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 1012-1016.

Injury to trespasser by fellow trespasser, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 611-617.

III. PROXIMATE CAUSE; CONCURRENT CAUSES; ACT OF GOD.

§ 13. Proximate and intervening causes.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to proximate cause, see post § 48.

Jury questions as to cause of accident, see post § 52.

Instructions as to proximate cause, see post § 59.

Dog bite as proximate cause of kick by horse, see Animals ¶ 56.

Doctrine of proximate cause in losses during carriage, see generally Carriers, II-V.

Misinforming passenger as to his whereabouts as proximate cause of subsequent injury, see also Carriers ¶ 498.

Sudden stop or nearness of invalid's cot to baggage as proximate cause of injury from falling baggage, see Carriers ¶ 562.

Open car door as proximate cause of death of passenger thrown through it by lurch, see Carriers ¶ 470.

Wreck as proximate cause of injury to passenger in passing around it, see also Carriers ¶ 464.

Slipping or condition of street as proximate cause of injury to passenger, see Carriers ¶ 442.

Rule of proximity of damages to wrong, see Damages, I, A.

Proximate cause of fires, see Fires § 4.

Proximate cause of injuries from defective highways, see Highways § 241.

Proximate cause of injuries to users of road by other users, see Highways § 381.

Defective bridge as proximate cause of injury, see Bridges § 11.

Negligence of notary as proximate cause of loss of loan made on falsely acknowledged mortgage, see Notaries Public.

Proximate cause of injuries to servants, see Master and Servant § 42.

¶ 70. Proximate cause is such a cause as operates to produce particular consequences without the intervention of any independent unforeseen cause without which the injuries would not have occurred.—Wilmarth v. Michigan United Traction Co., 198 Mich. 428.

¶ 71. There can be no recovery for an injury that is not a proximate consequence of the negligence complained of; the court cannot select some cause back of the proximate one whereon to base an action.—Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 54 Mich. 55.

¶ 72. When a particular consequence results from a wrong the wrong is the proximate cause of that consequence, unless there intervenes between the wrong and the consequence something which may properly be denominated a cause.—Iamurri v. Saginaw City Gas Co., 148 Mich. 27, per McAlvay, C. J., Carpenter, Montgomery and Moore, JJ.

¶ 73. To make negligence the proximate cause of an injury, the injury must be the natural and probable consequence of a negligent act which under the circumstances an ordinary prudent person ought reasonably to have foreseen might probably occur as the result of his negligent act.—Baker v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 169 Mich. 609.

¶ 74. Where an act is negligent, to render it the proximate cause, it is not necessary that the one committing it might have foreseen the particular consequence or injury, or the particular manner in which it occurred, if by the exercise of reasonable care it might have been anticipated that some injury might occur.—Baker v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 169 Mich. 609.

¶ 75. A proximate cause is such as operates to produce particular consequences, without the intervention of any independent unforeseen cause without which the injuries would not have occurred.—Stoll v. Laubengayer, 174 Mich. 701.

¶ 76. A negligent person may not be held liable for his original negligent act unless that act produces the consequences for which recovery is sought, without the intervention of any independent, unforeseen cause, without which the injuries would not have occurred.—Calliari v. Fisher, 190 Mich. 56.

¶ 77. Negligence which, although proven, does not cause or contribute to the injury complained of affords no ground for recovery.—Switzer v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 190 Mich. 35, 16 N. C. C. A. 198.

¶ 78. A township is not liable for an injury where, though negligent, such negligence is not the proximate cause of the injury.—Bell v. Village of Wayne, 123 Mich. 386.

¶ 79. Blood poisoning from failure to cleanse or protect one's hands after handling spoiled meat sold by defendant was proximately caused by the plaintiff's own act and not by selling the meat.—Williams v. Weidman, 135 Mich. 444.

¶ 80. Where a sound cable, an effective safety device, or a proper inspection would prevent an accident, the lack of them is the proximate cause of an injury resulting therefrom.—Wilson v. Escanaba Woodenware Co., 152 Mich. 540.

¶ 81. The proximate cause of the injury to a driver of a team which became frightened and ran away as a result of a horse, which was a notorious runaway and which had been standing unsecured and unattended close to the team, becoming frightened and running away, was not the negligence of the owner of the horse in allowing it to remain unsecured and unattended, but the act of the driver of the team, where, upon his team becoming frightened, he ran and jumped on the step of his closed sleigh and was injured as a result of his leg coming into contact with a sleigh driven by a third person before he could get his leg inside his sleigh.—Calliari v. Fisher, 190 Mich. 56.

§ 14. ——Violation of statutory duty.

Necessity of existent duty toward injured person, see ante § 2.

Alleging neglect of statutory duty, see post § 39.

Breach of statutory duty by master as resulting in liability to servant, see also Master and Servant § 35.

¶ 82. Although disobedience of a statute may be conclusive evidence of negligence, a condition of recovery by one urging the disobedience, is that such disobedience must be the proximate cause of the injury complained of.—Syneszewski v. Schmidt, 153 Mich. 438.

¶ 83. A breach of a statutory duty by an employer is not actionable unless either proximately or concurrently resulting in an injury to an employee.—Fifelski v. Grand Rapids Gas Light Co., 181 Mich. 503.

¶ 83a. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 4160, providing for treble damages for injuries to a public bridge by logs drawn over it or in any other way, a party driving logs on a river is not liable for injuries caused by a jam and freshet after notice, except where the act is wilful or the negligence so gross as to amount to culpable and wanton negligence.—Overseer of Highways of Road District No. 4 of St. Ignace Township v. Pelton, 129 Mich. 31.

§ 15. Contributing and concurring causes.

See also post ¶ 97.

Contributory negligence of plaintiff, see post § 17.

¶ 84. The two contributing causes must be held to be concurring, where the concurrence of both was essential to produce the injury.—Welch v. Jackson & B. C. Traction Co., 154 Mich. 399.

¶ 85. Where two concurrent acts, one of which is negligent and the other is not, produce the injury and it would not have been produced but for the negligent act, such act is the proximate cause.—Cavanaugh v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 175 Mich. 156.

§ 16. Act of God.

Act of God as relieving carrier of liability for injury to goods, see Carriers § 40.

¶ 86. An act of God, relieving a party from a charge or liability of negligence, is a natural cause, such as a storm of wind, whatever its characteristics may be, which cannot be prevented by the exercise of ordinary care and the use of those appliances which the situation of the party renders it reasonable that he should employ.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

Contributory neglect of guests at inns, see Inns § 4.
Right of railroad to urge contributory negligence where it is in default of statutory duty, see Railroads.
Contributory negligence of servant, see Master and Servant, III, G.

¶ 87. Contributory negligence is such action as contributes by direct consent to, or participation in, the wrong complained of.—Briant v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 104 Mich. 307; Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 466.

¶ 88. Contributory negligence presumes a careless act or omission.—Swoboda v. Ward, 40 Mich. 420.

¶ 89. A person is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law unless all reasonable minds would reach the same conclusion under undisputed facts.—Beach v. City of St. Joseph, 192 Mich. 296.

¶ 90. Where an injury of which a plaintiff complains is the result of his own negligence or fault, or of the fault of both parties, without intentional wrong on the part of the defendant, no action can be maintained.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 2 Mich. 259.

¶ 91. One cannot recover for an injury caused by another's negligence if his own negligence contributed thereto.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Leahey, 10 Mich. 193; Le Baron v. Joslin, 41 Mich. 313; Joslin v. Le Baron, 44 Mich. 160.

¶ 92. In an action to recover for an injury arising from the defendant's negligence in carrying on his lawful business without wanton or intentional wrong, plaintiff cannot recover if his own negligence directly or proximately contributed to produce the injury.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274.

¶ 93. Every one may use his own property as he pleases, provided he does not use it to the injury or annoyance of others; and his own neglect of his own property does not excuse another for injuring it, nor constitute contributory negligence.—Underwood v. Waldron, 33 Mich. 232.

¶ 94. Where the plaintiff by his negligence contributed to his injury, he cannot recover unless the defendant is guilty of gross negligence.—Putt v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 171 Mich. 216.

¶ 95. Though defendant's negligence may have been the primary cause of the injury complained of, yet an action for such injury cannot be maintained if the proximate and immediate cause of the injury was the want of ordinary care and caution in the person injured.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

¶ 96. One who participates in the negligence of the driver of an automobile in which he is a passenger cannot hold the driver's father responsible for injuries sustained as the result of the driver's negligence.—Webber v. Billings, 184 Mich. 119.

¶ 97. One who voluntarily and unnecessarily exposes himself to an imminent, known danger, and so contributes to his injury, cannot escape the consequences because the negligence of another concurred in producing the injury.—Wight v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 161 Mich. 216.

¶ 98. A party who assumes to have knowledge of a danger of which another may be ignorant, and knowingly makes false assurances regarding it upon which the other relies to his injury, is estopped from affirming as a defense to negligence that the other in relying on such statements was guilty of negligence as precludes him from recovering compensation for injuries inflicted on him under cover of the falsehood.—Eaton v. Winnie, 20 Mich. 156.

Breach of rule habitually violated as contributory negligence, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 515-516.
Violation of law of road by driver as contributory negligence barring recovery for injury to person or property, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 313-329.
Driving motor vehicle at excessive speed as contributory negligence barring recovery by operator in action to recover damages for injuries to person or property, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 830-833.
Contributory negligence of beneficiary as affecting recovery in action for wrongful death, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 1050-1062.
Contributory negligence as defense in action against railroad company to recover for damage to or destruction of property by fire, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 946-962.

§ 18. Duty and care to discover or avoid dangers.

Duty and care required of persons in general, see ante § 5.
Care required in passing through buildings, see ante ¶ 55.
Exclusion from damages of consequences which injured person neglected to avoid, see Damages, I, A.

¶ 99. Nothing short of gross negligence on the part of an injuring party can relieve the injured party from the exercise of care; and what constitutes reasonable care depends upon the facts and circumstances.—Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., 85 Mich. 519. See Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557.

¶ 100. The law requires a person to use his faculties in a reasonable manner to discover danger, but extraordinary care is not required.—Leary v. Houghton County Traction Co., 171 Mich. 365.

¶ 101. In an action for personal injuries a plaintiff cannot recover if he was guilty of any want of ordinary care and prudence, however slight, which neglect contributed directly to produce the injury.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 102. Courts are bound to know that there is a difference between reasonable care and no care at all, or utter negligence, and that if one who has good reason to apprehend danger does not make some use of his faculties to ascertain and avoid it, he does not exercise the ordinary or reasonable care demanded by the circumstances.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274.

¶ 103. It is not contributory negligence not to look out for danger when there is no reason to apprehend any; every one has a right to presume that others, owing a special duty to guard against danger, will perform that duty.—Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1.

¶ 103a. A conclusion of law based upon a holding that plaintiff in an action for negligent injury was called upon to exercise a greater degree of care than persons of ordinary care and caution are expected to exercise under the circumstances cannot be sustained.—Barnes v. Brown, 95 Mich. 576.

¶ 104. A wholesale butcher was not liable to an experienced employee of a retailer to whom putrid meat had been sold, for being poisoned by the handling of such meat, where the employee knew of its condition and handled it thereafter, since the duty, if any, to disclose the condition was fully met by plaintiff's knowledge.—Williams v. Weidman, 135 Mich. 444.

¶ 105. Where the defendant, the part owner of a barn, demolished it with the consent of his co-owner, and an employee of latter's tenant, without occasion to do so, went into the barn after it was nearly demolished and was injured by the fall of a shed or lean-to attached to it, held that the defendant was not answerable where there was no breach of duty on his part, and the danger was as apparent to the injured person as to the defendant.—Groesbeck v. Shelden, 185 Mich. 583.

¶ 106. Plaintiff went upon defendant's premises to ask for work, and was standing in the space between a mortar box and a private road which ran close to said mortar box, and which curved to the right toward the box just as it passed it. Plaintiff saw a heavily loaded team approaching along the road and stood between the road and the mortar box while the load was passing, despite the warning to get out of the way. His foot was injured by the hind wheel of the wagon. Held, plaintiff was barred from recovery by contributory negligence.—Klimowicz v. Parker, Webb & Co., 166 Mich. 208.

Use of sidewalk with knowledge of defective condition as contributory negligence, see notes, 13 N. C. C. A. 505-543; 14 N. C. C. A. 366-377.

Liability of carrier for injury to prospective passenger while attempting to board moving street-car, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 1-57.

Failure of passenger or guest in hired vehicle to control driver as contributory negligence, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 485-592.

Liability for injuries resulting from driving traction engine or like slowly moving vehicle over railway crossing, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 415-427.

§ 19. ——Age, sex, experience or capacity of injured person.

Contributory negligence of children, see post § 20.

Evidence as to the capacity and competency of injured person, see post § 46.

As bearing on contributory negligence of servant, see Master and Servant § 59.

¶ 107. The law does not exact of anyone judgment or caution not naturally to be expected from persons of his age and capacity.—Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1.

¶ 108. In judging of negligence all the circumstances are to be taken into the account, and among others the age and sex of the person injured, so far as these are important.—Hassenyer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 48 Mich. 205.

¶ 109. The age, intelligence and experience of one who has suffered from an injury are admissible, as they help determine whether he has been guilty of contributory negligence.—Swoboda v. Ward, 40 Mich. 420.

¶ 110. It is not a rule of law that a less degree of care in circumstances of danger is required in a woman than in a man; and an instruction to that effect is erroneous. The rule of reasonable care and prudence knows nothing of sex.—Hassenyer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 48 Mich. 205.

¶ 111. The age of a person injured in crossing a railway track in a cutter driven by another may properly be considered in an action against the company for the injury, as bearing upon contributory negligence.—Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 Mich. 430.

Use of negligently maintained street, road or sidewalk by intoxicated person, as contributory negligence, barring recovery from city or township, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 634-645.

Lack of familiarity with conditions at railway crossing as bearing upon alleged contributory negligence of traveler injured or killed thereat, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 358-378.

§ 20. ——Care required of children.

Contributory negligence of child's parent or custodian, see post § 25.
Imputing to child negligence of its parent or custodian, see post § 34.
Imputing to infant passenger in automobile or carriage negligence of the driver, see post § 33.
Jury questions as to contributory negligence of children, see post § 55.
Instructions on contributory negligence of children, see post § 61.
Contributory negligence of children as passengers, see also Carriers § 189.

¶ 112. Negligence cannot be imputed to very young child.—Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280; Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co., 87 Mich. 400.

¶ 113. Contributory negligence or liability for trespass is not imputable to a child thirty months old so as to preclude its recovering for a railway injury.—Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 56 Mich. 559.

¶ 114. A child of tender years is not expected or required to exercise the same degree of care as an adult, and one cannot be guilty of contributory negligence unless failing to exercise the degree of care that would be reasonably expected of a child of her sex, age and intelligence, under all the surrounding circumstances.—Cooper v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 Mich. 261.

¶ 115. When contributory negligence is sought to be attributed to a child the child can only be held to that degree of care which may reasonably be expected from one under the same conditions, of the same age, sex, intelligence and judgment.—Baker v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 68 Mich. 90.

¶ 116. A legal duty can only be predicated by one who has capacity to understand and ability to perform, and the care to be exercised by children, while it must be ordinary care, must be proportioned to their age and capacity.—Knickerbocker v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 167 Mich. 596.

¶ 117. When a child is old enough to be chargeable with some degree of care for his own safety, then, as to any given event, a child is responsible for just such care for his own safety as may reasonably be expected of one of his age, development, and intelligence under the circumstances characterizing the particular event.—Knickerbocker v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 167 Mich. 596.

¶ 118. Duty can only be predicated of one who has capacity to understand and perform it; and therefore a child not of an age or discretion to understand the danger in riding upon the front platform of a street-car cannot be charged with negligence in so doing.—East Saginaw City Ry. Co. v. Bohn, 27 Mich. 503.

¶ 119. A nine-year-old child injured by the negligence of a railroad company will not be denied a recovery because, at the time of the accident, he was not in the exercise of the prudence and foresight which the law might require of an adult under the same circumstances.—Lehman v. Eureka Iron & Steel Works, 114 Mich. 260.

¶ 120. If an eight-year-old boy has sufficient intelligence to appreciate the danger of crossing a street-car track without looking to see whether a car is coming, and if he has in mind the necessity of taking precautions, it is not necessary, to preclude a recovery for an injury to him, that he should have "the intelligence of a grown person fully."—Henderson v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 368.

¶ 121. While the care of an infant is measured in some degree by age, experience, and intelligence as a matter of law they may be guilty of negligence, if not too immature to understand the danger and the necessity of acting carefully.—Beghold v. Auto Body Co., 149 Mich. 14.

¶ 122. In a suit for personal injuries due to plaintiff's touching the end of defendant city's electric wire, which was burnt off in a storm and hung near the ground in the public street, contributory negligence cannot be attributed to plaintiff, a child of five years and four months.—Johnson v. City of Bay City, 164 Mich. 251.

¶ 123. Contributory negligence cannot be imputed to a child for a failure to anticipate the negligent operation of an automobile.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 124. A boy who was injured by a negligently operated automobile, while attempting to cross a street after having jumped from the rear of a loaded wagon on which he had been riding, is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, because he did not anticipate the approach of the automobile from the opposite direction on the wrong side of the street.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

§ 21. ——Appearance or assurance of safety.

¶ 125. Where it appears that plaintiff in an action for negligent injury was thrown off his guard by defendant's own act, and was led to believe that vigilance was not needed, his lack of care will not bar a recovery.—Kinney v. Folkerts, 78 Mich. 687.

¶ 126. In an action by a tenant against the owner for personal injuries due to the breaking of a defective floor, plaintiff was held not guilty of contributory negligence in using the floor with knowledge of its weakness where she testified that the attention of defendant's agent had been called to the defect and he had assured plaintiff that the floor was safe and specifically promised to repair.—Nutter v. Colyer, 180 Mich. 107.

§ 22. ——Acts in emergencies or in face of danger.

¶ 127. Where, by reason of the failure of a township to keep a highway in repair, travelers upon it are placed in a perilous position, no negligence can be imputed to a party in charge, if, acting upon the occasion, as it appeared to him to be, for the safety of himself and those in his charge, he did not take the precaution which upon consideration a more prudent man might have taken.—Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

¶ 128. One put suddenly in peril is not imperatively required to do that which, after the danger is ended, it appears would have led to safety. The law allows for fright and for the lack of cool judgment incident to such peril.—Fehnrich v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 87 Mich. 606.

§ 23. ——Alternative involving risk.

¶ 129. Where there are two known ways of doing a thing to adopt the more dangerous way because it is the more convenient is contributory negligence in case of accident.—Rohlfs v. Township of Fairgrove, 174 Mich. 555.

¶ 130. It is not necessarily negligence to take a choice of risks, or to do, without freedom of choice, an act involving danger; but it is negligence to risk life or limb merely to escape inconvenience or mental vexation.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bangs, 47 Mich. 470.

§ 24. ——Voluntary acts of exposure.

¶ 131. One who voluntarily exposes himself to evident risks caused by another's negligence cannot recover against the latter for bodily injuries resulting from such exposure, even though the exposure was for the purpose of saving property or the life of an animal.—Cook v. Johnston, 58 Mich. 437.

¶ 132. Defendant telephone company, while making an excavation in an alley, removed a service cock from a city water main laid four feet in the ground. The water spouted up into a second story window where plaintiff was in charge of a woman's athletic club. Plaintiff went to the window to close it in order to protect the property, and was knocked down and wetted by the stream of water and suffered illness as a result. Held, she was guilty of contributory negligence and could not recover.—Taylor v. Home Tel. Co., 163 Mich. 458.

Liability for injury to person coasting in street, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 648-657.

Liability for injuries resulting from driving traction engine or like slowly moving vehicle over railway crossing, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 415-427.

Attempting to stop runaway horse, as negligence, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 167-173.

§ 25. Contributory effect of plaintiff's negligence.

Contributory and concurring causes of injury, see ante § 15.

Avoidable damages denied because of plaintiff's neglect, see Damages §§ 22, 23.

¶ 133. In an action for negligent injury negligence by plaintiff which did not contribute to the injury need not be regarded.—Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 Mich. 1.

¶ 134. Contributory negligence in order to constitute a defense must have been negligence contributing to the injury itself for which the action is brought. If it was subsequent negligence, and only contributed to increase the injurious consequences, it goes to the amount of recovery only.—Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576.

¶ 135. It is not necessary that contributory negligence shall have "materially contributed" to the injury; it is enough if it contributes however slight the negligence is.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 136. The doctrine of responsibility notwithstanding discovered or discoverable negligence of the plaintiff does not apply where the plaintiff's negligence is subsequent or concurrent in the order of causation.—Labarge v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 134 Mich. 139.

¶ 137. Where plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence and such negligence ceased before that of defendant began, and did not again occur before or at the time of the accident, the jury should find for the plaintiff.—Fike v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 174 Mich. 167.

§ 26. Gross and wanton negligence of defendant; "last clear chance" rule.

See also ante ¶ 94.

What constitutes gross negligence, see also ante § 1.

Duty toward trespassers, see ante § 12.

Necessity of alleging wanton and wilful negligence, see post ¶ 205.

Proof of ordinary negligence where gross and wanton negligence alleged, see post § 41.

Inapplicability of doctrine of contributory negligence where injury is wilful, see Assault ¶ 51.

Last clear chance rule applied to passengers, see Carriers § 205.
Application to railroad accidents, see Railroads.

¶ 138. Contributory negligence is no defense if defendant's own conduct is wanton, wilful or reckless, and results in the injury complained of.—Bouwmeester v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 63 Mich. 557.

¶ 139. Gross negligence such as authorizes a recovery for a negligent injury notwithstanding plaintiff's contributory negligence is an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another, and also implies a thoughtless disregard of consequences, without the exertion of any effort to avoid them.—Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387; Frost v. Milwaukee & N. W. R. Co., 96 Mich. 470.

¶ 140. If a plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence he cannot recover unless the negligence of the defendant is wanton or wilful.—Rouse v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 158 Mich. 109.

¶ 141. The term "gross negligence," when referred to as authorizing a recovery for a negligent injury notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, means the intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another, and implies a thoughtless disregard of consequences without the exercise of any effort to avoid them.—Knickerbocker v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 167 Mich. 596.

¶ 142. Recovery for a negligent injury can be had despite the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's deceased only where there is evidence of gross and wanton negligence on the part of the defendant.—Knickerbocker v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 167 Mich. 596.

¶ 143. Gross negligence may be a deliberately wilful act; an act so reckless as to be akin to wilful, and therefore presumed in law to be wilful; a failure to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to another, after his peril is, or should have been, discovered in the exercise of ordinary care.—Walter v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry., 191 Mich. 181.

¶ 144. Where gross negligence of defendant caused the injury, the plaintiff may recover notwithstanding his contributory negligence.—Simon v. Detroit United Ry., 196 Mich. 586.

¶ 145. Gross negligence is the intentional failure to perform a manifest duty, in reckless disregard of the consequences, as affecting the life or property of another, and it implies a thoughtless disregard of the consequences, without the exercise of any effort to avoid them.—Wexel v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 190 Mich. 469; Vought v. Michigan United Traction Co., 194 Mich. 343; Simon v. Detroit United Ry., 196 Mich. 586.

¶ 146. The doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply to the case of one who omits ordinary care to avert an obvious injury to another.—Labarge v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 134 Mich. 139.

¶ 147. Reckless acts do not preclude the defense of contributory negligence if it can be said that they are not coincident with probable disaster.—Labarge v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 134 Mich. 139.

¶ 148. Where plaintiff's previous negligence has been discovered by defendant or his servant, or should, by the exercise of ordinary care, have been discovered in time to have avoided the injury, and the subsequent negligence of the defendant results in an injury to the plaintiff, the previous negligence of the plaintiff is not a bar to recovery.—Strong v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 156 Mich. 66.

¶ 149. The contributory negligence of plaintiff does not prevent recovery where the defendant who knows, or ought to know, by the exercise of ordinary care, of the precedent negligence of plaintiff, by his subsequent negligence injures plaintiff, the latter negligence being the proximate cause.—Fike v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 174 Mich. 167.

¶ 149a. The doctrine of discovered negligence is applied upon the ground that defendant's conduct, after the negligence of plaintiff was discovered, shows deliberate wrong, or intentional failure to perform a manifest duty, with thoughtless disregard of consequences, and without the exercise of any effort to avoid them.—Cardinal v. Houghton County St. Ry. Co., 174 Mich. 22.

¶ 150. Where the defendant discovers the peril of the plaintiff seasonably to prevent the accident, but in reckless, wanton or wilful disregard of the consequences omits to do what he ought to do or does what he ought not to do to avoid the accident, he is liable for such gross negligence.—Simon v. Detroit United Ry., 196 Mich. 586.

¶ 151. Where one has placed himself in a dangerous position the danger cannot excuse the negligence in having done so, by the fact that defendant also was under a duty to avoid it.—Daniels v. Bay City Traction & Elec. Co., 143 Mich. 493.

§ 27. Contributory negligence of trespasser.

¶ 152. Where a clandestine intruder upon another's premises is accidentally injured while the lawful possessor is expelling him, his contributory negligence should be considered in fixing responsibility therefor.—Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187.

Necessity for actual discovery of peril as condition to application of last clear chance doctrine in actions for injuries to drivers of vehicles at railroad crossings, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 127-148.
Doctrine of "last clear chance" or "discovered peril" applied to accidents to children, see notes, 3 N. C. C. A. 946-964; 5 N. C. C. A. 154, 155.
Presumption that traveler on street or highway will take notice of railway crossing, warning signals or approaching train, as limiting application of last clear chance rule, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 291-326.

§ 28. Contributory negligence of injured child's parent or custodian.

Imputing to child negligence of its parent or custodian, see post § 34.

¶ 153. Where a parent sues for the loss of services from the death of the child, the suit will be defeated by the parent's contributory negligence.—Feldman v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 486.

¶ 154. Where the child's personal representative sues for loss of services from the death of the child under the Death Act, Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10427, 10428, the suit will be defeated by the parent's contributory negligence where the parent is the real beneficiary.—Feldman v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 486.

¶ 155. A parent who allows an unattended child to ride on a street-car is not chargeable with negligence.—East Saginaw City Ry. Co. v. Bohn, 27 Mich. 503.

Contributory negligence of parent or custodian as preventing recovery for personal injury to child, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 124-133.
Contributory negligence of parent or custodian as defeating action to recover for negligence or wrongful death of child, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 486-497.

§ 29. Comparative negligence.

Comparative negligence of master and servant, see Master and Servant § 59a.

¶ 156. The doctrine of comparative negligence does not prevail in this state.—Matta v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 69 Mich. 109; Davis v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 131.

§ 30. Imputed negligence of another.

General doctrine of responsibility of principal for negligence of agent, see Agency § 49.

Liability of one party to logging contract for injury caused bridge by other party, see Bridges ¶ 79.
Liability of master for negligence of his servant, see Master and Servant, IV.

¶ 157. Contributory negligence to defeat a right of action must be that of the party injured.—Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 78 Mich. 513.

¶ 158. Where one suffers an injury through the concurrent negligence of two common carriers, the negligence of the one in whose conveyance the injured person is a passenger cannot be imputed to the passenger so as to bar his recovery against the other.—Galloway v. Detroit United Ry., 168 Mich. 343.

¶ 158a. One who contracts for logs to be cut and delivered at the mouth of a stream is not liable under Comp. L. 1897, § 4160, for injuries caused to a bridge through the negligence of the other party to the contract.—Overseer of Highways of Road District No. 4 of St. Ignace Township v. Pelton, 129 Mich. 31.

Liability of owner of automobile for death or injury due to negligent operation of car by member of family, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 453-481.

§ 31. Negligence of driver of vehicle imputed to person injured.

¶ 159. Where a passenger in a conveyance can have no control over those in charge of it he cannot be held to be so identified with them as to be considered a party to their negligence.—Cuddy v. Horn, 46 Mich. 596.

¶ 160. The rule by which one who rides in a private conveyance is presumed to control or be identified with the driver, and to have no right of action for any injury done him by a collision caused by the driver's negligence, cannot apply to passengers in public conveyances, such as railway cars or steamboats, even though they have chartered the conveyance.—Cuddy v. Horn, 46 Mich. 596.

¶ 161. The negligence of the driver of a fire engine is not imputable to the engineer standing on the rear of the engine so as to preclude his recovery for personal injuries caused by a collision with a street car.—McKernan v. Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 138 Mich. 519.

Negligence of chauffeur as imputable to passenger, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 22, 23.
Injury to passenger caused by negligent operation of automobile, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 910-926.

§ 32. ——To voluntary passenger or guest.

Duty toward volunteers, see ante § 12.

¶ 162. Where a woman who has arrived at the age of discretion voluntarily enters the private carriage of another, to ride, and, by his carelessness in driving over an obstruction in a public street, is injured, his negligence is imputable to her, and bars a recovery by her against the municipality for the injuries received.—Mullen v. Owosso, 100 Mich. 103.

¶ 163. The negligence of the driver is imputed to one riding with him in a wagon.—Pike v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 174 Mich. 167.

¶ 164. A person riding as a guest of another person in the latter's automobile is precluded from recovery for personal injuries against a street railway company by the contributory negligence of said other person in running the car.—Kneeshaw v. Detroit United Ry., 169 Mich. 697.

¶ 165. Where a woman of mature years voluntarily entered an automobile belonging to a friend to ride with him, and was injured by collision with a street car. Held, that the negligence of the driver was properly imputed to her.—Colborne v. Detroit United Ry., 177 Mich. 139.

¶ 166. In an action for personal injuries sustained in a collision between two automobiles held that the contributory negligence of the driver might be imputed to a passenger injured while riding in the car on the driver's invitation.—Granger v. Farrant, 179 Mich. 19.

¶ 167. The negligence of the driver of a private conveyance is imputable to a voluntary passenger of mature years.—Lake v. Township of Springville, 187 Mich. 305.

¶ 168. One who is injured from a defect in a highway while a voluntary passenger in a private conveyance driven by another, in order to recover must show that neither of them was guilty of negligence which caused or contributed to the injury.—Lake v. Township of Springville, 187 Mich. 305.

¶ 169. A voluntary passenger in a private conveyance assumes the risk of the driver's negligence.—Lake v. Township of Springville, 187 Mich. 305.

¶ 170. A township is not answerable for injuries sustained by the plaintiff who was thrown from a private conveyance in which he was riding as a voluntary passenger, where the driver unnecessarily deviated from the traveled portion of a highway and encountered an obstruction at the side of the road which he saw and unsuccessfully attempted to avoid, since the negligence of the driver was imputable to the plaintiff.—Lake v. Township of Springville, 187 Mich. 305.

Liability of partner for negligent act or omission of copartner, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 779-786.
Liability of owner or operator of automobile for injury to guest, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 858-871.
Injury to passenger caused by negligent operation of automobile, see notes, 1 N. C. C. A. 134-138; 13 N. C. C. A. 910-926.

§ 33. ——To infant.

¶ 171. In an action by a child five years old for personal injuries where the declaration charged gross negligence, and the jury found the defendant guilty of such gross negligence, the defendant is not excused though the driver of the team which was struck may have been guilty of contributory negligence.—Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. Railroad Co., 87 Mich. 400.

¶ 172. A 13-year-old infant riding in a carriage through invitation of its driver is not chargeable with his contributory negligence so as to prevent recovery for injuries received in a railroad grade crossing accident.—Hampel v. Detroit, Grand Rapids & W. R. Co., 138 Mich. 1.

¶ 173. The negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be imputed to an infant occupying the car as a passenger.—Donlin v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 327.

§ 34. Negligence of parent or custodian imputed to child injured.

Contributory negligence of parent or custodian, see ante § 28.

¶ 174. A parent is not guilty of negligence, imputable to the child, in allowing a child to take the street railway cars by itself, if the company consents so to receive it, and if it is of an age which would justify its being alone in the public streets, because the company undertakes to provide a safe conveyance.—East Saginaw City Ry. Co. v. Bohn, 27 Mich. 503.

¶ 175. A child less than four years of age cannot be guilty of negligence, nor can the negligence of its parents be imputed to it where suit is brought in its behalf.—Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280.

¶ 176. Quære, whether the negligence of the parents of a three-year-old child, injured where it strayed upon a railroad track, could be imputed to it.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 494, Morse, J., writing that it could not, Campbell, C. J., with Champlin, J., regarding the question as not involved, and Sherwood, J., concurring only in the result.

¶ 177. Failure of parents to restrain a child, which wanders upon a railroad track and there is injured, is not negligence imputable to the child unless there was ability on the part of the parents to give better care than was given.—Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 66 Mich. 390, Champlin, J., concurring in the result, and Morse, J., also concurring in the result with the reservation that negligence of the parents cannot affect recovery by the child.

¶ 178. Negligence of a father in leading his boy, aged four years and three months, on a sidewalk that was negligently allowed to have holes in it cannot be imputed to the boy injured by stepping into a hole.—Boehm v. City of Detroit, 141 Mich. 277.

¶ 179. Where a child sues in his own right, his suit cannot be defeated by reason of the negligence of his parent.—Feldman v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 486.

¶ 180. In an action under the Survival Act for injuries causing the death of a child five years old, the negligence of the parents cannot affect recovery.—Love v. Detroit, J. & C. R. Co., 170 Mich. 1.

¶ 181. A child of five years cannot be charged with contributory negligence, and the negligence of his parents cannot affect recovery for injuries resulting in his death in a suit under the Survival Act (Comp. L. 1897, § 10117).—Love v. Detroit, J. & C. R. Co., 170 Mich. 1.

¶ 182. Negligence of parents of a child in permitting servant girls to bring a vicious dog into their home, where it attacked the child, cannot be imputed to such child.—Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 675; writ of error dismissed in 179 U. S. 127, 45 L. ed. 119, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71.

§ 35. Imputing to one spouse negligence of the other.

¶ 183. Where a child of five years suffers injuries resulting in his death, and suit is brought by the father as administrator under the Survival Act (Comp. L. 1897, § 10117), the contributory negligence of the mother in permitting the accident is not imputable to the father so as to bar recovery.—Love v. Detroit, J. & C. R. Co., 170 Mich. 1.

¶ 184. A wife's right to damages for being thrown—by reason of the negligence of intoxicated persons to whom defendant sold liquor—from a carriage in which she was riding with her husband is not affected by her husband's contributory negligence.—Wright v. Treat, 83 Mich. 110.

§ 36. Imputing to employee negligence of employer.

¶ 185. In an action against receivers of a street railway company for the death of a yardmaster in a collision between a street-car and a backing railroad train which was in charge of such roadmaster, the negligence of the railroad company in not keeping a watchman, was not imputable to the deceased.—Philip v. Heraty, 135 Mich. 446.

¶ 186. Where more than one party is guilty of a negligent act the injured party may sue them jointly or severally.—Richard v. Detroit, R. R. & L. O. Ry., 129 Mich. 458.

Liability of motor boat operator for injury to bather, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 1098.

Liability of generating company for negligence of electric distributing company, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 1038-1048.

Liability of prospective purchaser for injury to automobile while learning to drive, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 761-762.

§ 38. Pleading in general.

Pleading damages, see Pleading, X.

¶ 187. A declaration for negligent injury must set forth the duty which has been neglected, and aver the neglect, and the case fails if such neglect is not proved.—Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Stark, 38 Mich. 714.

¶ 188. A declaration for negligent injury must aver the fact and the manner of negligence, and plaintiff should be confined to what is set forth in his declaration.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 Mich. 433.

¶ 189. A party suing for negligent injury is bound to set forth in his declaration the material facts relied on as his cause of action, and to prove the same combination of circumstances.—Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 184.

¶ 190. Where the facts stated in a declaration for negligence clearly imply the defendant's duty, it need not be expressly averred.—Geveke v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 Mich. 589.

¶ 191. One seeking to recover for negligence must state in his declaration the duty and the neglect of duty upon which he relies, and he is confined in his proof and recovery to the allegations of his declaration.—Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 86 Mich. 496.

¶ 192. In actions on the case for negligent injury the plaintiff must allege in his declaration and prove on the trial that the injury complained of was occasioned by defendant's negligence, particularly specifying the duty and the breach thereof which constituted negligence, and averring also that plaintiff himself was in the exercise of ordinary care, and did not by his own negligence contribute to the injury.—Thompson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 57 Mich. 300.

¶ 193. A declaration in an action of trespass on the case for negligence is sufficiently certain when the neglect of duty relied on and the resultant injury are described with substantial accuracy.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 68 Mich. 133.

¶ 194. In an action on the case for negligence, the injury complained of, and for the consequences of which suit is brought, must be charged with reasonable certainty, so that there can be no difficulty in knowing what to meet in the proofs.—Shadock v. Alpine Plank Road Co., 79 Mich. 7.

¶ 195. A declaration for a negligent injury is fatally defective if it alleges neither the exercise of due care on plaintiff's part nor negligence on defendant's.—Torongo v. Salliotte, 99 Mich. 41.

¶ 196. When plaintiff properly avers the negligence of the defendant, it is not essential that he should set out the facts which go to establish it.—Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co., 154 Mich. 423.

¶ 197. Where, in a suit for personal injuries, the declaration alleges the negligence of the defendant in not providing a certain attachment, as the cause of the accident, it is not necessary to deny all other possible causes.—Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co., 154 Mich. 423.

¶ 198. In suing for damages from negligence plaintiff must count on the negligence relied on; but when this is properly averred he need not set out the facts which go to establish it. When defendant is notified with what negligence he is charged, he is thereby informed that the circumstances which tend to show whether he was wanting in due care in that particular will be in issue.—Lucas v. Wattles, 49 Mich. 380.

¶ 199. In an action to recover for property destroyed by fire alleged to have been negligently set by defendants, the words "wilfully, wantonly, negligently and unlawfully" if used in the declaration in connection with other words imputing negligence on the defendant's part, do not imply that the act of setting fire was done with the direct purpose of injuring plaintiff, nor require evidence that the defendants acted maliciously.—Richter v. Harper, 95 Mich. 221.

¶ 200. The case of Montgomery v. Muskegon Booming Co., 88 Mich. 633, as to declaration for wilful negligence, overruled, in so far as "wilful" and "wanton" imply a direct purpose to injure plaintiff.—Richter v. Harper, 95 Mich. 221.

¶ 201. In an action against two defendants for negligence it is unnecessary to allege or prove a joint duty towards plaintiff and, if defendants are charged with several duties and the neglect of them concurs to injure plaintiff an action may be maintained and recovery had against both.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

§ 39. ——Neglect of statutory duty.

Amendment alleging different negligence as ground for continuance, see Continuances § 4.

¶ 202. A declaration for damages arising from the neglect of a duty imposed by a general statute—e. g., that requiring railroads to be fenced—need not be specially framed upon the statute or refer to it.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 Mich. 444.

§ 40. Negativing contributory negligence.

Contributory negligence in general, see ante § 17.

¶ 203. A declaration for negligent injury is not demurrable for failing to state that the injured person did not know of the danger, if it does aver that he was without fault.—James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335.

¶ 204. A declaration for negligent injury must, ordinarily, not only allege that the injury was caused by defendant's negligence, but also that plaintiff was free from negligence materially contributing to the injury. —Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387.

¶ 205. If plaintiff cannot set up such a combination of facts as show that he is free from negligence on his part, he must by proper allegation charge that the injury was caused by the wanton or wilful negligence of defendant, such as in law amounts to gross negligence, and a reckless disregard of the consequences of his neglect.—Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387.

§ 41. Issues, surplusage, necessary proofs, and variance.

See also ante ¶¶ 188, 191, 198.

Nature of plaintiff's interest in the injured property and defendant's notice thereof, see also ante ¶ 18.

General law as to issues and variance, see Pleading, IX, X.

¶ 206. In a personal injury case it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove all the acts of negligence alleged. If any negligent act of defendants is charged which resulted in the injury to plaintiff he is entitled to recover, although the declaration may have charged other acts of negligence which are not proven, or which may not in law be negligent.—Warren v. Porter, 144 Mich. 699.

¶ 207. It is not necessary for a plaintiff to prove all of the acts of negligence charged; if any unlawful neglect of defendant is charged which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff complained of, he is entitled to recover, although the declaration may have charged other acts of defendant as negligence which were not proven.—Lepard v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 166 Mich. 373.

¶ 208. In a declaration for a negligent injury the only negligence that need be alleged is that which caused the mischief complained of; and redundant charges, of specific duties and neglects if allowed to be proved, may confuse the real issues.—Thorsen v. Babcock, 68 Mich. 523.

¶ 209. Under a declaration in one count alleging that the injury was due to the concurrence of each of several acts of negligence set out, for the lack of any of which the injury would not have happened, each element of negligence so alleged must be proved to warrant a recovery.—Wormsdorf v. Detroit City R. Co., 75 Mich. 472.

[Note. Official syllabus 1 of above case is condemned in Whipple v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 143 Mich. 41, and limited to what is above stated.]

¶ 210. The introduction of the words "falsely and fraudulently" as well as the words "carelessly and negligently" is surplusage in a count the gravamen of which is expressed to be negligence merely.—Smith v. Holmes, 54 Mich. 104.

¶ 211. It is proper to allow a recovery for ordinary negligence, although the declaration alleges gross and wanton negligence.—Gorton v. Harmon, 152 Mich. 473.

¶ 212. Although the declaration for a personal injury characterizes defendant's negligence as gross and wanton, plaintiff need only prove actionable negligence.—Keating v. Detroit B. C. & A. R. Co., 104 Mich. 418.

¶ 213. The fact that a declaration in a negligence action characterizes the negligence of the defendant as wilful and wanton does not prevent a recovery for ordinary negligence.—Hook v. Soloman, 194 Mich. 517.

¶ 214. Where several concurrent acts of negligence are alleged in a single count of a declaration, plaintiff's right of recovery is not affected by his failure to introduce evidence under an allegation that is immaterial. —Thayer v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 93 Mich. 150.

¶ 215. In an action for a negligent injury a recovery cannot be had upon a ground of negligence not alleged in the declaration.— Mitchell v. Prange, 110 Mich. 78.

¶ 216. There can be no recovery in an action for negligent injuries, on the theory of the gross negligence of the defendant after discovering the plaintiff's peril, where such theory is not disclosed by the declaration.— Wells v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 184 Mich. 1.

Admissibility of evidence of specific original injuries not alleged eo nomine in the complaint, petition or declaration in negligence actions, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 618-630.

Admissibility of evidence as to unpleaded physical injuries or conditions when symptomatic of injuries alleged to have been sustained through negligence on part of defendant in personal injury actions, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 736-744.

Burden of proof in actions for injuries from defective highways, see Highways, XII, H.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to negligence in actions for injuries upon highways, see Highways §§ 230, 387.

¶ 217. Where the declaration in an action for personal injuries does not allege that plaintiff is mentally weak, evidence as to such weakness is not admissible to negative contributory negligence or assumption of risk.—Hill v. Abram Smith & Son, 176 Mich. 151.

¶ 218. Negligence cannot be presumed in an action for injury arising therefrom, but it must be proved affirmatively.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Judson, 34 Mich. 506; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51; Brown v. Congress & B. St. R. Co., 49 Mich. 153; Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 51 Mich. 236.

¶ 219. In an action for negligent injury plaintiff has the burden of showing defendant's negligence.—Le Baron v. Joslin, 41 Mich. 313; Bradley v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 94 Mich. 35.

¶ 220. Negligence cannot be presumed against the defendant in an action for personal injury if it did nothing outside of the usual course of its business, unless that course of business was itself improper, or special circumstances required particular caution.—Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. Ry., 51 Mich. 236.

¶ 221. Negligence must be affirmatively proved; but, like other facts, it may be shown by irresistible inference from circumstances.—Alpern v. Churchill, 53 Mich. 607; Schoepper v. Hancock Chemical Co., 113 Mich. 582.

¶ 222. In a personal injury case, the negligence of defendant may be proved by showing the manner and circumstances of the injury.—O'Donnell v. Lange, 162 Mich. 654.

¶ 223. An inference of negligence may be drawn from all the circumstances of a case by the jury.—Dyer v. Peoples Ice Co., 188 Mich. 203.

¶ 224. Negligence, when relied upon as a cause of action, must be proved. It may be inferred from facts proved, but not from mere conjecture.—Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 61.

¶ 225. Negligence cannot be presumed, but must be alleged and affirmatively shown.—Perry v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 108 Mich. 130.

¶ 226. Where a presumption of defendant's negligence exists in a suit for personal injuries, the burden of proof does not shift to the defendant, but rests all the time upon the plaintiff.—Sewell v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 407.

§ 43. ——Presumptions from mere happening of accident; res ipsa loquitur.

Presumptions as to negligence from occurrence of injury, see also Carriers § 210; Master and Servant § 63a et seq.
Insufficiency of mere loss to establish negligence, see also Carriers § 88.

¶ 227. Negligence must be founded on competent evidence, and will not be presumed from the mere fact of the occurrence of the accident on the defendant's land.—Early v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 Mich. 349.

¶ 228. Negligence will not be presumed from the mere fact of accident, which is as consistent with the presumption that it was unavoidable as it is with negligence, and there should be some evidence that it could have been avoided with proper diligence and precaution.—Stern v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 76 Mich. 591.

¶ 229. Negligence will not be presumed from the bare fact of the accident; in order to make defendant liable as for negligence, there must have existed before its occurrence some suggestion of danger.—Werbowlsky v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 86 Mich. 236.

¶ 230. Negligence cannot be inferred merely from an accident and consequent injury.—Robinson v. Charles Wright & Co., 94 Mich. 283.

¶ 231. The general rule is that negligence cannot be inferred from the mere fact of an accident and injury and cannot be founded on guess or conjecture; at least this is true where there is no obligation to exercise that high degree of care which applies in cases of common carriers or warehousemen.—Redmond v. Delta Lumber Co., 96 Mich. 545.

¶ 232. The mere happening of an accident raises no presumption of negligence so as to change the burden of proof.—Gardner v. Detroit St. R. Co., 99 Mich. 182.

¶ 233. The mere happening of an accident, or proof of injury resulting therefrom, raises no presumption of negligence.—Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. v. Park, 197 Mich. 142.

¶ 234. Negligence cannot be presumed; the mere fact of an accident is not sufficient to impose a liability for negligence.—Renders v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 144 Mich. 387.

¶ 235. Negligence in a personal injury case cannot be proved by plaintiff merely by showing the fact of injury.—O'Donnell v. Lange, 162 Mich. 654.

¶ 236. The mere fact of an accident occurring is no evidence of negligence.—Fuller v. Wurzburg Dry Goods Co., 192 Mich. 447; Gaines v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 193 Mich. 398; Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447; Elsey v. J. L. Hudson Co., 189 Mich. 135.

¶ 237. No presumption of negligence arises from the fact that an automobile in charge of the defendant's servant, ran into the rear of the plaintiff's vehicle and injured him.—Grogitzki v. Detroit Ambulance Co., 186 Mich. 374.

¶ 238. While negligence, like any fact, may be inferred from the circumstances, yet something more must be shown than the mere happening of an accident.—Fuller v. Wurzburg Dry Goods Co., 192 Mich. 447.

¶ 239. The occurrence of an accident (sinking of a boat) does not raise a presumption of negligence but the accident may be taken into consideration along with the other facts of the case to determine the question of negligence.—La Fernier v. Soo River Lighter & Wrecking Co., 129 Mich. 596.

¶ 240. While it is true that the mere fact of an injury does not impute negligence on the part of anyone, yet where a thing happens which would not ordinarily have occurred, if due care had been used, the fact of such happening raises a presumption of negligence in someone.—Barnowsky v. Helson, 89 Mich. 523.

¶ 241. The rule that where an injury occurs that cannot be accounted for, and the occasion of it rests wholly in conjecture, the case may fail for want of proof, will not be extended so as to deny a right of action to an injured person where there is room for balancing the probabilities, and for drawing reasonable inferences better supported upon his theory than upon that of the defense.—Schoepper v. Hancock Chemical Co., 113 Mich. 582.

¶ 242. When a personal injury is connected with defective or unsafe machinery or appliances, or some improper conduct in the operating or management of a particular business carrying with it exclusive knowledge of the cause of such injury, a presumption of negligence may arise from mere proof of the accident.—Serviss v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 564.

Presumption against contributory negligence of person dying unwitnessed, see Death by Wrongful Act § 18.

Presumption that person killed exercised due care for self-preservation, see Negligence, V, B.

¶ 243. If plaintiff brings action for a negligent injury, and the action of the two parties must have concurred to produce it, it devolves upon him to show that he was not guilty of negligence; and if he gives no evidence to establish that fact, the court may properly instruct the jury that they should return a verdict for defendant.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 243a. In cases of collision of vessels the burden of proof is on plaintiff not only to show negligence on defendant's part but ordinary care on his own.—Drew v. The Chesapeake, 2 D. 33.

¶ 244. In an action for a negligent injury the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that she acted with due care, or that her own negligence did not contribute to the injury, as well as that the company was guilty of such negligence. It was error to charge that "the plaintiff is not bound to prove more than enough to raise a fair presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant, and of resulting injury to herself, and if she does this, she is entitled to recover unless the defendant produce evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption."—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274.

¶ 244a. The burden of proof of negligence resting on plaintiff requires him to show that the defendant was entirely responsible and that no negligence of plaintiff contributed to the injury.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 245. The burden is on the plaintiff to show as part of a prima facie case that he was free from contributory negligence; but it need not be shown by direct evidence.—Billings v. Breinig, 45 Mich. 65.

¶ 246. Negligence is not to be presumed, but must be affirmatively proved by the party alleging it in the manner pleaded; and the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that defendant was entirely responsible for the injury complained of by reason of the neglect pleaded, and that the party injured did not contribute to it.—Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 59 Mich. 257.

¶ 247. In an action to recover damages sustained because of defendant's negligence the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that the injured party was exercising ordinary care at the time of the injury, and that the injury was the result of defendant's negligence.—Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 67 Mich. 677.

¶ 248. Reasonable care on plaintiff's part to avoid the injury for which he sues need not be shown by direct or conclusive evidence.—Carver v. Detroit & S. Plank Road Co., 69 Mich. 616.

¶ 249. One who seeks damages for defendant's negligence must show not only that the injury was caused thereby, but also that he himself was not guilty of any negligence materially contributing to such injury.—Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387.

¶ 250. It cannot be assumed that a drinking man, or one addicted to the use of liquors, is always drunk, or always in a condition which excludes the possibility of the exercise of due care.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 251. One seeking to recover for the negligence of another must show freedom on his own part from negligence causing or contributing to his injury.—Webber v. Billings, 184 Mich. 119.

Physical facts in overcoming presumption of due care in case of fatal accident in absence of eyewitness, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 535-549.

¶ 252. In an action for negligence actual knowledge on the principal's part of the danger likely to result may be shown even though his agent's knowledge would be enough to render him liable; since it tends to show a higher duty of care.—Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181.

¶ 253. In an action for injuries received by falling into a turn-table pit in a railroad company's yard, evidence of accidents which happened to others in the same place is inadmissible.—Early v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 Mich. 349.

¶ 254. In an action for injuries caused to an inspector by the explosion of a boiler where the negligence alleged was want of reasonable inspection of the boiler, it is error to exclude evidence tending to show that it was not practicable to remove the flues from the boiler for the purpose of examining the braces, and to show the construction of the boiler, since such testimony had a bearing on the question whether ordinarily prudent and careful men would make such inspection.—Merryman v. Hall, 131 Mich. 406.

¶ 255. In an action for injuries to a two-year-old child resulting from its placing its hand on a wire cable running through a pulley and employed in moving a house, evidence by defendant that the agencies employed were those customarily used in moving houses, held admissible.—Slack v. Curry, 177 Mich. 437.

¶ 256. In the absence of evidence pointing to one cause or another as to the sinking of a rowboat with its passengers, so long as the cause is plainly conjectural, it is proper to prove, in an action for the negligent death of an occupant of such rowboat against the one letting it to prove, as accounting for the disappearance of the boat, that the youths who were in it had a few minutes earlier rocked the boat.—Clark v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 197 Mich. 489, 15 N. C. C. A. 1033.

¶ 257. It is not competent for the plaintiff in a negligence case to make proof of other accidents only for the purpose of proving the condition or dangerous nature of the place complained of, since that would be raising collateral issues.—Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464.

¶ 258. In a suit for personal injuries on the ground of the negligence of the defendant in maintaining an unsafe place, it is not competent to prove an absence of accidents as tending to show an absence of negligence. —Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464.

¶ 259. The condition of a machine at the time of an injury to an employee cannot be shown by evidence of its condition and operation at a previous date, where the evidence tends to show that it had been repaired before the accident.—Lydman v. De Haas, 185 Mich. 128, 8 N. C. C. A. 649.

¶ 260. In an action against the letter for hire of a rowboat for the death of an occupant, alleged to be due to the sinking of the boat because of its defective condition, evidence of the condition of other rowboats of defendant is inadmissible.—Clark v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 197 Mich. 489, 15 N. C. C. A. 1033.

¶ 261. In an action for personal injuries caused by plaintiff's horse taking fright through defendant's negligence, it is proper to show the animal's character for gentleness and plaintiff's knowledge concerning it.—Wiltse v. State Road Bridge Co., 63 Mich. 639.

¶ 262. Proof of the reasons for precautions taken after an accident does not indicate foreknowledge of their necessity, and is irrelevant in an action for resulting injury if evidence is given of the real condition and appearance of the premises beforehand.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

¶ 263. Where a party sued for services in moving a building seeks recoupment for injury to the building, the opinion of a third person expressed before the removal to plaintiff, as to the proper method of guarding against such injuries, is immaterial on the question of unskilfulness and neglect in moving it in another way.—Curren v. Ampersee, 96 Mich. 553.

¶ 264. In an action for personal injuries sustained by stumbling over a flagstone left upon a sidewalk evidence of plaintiff's defective eyesight is admissible as bearing upon the question of due care on her part. —Wedderburn v. City of Detroit, 144 Mich. 684.

¶ 265. In an action for a personal injury caused by an obstruction in a highway it cannot be shown that plaintiff was addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, but only whether he was intoxicated on the night of the accident; as it cannot be assumed that a drinking man is always drunk or in a condition which excludes the possibility of the exercise of due care.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 266. Evidence that a spectator, who was injured at a circus by the negligent explosion of a firecracker, had been intoxicated on other occasions is proper as bearing on the question of his capacity to earn money, but for no other purpose.—Herrick v. Wixom, 121 Mich. 384.

¶ 267. The negligence of the defendant must be established in an action for personal injuries, from competent evidence or reasonable inferences therefrom, and not from mere conjecture.—Broudy v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 330.

¶ 268. In an action for personal injuries sustained through negligence it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove sufficient of the substantive charges of negligence contained in his declaration to make out a liability in fact, although negligent acts may be charged which are not proven.—Whipple v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 143 Mich. 41.

¶ 269. Where several acts of negligence are charged in the declaration in an action for personal injuries it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove all of the acts but if any unlawful neglect is charged which resulted in the injury complained of plaintiff is entitled to recover though other acts of negligence charged have not been proved.—Le Fleur v. Michigan Alkali Co., 175 Mich. 404.

¶ 270. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, plaintiff cannot recover upon proof of facts equally as consistent with the absence of negligence as with its presence.—Heath v. Calkins, 157 Mich. 288.

¶ 271. Where the facts and circumstances surrounding an injury are such as to justify an inference of negligence, no further proof of negligence is required.—Mirabile v. Simon J. Murphy Co., 169 Mich. 522.

¶ 272. Where there is evidence to justify a finding that a manufactured article was, inherently, imminently dangerous to life and limb, the same evidence raises an implication of knowledge on the part of the manufacturer.—Pierce v. C. H. Bidwell Thresher Co., 153 Mich. 323.

¶ 273. In determining whether or not a party has been guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, it is the duty of the court to accept as truthful the testimony offered on behalf of plaintiff, and to give such testimony, when subject to different inferences, that construction most favorable to the plaintiff.—Strong v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 156 Mich. 66.

¶ 274. In a suit by a child for personal injury on a merry-go-round, evidence must be introduced to connect the defendant with the injury, and it is not enough to show that he filed a bond to release the merry-go-round from an attachment.—Harris v. Crawley, 161 Mich. 383.

¶ 275. In a suit for personal injuries, plaintiff alleged in his declaration that defendant and himself were engaged in unloading an iron box from a truck; that defendant let go of his side of the box, causing it to fall on plaintiff; and that defendant ordered the teamster to start the truck, causing the box to fall on the plaintiff. Held, the plaintiff might recover though he failed to prove that defendant ordered the truck started, where he did prove the other allegation.—Malkowski v. Olfs, 161 Mich. 303.

¶ 276. While negligence cannot be inferred from the bare fact of the accident, or guilt found upon mere speculation and conjecture without facts from which reasonable and logical inferences can be drawn, recovery is not limited to those cases where plaintiff can produce direct testimony of the specific defect in a certain part of the mechanism, or diagnose the particular cause of inefficiency and prescribe the remedy.—Ammer v. Postal, 168 Mich. 405.

¶ 277. Malice, warranting a charge on a theory of malicious negligence, does not appear from testimony that plaintiff, an employee of a lumber company engaged at the time in unloading a car, was injured by the act of the defendant in loosing another car for a proper purpose and letting it run down the grade so that it struck plaintiff while at work, and that defendant had had some minor disagreement with the son of plaintiff's employer; where it also appears that defendant did not know plaintiff or any of his coemployees and denied any malice toward the employer or any of its officers or employees and had said or done nothing which betokened any ill feeling.—McCallum v. Davidson, 95 Mich. 382.

§ 48. ——As to proximate cause.

Proximate cause in general, see ante § 13.
Jury questions as to cause of accident, see post § 52.
Instructions as to proximate cause, see post § 59.

¶ 278. Where the evidence in an action for personal injuries, leaves it uncertain whether one's physical condition was due to a fall caused by another's negligence, or an ailment of long standing, there can be no recovery.—Blair v. Seitner Dry Goods Co., 184 Mich. 304.

¶ 279. Where one having in his custody a small child, in attempting to catch a falling post, was knocked down by it and the child was injured either by the post or the person, in whose charge he was, falling on him, the evidence was held to show that the proximate cause of the child's injury was the falling of the post.—Butler v. Watson, 193 Mich. 322, 16 N. C. C. A. 1013.

§ 49. ——Defects in machinery or appliances.

Negligent use of machinery, substances and appliances, see ante § 7.

¶ 280. In an action for personal injuries sustained through the giving way of a rope on a swinging scaffold furnished by the defendant under contract with the plaintiff who was to paint an elevator, evidence that the plaintiff had 17 years' experience in the business, that he examined the rope carefully, that the defect, if any, was not apparent and that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant's servants had any knowledge of an alleged tendency of elevator dust to cause dry rot in rope, as testified by several witnesses, is sufficient to show no negligence in the defendant.—McGregor v. Grand Trunk Elevator Co., 129 Mich. 469.

¶ 281. It is error to direct a finding for the defendant in a case for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff a government inspector, by the explosion of a boiler upon a dredge causing plaintiff to be thrown, where the plaintiff offered testimony to support the theory that the explosion was caused by the negligence of the fireman in leaving the boiler for a considerable period without checking the drafts thus causing the steam to be raised beyond capacity.—Merryman v. Hall, 124 Mich. 263.

¶ 282. In an action for personal injuries caused by the explosion of a boiler a prima facie case is made out by testimony that more than 60 pounds pressure was dangerous, that the safety valve was set at 90 pounds, that immediately before the explosion the boiler carried 80 pounds, and that this pressure was necessary to do its work, that an inspection after the accident indicated that the explosion was caused by overpressure.—Beunk v. Valley City Desk Co., 128 Mich. 562.

¶ 283. In an action for personal injuries sustained in a boiler explosion, where defendant claimed to have done all that due care required to discover any defect in the boiler, a judgment for plaintiff, a government inspector of vessels, upon a third trial of the case was not disturbed, where the testimony as to the good condition of the boiler was contradictory and was discredited by the event.—Merryman v. Hall, 136 Mich. 296.

§ 50. ——Contributory negligence.

Contributory negligence in general, see ante § 17.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to contributory negligence, see ante § 44.

Admissibility of evidence as to contributory negligence, see ante § 46.

Instructions on contributory negligence, see post §§ 60, 61.

¶ 284. Testimony to prove want of reasonable care on the part of the injured person need not be such as to drive the jury to that conclusion.—Mynning v. Detroit, Lansing & N. R. Co., 67 Mich. 677.

¶ 285. While knowledge of the existence of a defect or danger is evidence of contributory negligence, it is not conclusive.—Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., 85 Mich. 519.

¶ 286. In an action by an administrator against a railroad to recover for the death of a boy nine years and six months, the allegation of his age in the declaration, coupled merely with proof thereof at the trial, is not sufficient to establish that freedom from contributory negligence essential to recovery.—Mollica v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 170 Mich. 96.

¶ 287. The question of contributory negligence upon the part of a child twelve years old who was drowned by falling into an old, partially concealed and unguarded mining hole situated about 200 feet from a highway and 15 feet from a much traveled footpath should not be presented to the jury where no witness saw the child fall in the hole and no conditions about the hole were shown which would lead to a reasonable theory as to how he got in the hole.—Peklenk v. Isle Royale Copper Co., 187 Mich. 644.

Failure of passenger or guest in hired vehicle to control driver as contributory negligence, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 485-502.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see ante § 47.

General law as to jury questions, see Trial, VI.

Questions for jury in actions for death, see Death by Wrongful Act §§ 29, 30.

Putting ashes in wooden receptacle in violation of ordinance, as negligence per se, see Fires ¶ 36.

Negligence of workmen in failing to discover steam pipes in street as jury question, see also Highways ¶ 612.

Unskillful or negligent performance of contract as jury question, see Contracts § 342; Master and Servant, II.

¶ 288. The question of negligence, where there is any evidence fairly tending to prove it, is for the jury.—Hassenyer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 48 Mich. 205; Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 64 Mich. 93; Nelson v. Lumberman's Min. Co., 65 Mich. 288.

¶ 289. A question of negligence is a question of fact as a general rule.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99; Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 Mich. 492; Le Baron v. Joslin, 41 Mich. 313; Sheldon v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 59 Mich. 172; Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 59 Mich. 257.

¶ 290. To warrant the court in any case in instructing the jury that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence the case must be so clear against him as to warrant no other inference.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 291. If the question of negligence depends upon a disputed state of facts, or if the facts, though not disputed, are such that different minds might honestly draw different conclusions from them, the court cannot give positive instructions, but must leave the jury to draw their own conclusions upon the facts and upon the question of negligence depending upon them.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 292. The degree of care required of a party is a question of law for the court and should not be left to the jury to determine, as it would be by a charge that he must exercise "such a degree of care as the law requires."—Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 57 Mich. 216.

¶ 293. Where, in an action for negligence, the facts are not in dispute, but are such that different minds may honestly draw different conclusions from them, the question of negligence is for the jury.—Ashman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 90 Mich. 567; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 108.

¶ 294. The question of diligence or reasonable care is generally one of mixed law and fact and never exclusively one of fact; juries may act upon it only where there is evidence tending to prove it; the existence of such evidence and its relevancy, and tendency to prove diligence, are questions of law; so, also, where there is no evidence tending to prove diligence and where facts found or admitted are such that all reasonable men will be likely to draw from them the same inference.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274.

¶ 295. The question whether there is evidence tending to show negligence is one of law, to be determined from the testimony only. Where the court is in doubt, the case should go to the jury.—Palmer v. Harrison, 57 Mich. 182.

¶ 296. Negligence may sometimes be inferred from all the evidence taken together, even though the only direct evidence on the subject tends to negative it; and wherever the facts might support different inferences it is a question for a jury.—Crosby v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 58 Mich. 458.

¶ 297. The question of negligence is usually for the jury to determine under all the circumstances of the case; but when shown by undisputed evidence that the owner of an opera house left unguarded, except by a railing 19 inches high, a hole at the side of a sidewalk on the opera house premises, such sidewalk being used by the public with his permission, it is a question of law for the court.—Brezee v. Powers, 80 Mich. 172.

¶ 298. The court cannot properly pass upon the question of negligence, except in cases where the facts are such that all reasonable men would be likely to draw from them the same inference.—Sadowski v. Michigan Car Co., 84 Mich. 100; Snyder v. King, 199 Mich. 345.

¶ 298a. The question of negligence is one of law for the court only where the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion from them; and a case should not be withdrawn from the jury unless the conclusion follows as matter of law that no recovery can be had upon any view that can properly be taken of the facts the evidence tends to establish.—Gardner v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 150 U. S. 349, 37 L. ed. 1107, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

¶ 299. Negligence and contributory negligence are questions for the jury except when the evidence is so clear that reasonable minds could not differ, in which case they are for the court.—Scharman v. Bay County Bridge Commission, 158 Mich. 77.

¶ 300. Whether ordinary care has been exercised in a given case is a question for the jury.—Fraam v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 556.

¶ 300a. Whether a defendant had notice prior to the time of the injury complained of is a question of fact for the jury, where the evidence is conflicting in an action for negligence.—Wendt v. Village of Richmond, 164 Mich. 173.

¶ 301. In a suit for personal injuries arising from the falling of materials from a building, although the facts concerning the conduct of defendant complained about are not in dispute, still if different minds may honestly draw different conclusions respecting them, the question whether there was negligence on the part of defendant is a question for the jury.—Brown v. Bryant, 166 Mich. 180.

¶ 302. Evidence of negligence on the part of a person renting a minor a boat whereby the minor is drowned is sufficient to constitute a question for the jury, where the person drowned is presumed to have been in the exercise of due care.—Lincoln v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 179 Mich. 189.

¶ 303. The question of whether the construction of a threshing machine the deck of which was supported only by four-penny nails, driven upward into a cleat, is such as to make the machine imminently dangerous to life and limb, is one of fact for the jury. —Pierce v. C. H. Bidwell Thresher Co., 153 Mich. 323.

¶ 304. The question of negligence is to be decided according to the facts in the particular case.—Dier v. Voorhees, 200 Mich. 510.

¶ 304a. Plaintiff's intestate, a conductor on a freight train, was riding on the footboard of the engine. Defendants, a telephone and a construction company, had piled poles along the railroad track. There was evidence by plaintiff that defendants had piled the poles in a careless manner and one of them had fallen across the track, striking plaintiff's intestate, causing him to fall before the engine, which ran over and killed him. Defendant introduced evidence to show that a piece of railroad iron was lying on the footboard, and that this iron projected out across the rail, struck, and threw the pole down. Held, under this conflicting evidence, the question of defendant's negligence was properly left to the jury.—Larson v. Home Tel. Co., 164 Mich. 295.

§ 52. ——As to cause of accident.

Proximate cause of accident in general, see ante § 13.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to cause of accident, see ante § 48.
Cause of death as jury question, see Death by Wrongful Act § 29.

¶ 305. Where the evidence leaves it very doubtful what caused the injury complained of, the case should be left to the jury.—Alexander v. City of Big Rapids, 70 Mich. 224.

¶ 305a. Plaintiff sued defendant village for injuries suffered from an illness, which she alleged was caused by the defendant's negligence in allowing sewage to collect in ditches and drains in front of plaintiff's house. The evidence was disputed whether the alleged cause was the real cause of her illness. Held, the question was for the jury. —Wendt v. Village of Richmond, 164 Mich. 173.

¶ 305b. It is a jury question what was the cause of death and whether a waiting passenger was contributively negligent, where the death occurred at night with no eyewitness, and where evidence was that her body was found beside the track when her train arrived and two other trains had passed meantime, one running backwards with lights on the advancing end that might have been mistaken in the darkness for switch lights, but both trains were operated with the customary lights and signals, the trainmen on neither noticed anything unusual or any indication of running over any person or thing, and the condition of the body and the surroundings showed no appearance of having been ground between the wheels and the track.—Richardson v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 176 Mich. 413.

§ 53. ——As to gross negligence and "last clear chance."

Gross negligence and last clear chance rule, see ante § 26.
Instructions on gross negligence of defendant, see post § 62.

¶ 306. In an action for personal injuries by a bicyclist against four owners of horses alleged to have been driving recklessly on a boulevard after dark conflicting testimony by the parties and several witnesses concerning the speed of the horses and the speed of the bicyclist justifies leaving the question of liability to the jury under an instruction requiring due care by the plaintiff, the evidence being held not to show gross negligence so as to render all of the defendants liable regardless of the plaintiff's conduct.—Mahnke v. Freer, 126 Mich. 572.

§ 54. ——As to contributory negligence.

See also ante ¶¶ 89, 273, 299.
Contributory negligence in general, see ante § 17.
Contributory negligence of children, see also ante § 20.
Instructions as to contributory negligence, see post §§ 60, 61.

¶ 307. Whether the conduct of a person amounts to contributory negligence is usually a question for the jury.—Paskvan v. Allouez Min. Co., 185 Mich. 329.

¶ 308. When the fact of contributory negligence depends on the credibility of witnesses or upon inferences in which intelligent persons may honestly differ, it is a question for the jury.—Swoboda v. Ward, 40 Mich. 420.

¶ 309. In an action for negligent injury, if the proofs are such that reasonable minds may differ as to the fact of contributory negligence, the case should go to the jury; its absence need not be conclusively shown. —Teipel v. Hilsendegen, 44 Mich. 461; Barker v. City of Kalamazoo, 146 Mich. 257.

¶ 310. In an action for injury the neglect of any precaution by plaintiff can only raise a question of contributory negligence for the jury.—Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 54 Mich. 55.

¶ 311. The fact of contributory negligence is for the jury to determine from all the circumstances, if the facts tending to establish it are disputed, and especially if it appears that the plaintiff had exercised care and would not have been likely to be hurt if defendant had done his duty.—Palmer v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 56 Mich. 1.

¶ 312. Contributory negligence depends on what the party is bound to expect, and the case should not be taken from the jury when to do so will prevent their giving to either party the benefit of any inference which might be drawn from a comparison of all the facts.—Staal v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 Mich. 239.

¶ 313. Where the whole of the testimony and all legitimate inferences therefrom show that injury arose from want of due care on the part of the injured person, the question of contributory negligence is one of law for the court.—Mynning v. Detroit, Lansing & N. R. Co., 67 Mich. 677.

¶ 314. Direct or conclusive evidence is not necessary to show reasonable care on plaintiff's part to avoid the injury for which he seeks to recover. If the circumstances out of which the injury arose tend to show such care, the question is for the jury, and it must be a very extraordinary case that will justify the court in taking it from them.—Carver v. Detroit & S. Plank-Road Co., 69 Mich. 616.

¶ 315. The question of plaintiff's contributory negligence should be submitted to the jury where the testimony is conflicting, where the case is not free from doubt upon the facts, or where candid and intelligent men might reach different conclusions upon the facts.—Luke v. Wheat Mining Co., 71 Mich. 364; Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499; Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co., 78 Mich. 271; Brezee v. Powers, 80 Mich. 172; Underhill v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 81 Mich. 43; Guia v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 81 Mich. 291; Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1; Glover v. Scotten, 82 Mich. 369; Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., 85 Mich. 519; Graves v. City of Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408.

¶ 316. Where the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence depends upon the finding of a certain fact for or against his contention, as to which the testimony is conflicting, it should be submitted to the jury.—Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co., 89 Mich. 387.

¶ 317. Where there was some evidence on that issue it is proper to go to the jury on the question of contributory negligence.—Ellis v. Hilton, 92 Mich. 439.

¶ 318. In an action for fatal injury the jury may properly consider how far the victim had knowledge of the danger and how far he relied on the action and the presumed knowledge of his superiors.—James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335.

¶ 319. In an action for personal injuries, where the testimony shows affirmatively that the party injured through the negligence of another was himself negligent, and such negligence contributed to bring about the result complained of, and the testimony is neither conflicting nor contradictory, it becomes a question of law for the court to decide whether there is any fact disclosed by the testimony to go to the jury upon the question of contributory negligence.—Apsey v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 83 Mich. 440.

¶ 320. Whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence is a question for the jury, where defendant testifies that plaintiff sat in range of a gun, and requested defendant to snap it off, both believing it to be unloaded, and where plaintiff, while admitting having suggested that defendant "try" the gun, further testifies that until defendant took it up to discharge it he was not in its range, and that after it was pointed at him he had no time to protest or get out of the way.—Babel v. Manning, 112 Mich. 24.

¶ 321. Where a father sues as administrator of a child killed at the age of four, by a street car, to recover under the Death Act (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10427, 10428), the fact that the child was alone on the street when killed is prima facie proof of the father's negligence, requiring the court to submit the question of such contributory negligence to the jury.—Feldman v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 486.

¶ 321a. Plaintiff sued defendant village for negligently maintaining an insanitary ditch or drain in front of her house, because of which she contracted an illness and suffered injury. Defendant requested the court to charge that plaintiff could not recover if by reasonable care she could have protected herself and avoided evil results from the alleged nuisance. The court did instruct that plaintiff could not recover if the insanitary condition of her own premises materially contributed to the creation of the alleged nuisance. Held, the instruction sufficiently protected defendant's rights.—Wendt v. Village of Richmond, 164 Mich. 173.

¶ 322. Where the public had established a pathway along a railway track and a person using such pathway was injured by falling into an unguarded trench made by sewer contractors, held, in an action against the contractor, that the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury.—Morrison v. Carpenter, 179 Mich. 207.

¶ 323. Whether it was contributory negligence for the plaintiff to actively participate in overloading an automobile and riding therein, held properly submitted to the jury.—Webber v. Billings, 184 Mich. 119.

¶ 324. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the owner of an automobile in putting out a fire in the automobile against a garage proprietor whose employee had repaired the car and had left waste on the exhaust pipe near the gasoline tank so that the operation of the car at low speed heated the exhaust pipe to the point of setting the waste on fire, held that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in grabbing the floor boards to remove them upon discovering fire and smoke coming up through the lever holes near the gasoline tank, instead of adopting some other means to put out the fire, especially where it appeared that his own family and a neighbor's family were in the car, and he thought the fire came from the gasoline tank and acted quickly so as to prevent injury to them.—Leary v. Becker, 190 Mich. 697. (Brooke, Ostrander, and Steere, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 325. It is reversible error to submit to the jury the question of contributory negligence in an action by an employee, when not raised by the defendant, but by his concessions expressly eliminated from the case.—Kochin v. Superior Copper Co., 181 Mich. 543.

Attempt to pass over protected crossing, in reliance upon fact that gates are up, as contributory negligence as a matter of law, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 110-140.

§ 55. ——Negligence or contributory negligence of children.

Instructions on contributory negligence of children, see post § 61.

¶ 326. A boy less than ten years old is not required to exercise the degree of care and maturity of judgment required of a person of mature age; but the question of such a boy's negligence, in firing an air-gun whereby plaintiff's eye was destroyed, was for the jury, on evidence that upon firing the shot and seeing plaintiff in the street, the boy stepped from behind some vines 60 feet away and denied firing at plaintiff, and asked forgiveness, that he looked before he fired and saw no one, but saw plaintiff right in front of the gun immediately afterward.—Chaddock v. Tabor, 115 Mich. 27.

¶ 327. Where a fourteen-year-old boy was injured by an engine suddenly backing up while he was on the track in a public street, it was for the jury to determine his capacity for understanding the danger, and whether he used such capacity prudently for one of his years and under all the circumstances of the case.—Fehnrich v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 87 Mich. 606.

¶ 328. Where, in a case of an eight-year-old boy's being run down on a car track, the boy's father testified that the boy was perfectly competent to take care of himself upon the street, and where the boy's testimony showed he possessed sufficient intelligence to appreciate the danger in crossing the tracks, it was error to submit to the jury the question of his capacity in this respect.—Henderson v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 368.

¶ 329. It is, as a matter of law, contributory negligence in a thirteen-year-old boy to become so engrossed in play as to run across a city street and immediately in front of an approaching automobile without thou to look to see whether such a machine any other vehicle is approaching.—Zolto v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620.

¶ 330. What constitutes the exercise due care by a boy of twelve years who struck and injured by a negligently o ated automobile, is a question for the j to determine in light of his age and exp ence.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich.

¶ 331. Whether requisite care was e cised by a child of twelve years in cros a street, and by the driver of a negligen operated automobile, is a question for jury.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich.

¶ 332. The question of contributory ligence of a child seven years of age wh injured as the result of the negligence of automobile driver is usually one of fact the jury.—Barger v. Bissell, 188 Mich. 36

¶ 333. In an action against the owner gas reducing plant for the death of a seven years old by drowning caused by ing through soft ice near an opening in ice caused by warm water from defenda plant, where it appeared that there were eyewitnesses to the accident and the s that gathered on the opening had the app ance of dark ice, held that it was a quest for the jury whether decedent was gu of contributory negligence.—Parsons v. E Du Pont De Nemours Powder Co., 198 M 409.

§ 56. ——Directing verdict.

See also ante ¶ 290.

General law as to directing verdict, see recting Verdict.

Direction of verdict on plaintiff's own because contributory negligence appe see also Directing Verdict ¶ 35.

¶ 334. It is error to direct a verdict defendant on the ground of plaintiff's tributory negligence, when, in order to vict plaintiff of such negligence, it is ne sary to assume that he must, contrary to positive testimony, have heard a bell or sound of the car, which other unimpeac witnesses did not hear, or that he must h seen what they did not see.—Little v. Gr Rapids Street R. Co., 78 Mich. 205.

¶ 335. In an action for wrongful de of an eleven-year-old boy, who was driv a wagon, caused by a defective culvert, fact that the father, who was riding in other wagon ahead, knew of the defect had forgotten it, does not necessitate a rected verdict on the ground of contribut negligence, where it is not clear that boy did not know of the defect and using due care and that the father's for fulness contributed to the injury.—Mille Township of Meade, 128 Mich. 98.

¶ 336. Verdict in a negligence case should be directed for defendant, where under the evidence there may have been any of two or more causes which produced the injury and not all of them imputable to defendant and nothing but a guess which was the cause. —Fuller v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 141 Mich. 66.

¶ 337. Where it clearly appears from undisputed facts that one has not exercised such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure or danger, or when the evidence is of such conclusive character that the court would be compelled to set aside a verdict in opposition to it, the case may properly be withdrawn from the jury and a verdict directed by the court.—Hodge v. City of St. Louis, 146 Mich. 173.

¶ 338. The University of Michigan Athletic Association, a voluntary organization of students and alumni, erected a bleacher, which fell during the course of a game, and plaintiff was injured. In a suit against the association and against one Baird, its director, and one Pipp, the builder of the bleacher, as defendants, it appeared that the University simply consented to the erection of the stand, whereas the association directed the work and supplied the funds. Held, it was error to direct a verdict for the defendants on the ground that the University, and not they, were the parties liable.—Scott v. University of Michigan Athletic Ass'n, 152 Mich. 684.

¶ 339. Plaintiff, a miner, went on Saturday to the pit-boss of defendant, and asked for work. He was told to return Monday, when the pit-boss said he could tell more about the probability of an opening. Plaintiff returned Monday and saw the superintendent who told him the pit-boss was the one to know if there was a vacancy. Plaintiff sat down in the tipple to wait to see the pit-boss and was injured by the explosion of a compressed air tank. Held, the court erred in directing a verdict for defendant on the ground that plaintiff was a mere licensee, as there was evidence to go to the jury that he was impliedly invited on the premises.—Schmidt v. Michigan Coal & Mining Co., 159 Mich. 308.

¶ 340. Where the only evidence as to the manner in which an accident occurred was given by plaintiff, and in his testimony he gave two inconsistent and contradictory versions, the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict for defendant was held erroneous as the verdict for plaintiff would necessarily be based purely on speculation.—Mero v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 180 Mich. 1.

Positive instructions as to negligence, see also ante § 51.

¶ 341. In an action for injuries caused by defendant's engine colliding with plaintiff's wagon it was not error to refuse to charge that the doctrine of comparative negligence in actions of this kind as recognized by the courts of some other states is not recognized in this state, such being immaterial to the issue and there being no necessity therefor. —Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 86 Mich. 496.

¶ 342. A request giving a general definition of negligence was properly refused where the court drew the jury's attention to the issues to be determined and stated what facts, if found, would constitute negligence on defendant's part.—St. Clair Mineral Springs Co. v. City of St. Clair, 96 Mich. 463.

¶ 343. Where several grounds of negligence are alleged in the declaration, and there can be no recovery upon some of them, the court, in instructing the jury, should eliminate such from their consideration.— Heller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 109 Mich. 53.

¶ 344. An instruction to the jury in an action for negligent injury that "if you believe the plaintiff's side of the case and the plaintiff's witnesses, taking them in sides now, then the plaintiff has made out a case," is always a dangerous method of submitting a case, but is necessarily damaging to defendant where the facts testified to by plaintiff's witnesses might be true and yet no liability exist.—Henderson v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 368.

¶ 345. Plaintiff sued defendant thresher company for personal injuries due to his breaking through the deck of a threshing machine manufactured by the defendant. The court charged the jury that to recover, the plaintiff must prove that the construction of the deck was "imminently dangerous," and defined "imminent danger" as such danger as must be instantly met and cannot be guarded against by calling on others for assistance. Held, that this charge, taken with other language indicating that the danger must be impending, was not erroneous.— Pierce v. C. H. Bidwell Thresher Co., 158 Mich. 356.

¶ 345a. Where a defendant village in a suit for injury to health makes no request for a specific instruction that the village, to be liable, must have had notice of the defective drainage causing the injury, no error can be predicated on the court's omission so to instruct.—Wendt v. Village of Richmond, 164 Mich. 173.

¶ 346. For the court to confuse the duty of inspection to ascertain whether repairs might be needed with the duty of inspection and repair after defects had become notorious, and for it to charge on the duty of inspection, is not reversible error, though improper, where the negligence charged in a declaration is that defendant permitted the premises to get out of repair, and with knowledge of their condition permitted them to remain out of repair, where it also fully and properly charges on the theory of negligence alleged in the declaration.—Bannigan v. Woodbury, 166 Mich. 491.

¶ 347. Plaintiff hired a taxicab and told the driver to go to a certain point, and thereafter gave him no further directions. He was injured by a collision between said taxicab and defendant street-car. The trial court instructed that plaintiff could not recover unless he showed that the driver of the taxicab acted without negligence. Held, such an instruction was reversible error.—Galloway v. Detroit United Ry., 168 Mich. 343.

§ 58. ——On burden of proof.

Burden of proof in general, see ante § 42.

¶ 348. An instruction that the burden is on the plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries to show freedom from contributory negligence, is erroneous where such a defense was not made by the defendant.—Kochin v. Superior Copper Co., 181 Mich. 543.

¶ 349. The trial court in his charge perhaps intended to say that the duty of going forward is upon defendant where plaintiff has made out a prima facie case of negligence. He in fact used language seeming to indicate that the burden of proof shifted to defendant. Held, the charge was error.—Sewell v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 407.

¶ 350. In a suit for personal injury the court instructed: "You are the best twelve men to determine this accident, because of this negligence, as the case may be, of any twelve men." In other places the court instructed that the burden of proving negligence was on the plaintiff. Held, that, in view of the latter instruction, the former one could not be considered as an instruction by the court that the defendant's negligence was established.—Malinowski v. Detroit United Ry., 154 Mich. 104.

¶ 351. Plaintiff's intestate was killed by grasping a hanging wire used to raise and lower an electric street light. Plaintiff requested the court to instruct that the jury should not find plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence unless they found from all the circumstances that the intestate did something which an ordinarily prudent and careful person would not have done under the circumstances. Held, this instruction was properly refused, as casting on the defendant the burden of proving the intestate's contributory negligence, and as implying, a matter of law, that the grasping of the w was not of itself contributory negligenc Charette v. Village of L'Anse, 154 Mich.

§ 59. ——On proximate cause.

Proximate cause in general, see ante § 1
Jury questions as to cause of accident, ante § 52.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence as proximate cause, see ante § 48.

¶ 352. An instruction to a jury in an tion for negligence that, if the plaintiff guilty of that negligence without which accident would not have occurred, she can recover, but if the defendant's servant al was negligent, and his negligence occasio the injury, she could recover, is equival to an instruction that the plaintiff must sh that the sole proximate cause of the accid was the negligence of such servant, and correct.—Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich.

¶ 353. In charging a jury in an action negligence the court should distinguish tween the negligence which caused the inj and that which contributed to it.—McKe v. Township of Monitor, 78 Mich. 485.

¶ 354. In an action for negligence a quest that leaves out of consideration proximate cause of the accident and pla tiff's contributory negligence is prope refused.—St. Clair Mineral Springs Co. City of St. Clair, 96 Mich. 463.

¶ 355. In an action against the letter hire of a rowboat to recover for the de of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to be due the sinking of the boat because of its fective condition while plaintiff's intest and three other persons, who were drowned, were in it, held that the co should have instructed the jury that n ligence of defendant was not made out, that, if negligent, it was purely conjectu whether the loss of the boat and of li was the result of its negligence.—Clark Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 197 Mich. 489, 15 C. C. A. 1033. (Kuhn, C. J., Moore Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 356. In an action by a foreman charge of a gin pole and engaged in erect the iron and steel work of a building damages for personal injuries sustained a result of the falling of the pole because the insufficiency of the platform on wh it rested, an instruction on proximate ca held not erroneous.—Barkow v. Dono Wire & Iron Co., 190 Mich. 563.

Instruction as to contributory negligence erroneous as not supported by evidence, see also Instructions ¶ 322.
Instructions upon contributory negligence improper where argumentative, see also Instructions ¶ 34.
Modification of requested instruction as to negligence and contributory negligence, see also Instructions § 28.

¶ 357. In an action for personal injury resulting in the death of a boy under fifteen years of age, it was held error for the court to omit to instruct the jury, though there was no request on the point, that in determining the question of contributory negligence the same degree of caution is not required of such an infant as is required in the case of an adult.—Wright v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 77 Mich. 123.

¶ 358. A plain and unambiguous charge as to contributory negligence need not be repeated when stating the elements which plaintiff must prove to make out a case.—Knowles v. Mulder, 74 Mich. 202.

¶ 359. In an action for injuries a request for an instruction that, if defendant, a customer, then using the saw, knew plaintiff was about to oil a saw and assented to it, and while plaintiff was oiling it negligently pushed plaintiff upon the saw, he may recover damages for injuries thereby occasioned, is properly refused, as plaintiff could not recover unless free from contributory negligence.—Ribble v. Starrat, 83 Mich. 140.

¶ 360. An instruction on the question of contributory negligence cannot be regarded as holding that plaintiff was not guilty thereof where it gave the jury to understand that, since men of equal candor might differ as to whether plaintiff exercised due care, two different views might reasonably be taken, so that it was a question for the jury to decide.—Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., 94 Mich. 607.

¶ 361. Where the charge elsewhere instructs the jury on the law applicable to contributory negligence, an instruction that the jury may find for plaintiff if the defect continued so long prior to the accident that the want of knowledge implied want of due care on defendant's part, is not objectionable because it does not repeat the charge on contributory negligence.—Alberts v. Village of Vernon, 96 Mich. 549.

¶ 362. It is not error for the court, in the absence of a request therefor, to fail to give the jury a definition of the term "contributory negligence," as used in the charge.—Germaine v. City of Muskegon, 105 Mich. 213.

¶ 363. An instruction that plaintiff's failure to attempt to avert the injury complained of does not render him guilty of contributory negligence, if his efforts in that direction would have necessarily been unavailing, is not open to objection.—Darling v. Thompson, 108 Mich. 215.

¶ 364. In an action against a city for the death of a bicyclist by riding through an open drawbridge at night and drowning, where the deceased knew that he was approaching a place of danger, it is not error to refuse an instruction that if he momentarily forgot the condition, it would excuse his failure to act upon his knowledge.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 365. In an action against a city for death caused by plaintiff's intestate riding his bicycle at night into an open drawbridge and drowning, an instruction that the love of life is instinctive and that men do not usually expose themselves to great discomfort and great danger without some strong motive, and that his estate is entitled to any presumption that may arise from this instinct of self-preservation and that the jury should not find the decedent guilty of negligence without "satisfactory proof or strong inference" that he was so, is properly refused as argumentative and also because the inference which a jury may draw in case of death may be overcome by any proof which in the opinion of the jury reasonably tends to show want of care.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 366. In an action for personal injuries sustained through a defective sidewalk an instruction to the jury that in case the plaintiff "was intoxicated she cannot recover unless she was exercising greater care than would be required on her part if she were not intoxicated" is properly refused, because no higher degree of care is required of an intoxicated person than one in his sober senses.—Epelett v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 144 Mich. 392.

¶ 366a. Defendant city used one of the cross-arms of a telephone company's line of poles for stretching its electric wires used in supplying light. Plaintiff's deceased, a lineman in the employ of the telephone company, was killed by one of the city's defectively insulated wires. The court in instructing the jury on the due care required by the plaintiff's deceased, stated that he had a right to assume that the city had properly inspected the wire and was liable to use only the reasonable care of a prudent lineman in looking out for obvious defects. Held, the instruction sufficiently protected defendant.—Hodgins v. Bay City, 156 Mich. 687.

¶ 367. A charge to the effect that if plaintiff was intoxicated and this condition contributed to his injury, no recovery could be had, approved.—Peters v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 178 Mich. 481.

¶ 368. A refusal to charge that plaintiff is not to be barred from recovering unless his negligence contributed to the injury, is not ground for reversal where, from the facts of the case, any negligence on his part must have contributed to the injury.—Charette v. Village of L'Anse, 154 Mich. 304.

§ 61. ——On contributory negligence of children.

Care required of children, see ante § 20.
Jury questions as to contributory negligence of children, see ante § 55.

¶ 369. An instruction in an action for injuries to a boy, stating that it was for the jury to determine whether the boy used such care as boys of his age and discretion usually exercise on like occasions, and such as they thought the boy ought to have used, was not open to the objection that it excluded the question that the boy was one of unusual intelligence.—Beaudin v. Bay City, 136 Mich. 333.

¶ 370. In a suit for personal injuries, the charge of the court is not open to the objection of laying down a rule that plaintiff, thirteen years of age, was required to exercise the same degree of care and prudence as an adult person, where it in three or more instances calls the attention of the jury to the rule that they must consider the age, intelligence and experience of the plaintiff, and where taken as a whole it states the rule of law correctly.—Harris v. Crawley, 170 Mich. 381.

¶ 371. Where the declaration and proofs in a personal injury case set forth the plaintiff's age as 13, and that he was in the exercise of due care and caution, and the proof as to age, experience and manner of driving and conduct were all before the jury, the declaration and proofs were sufficient to justify the court in instructing the jury that the degree of care and caution the boy was required to observe was such as an ordinary boy of similar age would exercise under the same circumstances, and to refuse to instruct that the plaintiff was on his own showing to be charged with the same rule of contributory negligence as an adult would be.—Grenell v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 124 Mich. 141.

¶ 372. Plaintiff's intestate, a boy of fourteen, was killed by an electric shock while taking hold of a "hanger" wire used to raise and lower the electric street light. On the question of contributory negligence, the court instructed that the jury should consider whether, from the boy's age, knowledge, and experience, and taking into account the position of the wire, the fact of warning, and the other circumstances, the boy had acted with reasonable care for his safety. Held, this instruction sufficiently covered the question of contributory negligence.—Charette v. Village of L'Anse, Mich. 304.

laration contained no count charging fendant with wilful, wanton, or reck

tirely the issues made by the pleading
Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387.

¶ 374. In an action for personal in caused by a collision of vehicles on a h way, an instruction that even though plaintiff was negligent if the defenda conduct was wanton and wilful or reck the plaintiff may recover, is sufficiently ported by testimony that the defendant proached at a rapid gait without looking others.—Buxton v. Ainsworth, 138 Mich.

¶ 375. In an action against a city for sonal injuries sustained in falling into an cavation, an instruction that the plai might recover notwithstanding contribut negligence if the defendant was grossly ligent is properly refused where there is evidence of gross negligence.—Sterling

Provisions as to form of negotiable instruments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6042 et seq.

¶ 1. No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a bill of exchange.—Hasey v. White Pigeon Beet Sugar Co., 1 D. 193.

¶ 2. The term "negotiable," as commonly applied to paper, is a term of classification, and does not necessarily imply anything more than that the paper has the negotiable quality; it includes notes drawn to order and not indorsed.—Robinson v. Wilkinson, 38 Mich. 299.

¶ 3. The omission of a date does not invalidate a check.—Gordon v. Lansing State Sav. Bank, 133 Mich. 143, per Carpenter and Grant, JJ.

¶ 3a. The entire negotiable instrument act should be construed together and its provisions harmonized if possible.—Ensign v. Fogg, 177 Mich. 317.

§ 2. Seal as affecting negotiability.

¶ 4. The addition of a seal to the signature of the maker of a promissory note destroys the note's negotiability.—Rawson v. Davidson, 49 Mich. 607.

§ 3. Certainty and absoluteness.

Place of payment of instrument, see post § 14.

¶ 5. The certainty requisite to negotiability must continue until the obligation is discharged, and any provision which before that time removes such certainty prevents the instrument's being negotiable at all.—Altman v. Rittershofer, 68 Mich. 287.

¶ 6. A proviso in a promissory note is not void unless it is illegal or nugatory; and if innocent it does not make the note illegal, though it may destroy its negotiability.—Smith v. Van Blarcom, 45 Mich. 371.

¶ 7. A note payable to order and without contingency on a day certain is not the less negotiable because purporting to be according to the condition of a mortgage, when the terms of the mortgage correspond with those expressed in the note.—Littlefield v. Hodge, 6 Mich. 326.

¶ 8. The indorsement on the back of a promissory note of a statement by the maker as to his financial responsibility does not destroy the negotiability of the note.—Hudson v. Emmons, 107 Mich. 549.

¶ 9. A note containing the following condition: "This note is given subject to the approval of Fred Soules * * * for a stock of groceries * * *, the title to the said stock of groceries to remain in said Soules until this note is fully paid." Held, the note was not a negotiable instrument.—Worden Grocer Co. v. Blanding, 161 Mich. 254.

¶ 10. An instrument otherwise in the form of a promissory note, which provides that "the conditions of this note are, if not paid when due, the property for which it is given shall be the property of" the payee, such property being named in the instrument, is not a negotiable promissory note.—Wright v. Traver, 73 Mich. 493.

§ 4. ——As to amount payable.

¶ 11. An instrument by which the maker promises to pay to the payee or bearer a certain sum by a time named, but which recites that the payee agrees to receive a certain less sum in satisfaction if paid on an earlier day named, is not a promissory note.—Fralick v. Norton, 2 Mich. 130.

¶ 12. An instrument promising to pay M. K. "or heirs the sum making $450, January 1, 1868," is a promissory note.—Knight v. Jones, 21 Mich. 161.

§ 5. ——Provision as to interest, exchange, attorneys' fees, costs or taxes.

Provision for attorney's fee as affecting surety's liability, see post § 27.

Validity of promissory note drawing no interest if paid at maturity and ten per cent interest if not so paid, see Interest ¶ 52.

¶ 13. The negotiability of a promissory note, made payable "on or before two years from date," is destroyed by a memorandum attached thereto providing that if paid within one year there shall be no interest.—Lamb v. Story, 45 Mich. 488.

¶ 14. An instrument promising to pay a stated sum, with interest, "on or before two years after date," but providing that if it be paid within one year no interest shall be paid, is not a promissory note, as it lacks certainty in time and amount.—Story v. Lamb, 52 Mich. 525.

¶ 15. An instrument promising to pay a certain sum to order, with interest at seven per cent if paid when due, and, if not, at ten per cent from date, and agreeing to pay exchange and all expenses of collection, including attorney's fee, is not a negotiable promissory note.—Cayuga County Nat. Bank v. Purdy, 56 Mich. 6.

¶ 16. A note promising to pay a certain sum with interest at seven per cent and agreeing to pay ten per cent interest from date until paid if not paid when due, is a negotiable promissory note.—Crump v. Berdan, 97 Mich. 293.

¶ 17. A note containing a promise to pay a specified amount on a given date, with interest, and "all taxes assessed against" the land described in a mortgage given to secure such note, or against the mortgagee's interest therein, until the note is paid, is not negotiable.—Walker v. Thompson, 108 Mich. 686.

¶ 18. A note made payable "with current exchange" is a negotiable promissory note.—Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 241; Johnson v. Frisbie, 15 Mich. 286.

¶ 19. A provision in a promissory note for the payment of current exchange or express charges is nugatory, and does not add to vary a surety's liability, since the promi must be liable for the expense of transm ting the money to the place where the n is payable.—Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 1

¶ 20. An instrument that includes a st ulation to pay "attorney's fees," uncert as to the amount to be paid, is not a ne tiable promissory note.—Altman v. Ritte hofer, 68 Mich. 287; Altman v. Fowler, Mich. 57; Wright v. Traver, 73 Mich. 493

¶ 21. An instrument which, in addition the usual form of a promissory note, thorizes a confession of judgment for amount due thereon with costs, and the us attorney's fees, is not a promissory note Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. McKittrick, Mich. 191.

¶ 22. A note payable in Michigan is n dered non-negotiable by a provision ther for the payment of an attorney fee.—Stra berry Point Bank v. Lee, 117 Mich. 122.

¶ 23. A stipulation in a promissory n that the maker shall pay taxes destroys gotiability, even though at the time the n is executed no statute authorizes a mo gagee's interest to be assessed for taxes Carmody v. Crane, 110 Mich. 508.

¶ 24. A provision in the mortgage requ ing the mortgagor to pay all taxes that m be levied upon the lands "or upon this mo gage" destroys negotiability, where the terest of a mortgagee in lands was taxa as such under the law in force at the ti of the execution of the mortgage, since amount payable to or on behalf of the mo gagee is thereby rendered uncertain.—Broc v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562.

¶ 25. Legislation subsequently passed, posing upon the mortgagee the duty of p ing a portion of the taxes will not ren a mortgage note non-negotiable which v negotiable when made, though the mortg had a covenant to pay taxes on the premi —Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580.

¶ 26. A promissory note secured by mo gage is not rendered non-negotiable by provision in the latter requiring the mo gagor to pay all taxes and assessments up the mortgaged premises, where the sa obligation rested upon him by law at time the instruments were executed, in pendent of any such stipulation.—Wilson Campbell, 110 Mich. 580; Cox v. Cayan, Mich. 599.

§ 6. ——As to time of payment.

Promise to pay in instalments, see p ¶ 41.

Time when instrument matures and is p able, see post § 11.

Note payable on death of party, see p ¶ 63.

¶ 27. An obligation payable in money, the time of which cannot be made certain by any attainable means, is not a promissory note. It is essential to a promissory note that it be payable at a time which must certainly arrive in the future, upon the happening of some event, or the completion of some period, not depending upon the future volition of any one.—Brooks v. Hargreaves, 21 Mich. 254.

¶ 28. A promise to pay "on or before" a day named states the time for payment with sufficient certainty for the purposes of a promissory note. A note so drawn is due on the day named, and not before; the maker may pay it sooner if he chooses, but this would only be a payment in advance of his legal liability.—Mattison v. Marks, 31 Mich. 421.

¶ 29. A clause attached to a promissory note, and providing that the payee or his assigns may indefinitely extend the time of payment, destroys its negotiability and makes it a simple contract.—Smith v. Van Blarcom, 45 Mich. 371.

¶ 30. An agreement for the payment of a sum certain at a specified date, coupled with a condition that the sale or removal of the property for a part of the purchase price of which it was given shall cause the debt to mature at once, is not a negotiable promissory note.—First Nat. Bank v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432.

¶ 31. An instrument promising to pay a certain sum of money when certain work is performed by the payee is not a promissory note, and, without evidence that he has done the work, no liability is shown on the part of the makers.—Chandler v. Carey, 64 Mich. 237.

¶ 32. The negotiability of a promissory note is not destroyed by a provision therein giving the holder an option to declare the whole amount due upon default in payment of an instalment of interest, or by a provision in an accompanying mortgage giving a like option in case of non-payment of taxes by the mortgagor.—Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580; Cox v. Cayan, 117 Mich. 599.

¶ 33. A provision in a mortgage securing a promissory note, and referred to therein, that the mortgagor's failure to pay any tax or assessment upon the mortgaged premises for 30 days after it is payable shall render the whole debt, principal and interest, immediately due at the option of the mortgagee, does not destroy the negotiability of the note.—Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562.

¶ 7. Medium of payment; provisions for payment in currency or goods.

¶ 34. A draft payable in "current funds," in the absence of all evidence showing that anything else is current at the place of payment, must be regarded as payable only in such funds as are current by law; it is therefore negotiable.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 11 Mich. 501.

¶ 35. A certificate of deposit payable in "currency" means, prima facie, money current by law, or paper equivalent in value circulating in the business community at par.—Phelps v. Town, 14 Mich. 374.

¶ 36. A note made and indorsed in Michigan and payable in Canada "in Canada currency" is payable in money, and is therefore negotiable; such a phrase in a note made in Michigan means no more than that the note is payable in Canada money at the Canadian standard, as it would have been without such a phrase if made and payable in Canada.—Black v. Ward, 27 Mich. 191.

Provisions as to consideration, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6065 et seq.

¶ 37. An instrument unconditionally promising to pay a specified sum at a certain time to the payee or bearer is a promissory note notwithstanding the consideration upon which it was given is stated in the instrument.—Beardslee v. Horton, 3 Mich. 560.

¶ 38. The naming of the property for which a note is given does not impair the instrument's character as a promissory note.—Wright v. Traver, 73 Mich. 493.

¶ 39. The negotiability of a promissory note is not destroyed because of a writing on its face that it is given in accordance with a certain contract, although the note is one of a series which, by the terms of such contract, were to become payable, at the option of the payee, on failure to pay any of them.—Markey v. Corey, 108 Mich. 184.

¶ 40. The negotiability of an instrument in the form of a promissory note is not impaired by a recital that the consideration for it and for certain other notes is a soda fountain, described in a contract of sale of even date, that the maker, to whom the apparatus has been delivered, is to acquire no title thereto until all the notes are paid, and that the payee is to have the right, in case of nonpayment at maturity of either of the notes, to "enter and retain immediate possession of the property, * * * and remove the same."—Choate v. Stevens, 116 Mich. 28.

¶ 41. A promise, duly dated and signed, for value received, to pay to a designated railroad corporation, or bearer, a certain sum of money, "to be paid twenty per cent a month," from a date named, "towards the right of way and grading said railroad," between certain points named, is a promissory note.—Wright v. Irwin, 33 Mich. 32.

¶ 42. A memorandum attached to a promissory note and running as follows, viz.: "This note is to be valid as part pay for a piano-forte of me at retail price," leaves it at the payee's option to apply it in part payment, and contains nothing repugnant to the promise to pay in money.—Preston v. Whitney, 23 Mich. 260.

Validity of paper made or transferred Sunday, see Sunday.

¶ 43. A note given in payment of a liq tax, which must be paid in money, is c trary to public policy.—Doran v. Philli 47 Mich. 228.

¶ 44. A county treasurer may lawfu advance from his own money a liquor de er's tax, taking the dealer's note for amount lent, though the tax could not paid by a note.—Hatch v. Reid, 112 Mi 430.

¶ 45. Notes given by a bankrupt to creditor for the balance of his claim o the sum at which it would be dischar by composition proceedings, which proce ings were assented to by the creditor u the agreement that such notes should given, are void as contrary to public poli —Tinker v. Hurst, 70 Mich. 159.

¶ 46. A promissory note given with consideration, and upon the payee's thr to prevent the allowance by the city cou of the maker's claim for paving a street, absolutely void in the hands of the origi payee.—French v. Talbot Paving Co., Mich. 443.

¶ 47. Where a broker received a check falsely representing that stock ordered the drawer had been purchased for him transferred on the books of a corporati and it would be delivered in a day or so, payee's title to the check was defect within the meaning of § 54 of the Negotia Instruments Act. (Act 265, Pub. Acts 1905, § 2725, How. St., 2nd Ed.)—Peopl State Bank v. Miller, 185 Mich. 565.

II. INTERPRETATION AND EFFECT TERMS; CHARACTER OF INSTRUMENTS.

§ 10. In general.

Provisions as to bills in a set, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6219 et seq.
Provisions as to interpretation of negotiable instruments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6058 et seq.

¶ 48. The rules of the law merchant are inflexible and arbitrary, strictness being necessary.—First National Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 49. The law of negotiable paper cannot be changed by local custom, unless, possibly, when the paper itself is purely local.—Stringfield v. Vivian, 63 Mich. 681.

¶ 50. A note made payable to the "order of J. V. Mehling estate" was held valid, and payable to the proper representative of the estate.—Peltier v. Babillion, 45 Mich. 384.

§ 11. Maturity of instrument and time of payment.

Necessity that instrument be certain as to time of payment, see ante § 6.
Medium of payment, see ante § 7.
Payment or discharge as defense, see post §§ 24, 89.
Time to make presentment or demand, see post § 51.
Time in which to make acceptance of negotiable paper, see post § 36.
Time in which to pay accepted draft, see also post ¶ 166.
Bona fide purchasers as those taking before maturity, see post § 77.
Time to sue on instrument, see post § 91.
Agreement for extension, see also Contracts ¶ 991.
Interpretation as to time for payment of interest where promissory note stipulates interest computed on annual rate, see Interest ¶ 60.
Provisions as to maturity of instrument and time of payment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6126 et seq.

¶ 51. A promissory note, dated July 20, was by its terms payable "One year, August 15th, after date." Held, that it was payable one year from the 15th day of August after its date.—Washington County Bank v. Jerome, 8 Mich. 490.

¶ 52. Where a note is made payable several years after date, "with annual interest," the interest falls due every year during the period for which the note is to run.—Cook v. Wiles, 42 Mich. 439.

¶ 53. A note given for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad between two designated cities, via an intermediate city, and payable upon the first arrival of a regular passenger train at such city from another intermediate city, is payable when that condition is performed, although nothing has been done towards the construction of the remainder of the road, except to make a survey of the line.—Gardner v. Burch, 101 Mich. 261.

¶ 54. Where a check was drawn on a bank and payable 90 days after date, it matures at the end of 90 days under Comp. L. 1897, § 4877, "an act relating to commercial paper" and applying to checks, and there is no grace allowable, Comp. L. 1897, § 4871, providing for grace on bills of exchange, being inapplicable.—Jocque v. McRae, 142 Mich. 370.

¶ 55. Paper which is payable "on or before" a certain time is not due until that time; and if a purchaser is shown to have been holder of the securities for value before the expiration of the time, he is entitled to the same protection as if the note were made payable at that time.—Helmer v. Krolick, 36 Mich. 371.

§ 12. ——Demand or sight paper.

Certificates of deposit, see post § 16.
Time to make presentment or demand of demand or sight paper, see post § 52.

¶ 56. A note payable on demand is payable at once, and without demand. So a note payable thirty days after demand is payable after thirty days.—Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487.

¶ 57. A promissory note payable on demand, unless indorsed in a reasonable time, is considered overdue and dishonored. What is such reasonable time is to be determined by the court on the facts in each particular case.—Carll v. Brown, 2 Mich. 401.

¶ 58. A negotiable demand note, bearing date May 25th, was sued by the bearer on the 19th of June following. Held, that the note could not be considered overdue—no prior demand being shown—before it came to the hands of the bearer.—Carll v. Brown, 2 Mich. 401.

¶ 59. As a demand note given to a bank by a depositor is due at once, it may, without actual demand, be treated as a matured debt for the purpose of set-off in proceedings between the bank and the depositor.—Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Vaughan, 115 Mich. 156.

¶ 60. A note payable on demand is a demand note and is considered due from the time it is given, notwithstanding a provision that the payee may sell certain stock deposited as collateral security on the maturity of the note.—Brinen v. Muskegon Sav. Bank, 174 Mich. 414.

¶ 61. A post-dated draft purporting to be payable at sight is, for all legal purposes of presentment, demand, protest and payment, a draft payable at a certain time after date.—New York Iron Mine v. Citizens' Bank, 44 Mich. 344.

¶ 62. An undated promissory note requiring the maker to pay a certain sum of money "one year after January 1, 1898, after date, with interest from date thereof," which note was executed on the date mentioned, reference being made to the fact that the note was not dated, the parties believing that the date mentioned was the date of the note, will be held to draw interest from October 16, 1896, where such note passes into the hands of a bona fide purchaser, the latter date having been inserted after execution and before the note was obtained by the bona fide holder, as it was the duty of the maker to see that the date line was so filled in that an unsuspecting bona fide purchaser would not be deceived when the note was presented to him for negotiation.—First State Sav. Bank of Breckenridge v. Webster, 121 Mich. 149.

§ 13. ——Paper payable on death of person.

¶ 63. In suit by the heirs of the payee against the maker upon this instrument: "Feb. 18, 1873. For money received I promise to pay A. $435 out of my estate if she should outlive me, but if not, to her heirs as she shall direct, without use," held, that in no event was it payable except after the maker's death and from his estate.—Kelsey v. Chamberlain, 47 Mich. 241.

§ 14. Place of payment.

Place of presentment and demand, see post § 53.

¶ 64. The presumption that a note which specifies no place of payment is to be paid at the residence of the person liable upon it is one that applies to indorsers.—McIntyre v. Michigan State Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 188.

¶ 65. A note dated and signed in Michigan, and made by residents of Michigan, was presumptively delivered in Michigan, and is payable there, even though it states that the payee's residence is in another state.—Strawberry Point Bank v. Lee, 117 Mich. 122.

¶ 66. A note dated at a certain city and made payable at "The First National Bank," without designating the location thereof, is payable at the bank of that name at the city where the instrument is dated, notwithstanding the fact that the makers live elsewhere.—Finch v. Calkins, 183 Mich. 298.

§ 15. Joint or several instruments.

Liability on joint instruments, see post § 23.
Payment and discharge of joint paper, see post § 25.
Guarantor as joint maker, see post ¶¶ 138, 139.
Anomalous signers as joint makers, see post §§ 28, 29.
Subsequent indorsement as making indorser jointly liable with his principals, see post § 46.
Right of one of several payees to indorse for the others, see post ¶ 199.
Plural and singular as indication of joint and several liability, see also Bonds ¶ 10.
When instrument deemed to be joint and several, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6058.

¶ 67. A note using the first person singular signed by the individual members of a partnership and by the firm name as makers, creates a joint and several obligation.—Dow Law Bank v. Godfrey, 126 Mich. 521.

¶ 68. The fact that a note signed by two persons is in the singular number does not alter its character as a joint and several instrument, notwithstanding that the word "surety" is added to one of the signatures.—Ensign v. Dunn, 181 Mich. 456.

¶ 69. A promise in writing by several residents of certain road districts to pay to the order of a corporation, engaged in the manufacture and sale of machines for grading and repairing highways, a specified sum at a given date as the first payment for a road grader, which they have purchased of the payee "in proportion to the road tax" in said road districts on lands then owned and occupied by the promisors creates a separate, and not a joint, liability on their part.—Western Wheel Scraper Co. v. Locklin, 100 Mich. 339.

§ 16. Certificates of deposit as notes.

See also post ¶ 414.

¶ 70. A certificate of deposit payable to the depositor's order upon its return properly indorsed is a promissory note payable on demand.—Beardsley v. Webber, 104 Mich. 88.

¶ 71. A certificate of deposit payable on the return thereof properly indorsed is in legal effect a promissory note payable on demand, and is subject to all the incidents of negotiable paper.—Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191; Tripp v. Curtenius, 36 Mich. 494; Birch v. Fisher, 51 Mich. 36.

§ 17. Checks as bills of exchange.

Validity in hands of bona fide holder of check certified without sufficient funds, see post § 86.

¶ 72. All checks come within the meaning and definition of a bill of exchange, but all bills of exchange are not checks. They are commercial paper, and are governed by the same rules as to presentment and notice of nonpayment as inland bills of exchange, payable on demand.—People v. Kemp, 76 Mich. 410.

§ 18. Accompanying mortgages, papers or agreements.

Provisions in accompanying mortgage as affecting negotiability of note, see also ante § 5.

Negotiability of instrument purporting to be according to the condition of a mortgage, see ante ¶ 7.

Bona fides of purchaser as affected by notice or knowledge of collateral agreements or securities, see post § 73.

Bill of lading as incident to draft to which it is attached, see Bills of Lading § 3.

Validity of chattel mortgage to secure future payment of note or paper, see Chattel Mortgages § 13.

¶ 73. A contemporaneous agreement in writing upon a detached paper, varying the terms of a note, is not a part of it.—Smalley v. Bristol, 1 Mich. 153.

¶ 74. Where a promissory note has a clause appended giving the payee the power to extend the time of payment indefinitely, the note and the clause must be construed together.—Smith v. Van Blarcom, 45 Mich. 371.

¶ 75. The terms of a note may be modified and controlled by an accompanying mortgage.—Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562.

¶ 76. A promissory note and a bond or agreement given at the same time by the payee in the note to the maker, the note being for the purchase price of a certain number of bushels of "Bohemian oats" at $10 per bushel, and the agreement stipulating to sell for the maker of the note a certain larger number of bushels at the same price per bushel before the note should be paid, although on separate papers, constitute one transaction.—Sutton v. Beckwith, 68 Mich. 303; McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454; Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PRIMARY PARTIES.

Provisions as to liability of parties, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6101 et seq.

Liability of parties on bills drawn in a set, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6221 et seq.

¶ 77. The mutual rights of parties to negotiable paper are determined, in common-law actions, by their respective positions on the paper at the time it is negotiated and becomes the property of a bona fide holder.—Greusel v. Hubbard, 51 Mich. 95; Brewer v. Boynton, 71 Mich. 254.

¶ 78. Equity has no different rules from those of law in respect to the rights and obligations of parties to negotiable paper; and will treat the payee of a bank draft as having the ordinary legal rights against the drawer on dishonor.—Grammel v. Carmer, 55 Mich. 201.

¶ 79. Where a person bought a judgment, partly paid for it, and gave his note for the balance on condition that if he elected to lose what he had paid and let his payee retain the judgment this note was to be void, it was held that he must give timely notice of such election to the payee before maturity, and that a mere failure to pay the note would not amount to an election, but would leave him liable.—Draper v. Fletcher, 26 Mich. 154.

¶ 80. A third person's promise to pay a note and release the makers from responsibility does not lessen the liability of the makers unless the creditor consents.—Gallery v. National Exch. Bank of Albion, 41 Mich. 169.

¶ 81. In the absence of proof that a note made for the payee's accommodation has been paid, an indorsee is entitled to recover thereon against the maker where the maker's testimony shows that the note was discounted at a bank, and that the payee received the money.—Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co. v. Gibbs, 92 Mich. 29.

¶ 82. An indorser who pays a note on an insufficient notice of protest is, nevertheless, entitled to recover from the maker.—Tredway v. Antisdel, 86 Mich. 82.

¶ 84. The equities of a note given in full and final settlement of conflicting claims cannot be inquired into.—Jennison v. Stone, 30 Mich. 99.

¶ 85. Between the original parties the defense that for a discount prepayment was made without surrender of the note and a receipt given in full by plaintiff's agent is good, though if the note had been in the hands of an indorsee it might not have been available.—Haughton v. Maurer, 55 Mich. 323.

¶ 86. A note that is given to the payee's agent, and is turned over to the payee before it is due and applied by him on an indebtedness of the maker, will sustain a recovery by the payee if he has no knowledge of any arrangement between the maker and the agent whereby the latter was to keep the note in his own hands and use it in his own business.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. McKee, 51 Mich. 426.

¶ 87. In an action on a promissory note by the joint payees thereof, held that having borrowed money which the plaintiffs jointly furnished and given her note payable to them jointly, the defendant could not be allowed to show that the money really belonged to one of the plaintiffs only as against his creditors.—Kincade v. Peck, 193 Mich. 207.

¶ 88. Purchasers of commercial paper with notice or with such knowledge as should put them upon inquiry, in an action on a note by an indorsee, take subject to the same defense that could be made against the original payee.—Carey v. Nissle, 145 Mich. 383.

¶ 89. Recovery by a joint maker of a note from his comaker of advances made by him consisting in part of money and in part property made under a compromise agr ment whereby the holder of the joint ob gation accepted less than its face value, ca not be complained of by such comake where, in an action by such maker agai his comaker, the bill of particulars charg that such joint obligation was discharged the payment of the entire amount due; sin the variance was favorable to defendant. Moffet v. Sebastian, 149 Mich. 451.

¶ 90. Where the relatives of a bank r ber gave their note to the bank in settleme of the criminal's indebtedness and the cri inal's mother conveyed to the bank a pie of land in reduction of the debt, it was i material in an action on the note that t criminal had admitted that the land h been purchased with money belonging to t bank. The fact of the conveyance was i portant, as would be that of any other pa ment, but what equitable claim the ba might have had to the conveyance did n concern the defendants on the note.—Bu v. First Nat. Bank, 27 Mich. 293.

¶ 96. As between the original parties a note must be supported by a sufficient consideration.—Kulenkamp v. Groff, 71 Mich. 675.

¶ 97. A want or failure of consideration may always be shown in defense of an action on a note. (Dictum in case of trover by the payee's administrator against the maker for conversion of the note.)—Kelley v. Guy, 116 Mich. 43.

¶ 98. A want of consideration may always be shown in defense of a promissory note upon suit between the original parties.—East Side Trust & Sav. Bank v. McGinnis, 197 Mich. 432.

¶ 99. The consideration for which a promissory note was given may always be shown unless the rights of a bona fide purchaser have intervened.—Macomb v. Wilkinson, 83 Mich. 486.

¶ 100. A note cannot be enforced that is payable by instalments in advance, and is given for the premium on an insurance policy that is to be wholly void during any period of default in payment, but revives on payment of the instalment.—Yost v. American Ins. Co., 89 Mich. 581.

¶ 101. Where a note given in aid of a railroad reads: "In consideration of the construction of a standard gauge railroad by the I. & L. M. R. Co. from S. B. to S. J., and making said S. J. the terminus of said railway, and the completion and in operation of said railway by Nov. 1, 1889, I promise to pay to ..... the sum of ..... thirty days after said road is constructed, as aforesaid, etc.," the completion and operation of the road by the date fixed must be regarded as a condition precedent to the maker's liability.—Jordan v. Newton, 116 Mich. 674.

¶ 102. Where one purchases a claim against an insolvent corporation, giving his note for the face value of the claim, he will be liable to the payee for the whole amount of the note regardless of the fact that the receiver's dividends on the claim were not sufficient to satisfy the whole debt.—Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Globe Brass Works, 155 Mich. 3.

¶ 103. Where there is a valuable consideration for a note the mere inadequacy thereof cannot defeat the paper in a claim thereon against the maker's estate.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 104. Defendant is not entitled to show that goods purchased by him were not worth what he promised to pay for them, in an action of a promissory note for the purchase price of such goods.—Julius Kessler & Co. v. Zacharias, 145 Mich. 698.

¶ 105. The nonperformance by the payee in a note of an agreement in consideration of which the note was given will prevent a recovery on the note by anyone not a bona fide holder of the paper for value.—Fink v. Chambers, 95 Mich. 508.

§ 23. Liability on joint or doubly signed instruments.

¶ 111. Where a judgment debtor gave his promissory note for a part of the judgment, and the arrangement under which he did this was afterward abandoned for another compromise arrangement made by the judgment creditor with third persons, and inconsistent with the idea of leaving the note outstanding against the debtor to be paid in addition to the fulfilment of the compromise, it was held that the latter agreement, when perfected, would operate, in the absence of any showing of a contrary intent, to invalidate the note as between the parties to it.—Campbell v. Skinner, 30 Mich. 32.

¶ 112. The parties to a written build contract, which provides for payment c in cash, can afterwards agree orally that amount of a note made by the builder held by the other party should be p thereon by delivering up and canceling note, and thereafter, as soon as work eno is done under the contract to pay such n the note in the hands of such holder wo thereby be satisfied.—Roberts v. Wilkin 34 Mich. 129.

¶ 113. A draft that had been accepted the drawees was, on maturity, presented the bank where it was made payable, payment was refused for want of funds, the drawees' bookkeeper told the cashier the bank that the drawers should pay, that he would have to make a draft b on them to pay with. Said drawers hav orally promised the drawees to take care a sight draft, which was reported to bank, the cashier agreed to take such dr and thereupon the bank charged the amo of the matured draft to the drawees credited them with the proceeds of the si draft. It protested the sight draft w dishonored. Held, that the matured dr was paid and that the bank could not cover thereupon.—Bay City Bank v. Li say, 94 Mich. 176.

¶ 114. Casual statements made by holder of a draft, or on his behalf, to effect that it has been paid, do not es the holder from enforcing its payment the drawer is not actually misled by them Compton v. Blair, 46 Mich. 1.

¶ 115. The rule that where one of two nocent parties must suffer, the law casts burden upon him who is guilty of a want diligence or care applies in an action o note to bearer which the defendant paid a party not entitled to it, after notice its loss or theft.—Page Woven Wire Fe Co. v. Pool, 133 Mich. 323.

¶ 116. The rule, that where notice of loss or theft of an instrument has b brought home to the maker, payment the after made will not extinguish liability less the party presenting the instrument required before payment, to establish t thereto, applies in an action on a note bearer which the payor paid to one not titled to it but professing to be the payo agent and tending the note, after notice fr a bank of the loss or theft of the note Page Woven Wire Fence Co. v. Pool, Mich. 323.

¶ 116a. It is error to charge the jury t the indorser of a promissory note cannot cover from the maker thereof if the jury f that such endorser, through negligen failed to realize on stock transferred to h by the maker at the time of the execut of such note, where, in an action upon note, the defendant claimed to have tra ferred the stock in payment of the note s ject to right of redemption within an agreed time, and that, failing to redeem, in the event of the sale of such stock, plaintiff agreed to pay defendant the excess received from such sale over the amount of the note.—Smith v. Nixon, 145 Mich. 593.

§ 25. ——Joint paper; discharge of coparty.

Construction of instrument as joint or several, see ante § 15.
Release or discharge of accommodation makers, see also post § 61.

¶ 117. When a note is paid by one of two joint promisors, who is directly liable thereon for its whole amount, the prior contract cannot be revived against his cosigners.—Stevens v. Hannan, 88 Mich. 13.

¶ 118. Where, for a consideration, it was orally agreed between the payee of a joint note and one of the three makers that such maker should pay one-third of the debt in a particular manner from a stated source, and should be released from the other two-thirds, the other two makers were released from further liability on paying their two-thirds, and the other third should be paid according to the new agreement.—Seligman v. Pinet, 78 Mich. 50.

¶ 119. Where thirteen defendants sign a joint note for $2,600, a writing given by the holder of the note to one of them, limiting his liability to $200, does not discharge the joint liability of the other defendants.—Rumsey v. Fox, 158 Mich. 248.

¶ 120. The fact that the owner of a joint note filed a claim against one of the deceased obligors thereon, which was allowed at decedent's pro rata liability thereunder, held not to bar recovery against the other joint obligors on the note as an election to enforce several liability.—McKinley v. Small, 178 Mich. 555.

¶ 121. A discontinuance as to a guarantor in a suit against all the parties to a note cannot affect the maker's liability.—Phelps v. Church, 65 Mich. 231.

§ 26. ——Renewals or reissuance after payment.

See also ante ¶ 117.

¶ 122. The receipt and acceptance of each renewal of a note, and the surrender of the former note constitutes payment of such former note.—Citizens Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Platt, 135 Mich. 267.

¶ 123. The payment, after maturity, of a note secured by mortgage, by one who has purchased the land subject to the mortgage, extinguishes the note; and if it be afterwards put in circulation no recovery can be had upon it.—Appledorn v. Streeter, 20 Mich. 9.

Rights, liabilities, and defenses of sureties as such, see Suretyship.

¶ 124. The maker of a note that has been sold to satisfy the payee will continue liable upon it, if he consents to do so; but his consent will not bind his surety.—Fuller v. Bennett, 55 Mich. 357.

¶ 125. If a bank sells, without authority to do so, a note left with it, and satisfies t the payee, the purchaser cannot afterwards collect it as against a surety of the maker. And if the purchaser has left the payee to suppose that the note was regularly taken up, the latter cannot, after the maker's death and on being made a party to a suit upon the note against the surety, be required to elect between affirming the sale or rescinding it and restore the money which he has received in payment of it, since the circumstances would prevent restoring him to his former position in respect to the note and the makers.—Fuller v. Bennett, 55 Mich. 357.

¶ 126. It has been held that a provision in a promissory note for an "attorney fee" in case of proceedings to collect it was void, being a stipulation for a penalty, and that the insertion of such a provision did not, therefore, enlarge a surety's liability.—Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 137; Myer v. Hart, 40 Mich. 517.

¶ 127. Where a corporation gave its note to secure a payment of a debt of the indorser of the note, such corporation and indorser, as between themselves, were surety and principal respectively, for the payment of such debt.—McGraw v. Union Trust Co., 136 Mich. 521.

¶ 128. Where a joint maker of a promissory note writes after his signature the word "surety" he does not thereby change or limit his liability to the payee or holder nor make it the latter's duty to proceed at his request against the other maker. Whether the rule would be different in equity, or in the case of a mere guaranty, quære. His proper course for protecting himself would be to fulfill his duty of paying the note and taking it up, and then to proceed against his principal for the amount.—Inkster v. First Nat. Bank of Marshall, 30 Mich. 143.

¶ 129. The fact that a name is signed on the back of a note will not prevent the signer being held as a joint maker, if such was the fact.—Dow Law Bank v. Godfrey, 126 Mich. 521.

§ 29. Indorsement by stranger before delivery or transfer.

Negotiation and transfer generally, see post § 31.
Liability and discharge of indorsers, see post § 46.
Discontinuance of maker as discontinuance of indorsers before negotiation joined as codefendants, see Discontinuance § 3.

¶ 130. If a stranger to a note puts his name on the back of it before it is delivered to or indorsed by the payee he is liable as joint maker and not as indorser.—Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 Mich. 555; Rothschild v. Grix, 31 Mich. 150; Herbage v. McEntee, 40 Mich. 337; Sibley v. Muskegon Nat. Bank, 41 Mich. 196; Moynahan v. Hanaford, 42 Mich. 329; Bendey v. Townsend, 109 U. S. 665, 27 L. ed. 1065, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482.

¶ 131. Where a person other than the payee indorses a note prior to the delivery thereof and before any advances are made thereon, he is liable as a joint maker to him who advances the money.—Allison v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 104 Mich. 141; Gumz v. Giegling, 108 Mich. 295.

¶ 132. A stranger to a note who puts his name on the back of it before it is delivered to or indorsed by the payee, is liable as a joint maker whether the note has words of negotiability or not.—Rothschild v. Grix, 31 Mich. 150; Herbage v. McEntee, 40 Mich. 337.

¶ 133. The payee of a note cannot sue, as a joint maker, one who has provisionally put his name on the back of it, if he himself has afterwards indorsed the note and put his own name before the other.—Greusel v. Hubbard, 51 Mich. 95.

¶ 134. Where a note is indorsed prior to its delivery, and the indorsers are not the payees, the contract is in form joint against the makers and indorsers.—J. A. Fay & Co. v. James Jenks & Co., 78 Mich. 312.

¶ 135. One who indorses a promissory note before its delivery to the payee is an original promisor, and is liable without test.—Tredway v. Antisdel, 86 Mich. 82

¶ 136. One who indorses a note pay to the maker's order, at the time of its cution and before delivery, is liable a joint maker of the note, even though joint maker thereof.—Phelps v. Church,

Mich. 231.

¶ 139. One who indorses upon a ne tiable promissory note a guaranty of p ment contemporaneously with its executi cannot be treated as a joint maker of note. His undertaking is distinct and s arate from that of the maker.—Tinker
McCauley, 3 Mich. 188, overruling Higg
v. Watson, 1 Mich. 428.

¶ 140. The guaranty of a promissory n need not name the promisee.—Thomas
Dodge, 8 Mich. 51; Nevius v. Lansingbur
Bank, 10 Mich. 547.

¶ 141. The guarantor of the payment o
note is not released by the holder's failu to give him notice of its nonpayment or to sue the maker; nor, though he had no such notice, is he released by the maker's becoming insolvent some time after the maturity of the note.—Roberts v. Hawkins, 70 Mich. 566.

¶ 142. A note was executed by several persons and intrusted to an agent with instructions not to deliver it until it was signed by an equal number of others equally interested in the object for which the note was given. These latter parties, however, instead of signing, indorsed a guaranty of collection and put the note in circulation. Held, that in equity the guarantors might be compelled to pay their share of the note.—Edsell v. Briggs, 20 Mich. 429.

§ 32. Delivery or transfer without indorsement.

Right of assignees to sue in their own name, see post § 97.

¶ 144. A promissory note payable to the "order of M. A. B. or bearer" is transferable without an indorsement by M. A. B.—Bitzer v. Wagar, 83 Mich. 223.

¶ 145. Notes indorsed in blank by the payees will pass by delivery, and in an action on them subsequent indorsements need not be proved.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

¶ 146. Delivery without indorsement of paper payable to order does not amount to a transfer of the title thereto unless by way of equitable assignment, and as such an assignment is not, like a negotiable transfer, discharged of equities, any person in possession thereby cannot confer by delivery any better title than he owns, and is not authorized to sue on the paper in his own name.—Minor v. Bewick, 55 Mich. 491.

¶ 147. Where a note payable to A. is taken by B., A.'s agent, and is by B. indorsed in blank for collection, the subsequent turning over of the note by A. to B., on a settlement of accounts, passes title to B. without further indorsement, and enables B. to recover thereon.—Marskey v. Turner, 81 Mich. 62.

¶ 148. A guaranty of payment indorsed on a note by one to whose order it is payable is both a guaranty and an indorsement, and the note will thereafter pass by mere delivery.—Green v. Burrows, 47 Mich. 70.

§ 33. Rights and equities of transferees.

[Note. The rights and equities growing out of a transfer ordinarily depend on [a] whether it was a regular and ordinary transfer by delivery and indorsement or by delivery alone (see post VII et seq., or [b] was to one who stands as a bona fide taker as to whom equities between the original parties will not avail (see post XIII, B), or [c] was by way of mere assignment or succession (see Assignments § 16 et seq.; Estates of Decedents, IV, V). Search should be made at the places indicated according to the character of the transfer.]

Mutual rights of parties fixed as of time of negotiation, see also ante § 19.

Acceptance of check tendered in full as a satisfaction, see Accord and Satisfaction.

Deposited check as liquidated damage agreement, see Damages ¶ 695.

Surrender of note cancelled as evidence of gift, see Gifts ¶ 139.

¶ 149. Unless the subsequent purchaser of a note establishes that he is a bona fide holder thereof, such note is open to the defenses available as between the original parties.—Harrison v. Grier, 198 Mich. 672.

¶ 150. A. gave to B. a note and mortgage to secure a smaller sum. C. took from B. the note without indorsement, and the mortgage without assignment, having knowledge of the facts. Held, that not being an innocent holder for value he could not foreclose the mortgage.—Bilderback v. McConnell, 48 Mich. 345.

§ 34. Transfer or negotiation of guaranty or of guaranteed instrument.

Guaranties and liability thereon, see ante § 30.

¶ 151. An indorsed guaranty of payment of a note without protest is negotiable.—Green v. Burrows, 47 Mich. 70.

¶ 152. A guaranty indorsed on a promissory note contemporaneously with the making of the note is not transferred therewith by negotiation of the note.—Tinker v. Webb, 3 Mich. 188, overruling Higgins v. Watson, 1 Mich. 428.

¶ 153. A guaranty of payment indorsed on a note by the payee passes with the note by negotiation since the enactment of How. St. § 1590, Comp. L. 1871, § 1564, which expressly so provides.—Green v. Burrows, 47 Mich. 70; Russell v. Klink, 53 Mich. 161.

¶ 154. A guaranty of payment or of collection indorsed on a note by the payee or other owner is negotiable and passes title to the note.—Green v. Burrows, 47 Mich. 70; Russell & Co. v. Klink, 53 Mich. 161; Phelps v. Church, 65 Mich. 231.

¶ 155. Where the party to whose order a note is payable indorses a guaranty thereon, such indorsement need not be negotiable to enable the indorsee to sue the maker.—Phelps v. Church, 65 Mich. 231.

VI. ACCEPTANCES, PROMISES TO ACCEPT AND PAYMENT BY ACCEPTOR.

§ 35. In general; necessity and sufficiency of acceptance.

Rights and liabilities of acceptors, see post § 40.
Accommodation acceptance, see post § 62.
Acceptance of non-negotiable paper by drawee, see Non-negotiable Paper § 3.

Acceptance as separate contract, which law governs, see Conflict of Laws § 22.
Provisions as to acceptance of bills of exchange, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6173 et seq.
Provisions as to acceptance for honor, s Comp. L. 1915, § 6202 et seq.
Effect of acceptance of checks, see Comp. 1915, § 6229.

¶ 156. No acceptance is necessary of bill drawn by a corporation upon itself, t act of drawing being deemed an acceptan —Hasey v. White Pigeon Beet Sugar Co., D. 193.

¶ 157. A lumberman's order in this forn [Date and address] Pay to the order of F. the sum of $10, and charge the same Camp 8. [Signature], is, in essentials, draft, and must be accepted before it w sustain an action.—Finan v. Babcock, Mich. 301.

¶ 158. A parol acceptance of a draft bill of exchange is void under the statut —Elliott v. Miller, 8 Mich. 132; Pfaff Cummings, 67 Mich. 143.

¶ 159. A parol agreement by a tax c lector, to receive in payment of taxes a dra drawn by his creditor upon himself, is wit in Comp. L. 1857, p. 408, How. St. § 158 —Elliott v. Miller, 8 Mich. 132.

¶ 160. An oral agreement to credit a su if the promisee would procure an order a third person is invalid, since How. § 1583, forbids a person's being charged an unwritten acceptance of an order for pa ment of money.—Pfaff v. Cummings, Mich. 143.

¶ 161. Under How. St. § 1583, which r quires acceptances to be in writing, a del or's oral acceptance of an order from h creditor for the payment by him to t drawer's creditor of a certain sum of mone to be applied, when collected, upon the de due from the drawer, is void where there no novation or previous agreement to acce the order.—Upham v. Clute, 105 Mich. 350

¶ 162. Oral acceptance without novati by a debtor of an order from his credit to pay money to the drawer's creditor void under How. St. § 1583, providing th no one shall be charged as an acceptor a bill of exchange unless such acceptance in writing, etc.—Upham v. Clute, 105 Mic 350.

¶ 163. The mere writing of the drawe name across the face of an order is a su cient acceptance, and the fact that the wor "Paid on this order forty dollars" were wr ten across the face of the bill above t drawee's signature does not qualify t acceptance or limit it to that sum.—Peters v. Hubbard, 28 Mich. 197.

¶ 164. An indorsement of a partial pa ment on an order would naturally be ma by the holder, because it would be his a knowledgment that the payment had be made, and if the indorsement was made by the party paying, it would be virtually the act of the holder as permitting it.—Peterson v. Hubbard, 28 Mich. 197.

§ 36. Time in which to accept.

Time to make presentment and demand, see post § 51.

¶ 165. Where the drawee of a bill does not refuse acceptance, but desires time to examine into the state of his accounts before deciding, he is entitled to twenty-four hours for that purpose.—Case v. Burt, 15 Mich. 82.

¶ 166. The rule that one who accepts a sight draft, has three days in which to pay it, does not give one to whom a draft is presented for acceptance, three days in which to accept it.—Town v. Jepson, 133 Mich. 673.

§ 37. Conditional acceptance.

Provisions as to conditional acceptance, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6182, 6183.

¶ 167. A conditional acceptance of a draft to be payable when a house was completed requires reference to the builder's contract and is not an assignment pro tanto of what is to be payable by the drawer.—Ferguson v. Davis, 65 Mich. 677.

¶ 168. In a suit upon an acceptance of a bill of exchange on condition that the amount is found due the drawer on final settlement, the plaintiff must make proof of such settlement, and of the amount found due thereon, in order to recover.—Gooding v. Underwood, 89 Mich. 187.

§ 38. Executory or collateral promise to accept or to indorse.

¶ 169. One cannot be held as indorser upon a mere promise to indorse.—Birdsell Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 96 Mich. 213.

¶ 170. Breach of promise to indorse, if the promise was upon sufficient consideration, is a cause of action.—Birdsell Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 96 Mich. 213.

§ 39. Liability of drawee prior to acceptance.

Rights and liabilities of primary parties, see ante § 19.

Liability of drawee on bills drawn in a set, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6222.

¶ 171. The drawee of an unaccepted check or draft is not liable to a suit by the payee.—Second Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282; Grammel v. Carmer, 55 Mich. 201; Brennan v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 62 Mich. 343.

¶ 172. The payee of a banker's unaccepted sight draft has no remedy at law against the drawee for refusing to pay it, even if he has funds enough to do so, since between the payee and the drawee there is no privity of contract. And if after the draft is given the maker is found to be insolvent, the payee cannot compel the maker's assignee or receiver to pay him more than his pro rata share like other creditors.—Grammel v. Carmer, 55 Mich. 201.

§ 40. Rights and liabilities of acceptors and payers.

Certification as new contract between drawee and indorsee, see Banking § 22.

Provisions as to liability of acceptor, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6193.

Liability of acceptors of bills drawn in a set, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6223.

¶ 173. An acceptor whose liability has not been changed by subsequent dealings to his prejudice or against his rights can be sued on his acceptance, and is liable, in form, as acceptor, as every contract must be sued according to its terms.—Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358.

¶ 174. One who, accepts paper not calling for acceptance, becomes solely liable, if liable at all, and his liability depends upon the consideration for the acceptance.—Sweet v. Swift, 65 Mich. 90.

¶ 175. The death of a payee or indorser after a check has been negotiated cannot affect its negotiability further, or prevent the drawee from safely paying it.—Brennan v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 62 Mich. 343.

¶ 176. A person who, being an agent of the drawee of demand paper which had been presented and dishonored puts his name as acceptor on the paper does not bind the drawee but becomes solely liable, and his liability depends upon the consideration upon which it was made.—Sweet v. Swift, 65 Mich. 90.

¶ 177. A paper on a printed form of bank check without date and with an ink line drawn lengthwise through the space for the name of the payee is void for want of a payee, and in view of the line cannot be regarded as one payable to bearer for want of a designated payee; and the bank paying it is liable to the drawer.—Gordon v. Lansing State Sav. Bank, 133 Mich. 143, affirming decision of lower court by equal division.

¶ 178. A custom between a depositor and his bank whereby it is the bank's duty, upon receiving for collection a draft accepted by him, to treat the transaction as though the depositor had drawn his check for the amount of the draft, and to pay the money to the drawer, does not relieve the depositor from liability upon such draft, although at the time, and a few days later, when the bank closed its doors, not having made such payment, the depositor had a balance to his credit exceeding the amount due on the draft.—Midland State Bank v. Byrne, 97 Mich. 178.

§ 41. ——Upon payment of instrument.

Liability of bank paying forged or altered paper, see Banking, VII.

¶ 179. After accepting and paying a bill the drawee cannot recover back the amount of it from the payee on the ground that he had paid it under a mistake as to the reliability of the drawer's security, which was sent forward with the bill and proved to be fictitious.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Burkham, 32 Mich. 328.

¶ 180. A bank sued to recover the amount paid by it on defendant's check, which there were no funds to meet. Defendant claimed the check grew out of an intended horse trade which was not consummated, and that the bank was notified not to pay. Held, that this claim was met by the jury's finding that the check was to be paid even if the trade fell through, and that the payment was made before notice.—Frankenberg v. First Nat. Bank of Decatur, 33 Mich. 46.

¶ 181. The fact that the cashier of a bank accepts and gives credit for an accommodation note with knowledge of its character, on an overdraft of the accommodated party, will not prevent the bank recovering on the instrument.—Irwin v. Wolcott, 183 Mich. 92.

VII. INDORSEMENTS OR TRANSFERS, AND RESULTING RIGHTS, LIABILITIES AND WARRANTIES.

§ 42. In general.

Requisites and indicia of negotiability, see ante I.

Negotiation and transfer in general, see ante § 31.

Presumption as to authority of attorney to indorse check received by attorney in payment of claim, see also Attorneys ¶ 73.

Indorsements for rediscount, see also Ba ing § 44.

Effect of maker's indorsing bond, see Bo ¶ 2.

Effect of indorsing or transferring paper Sunday, see Sunday.

Person deemed indorser where it is not cl in what capacity he intended to sign, Comp. L. 1915, § 6058.

Provisions as to indorsement and trans of negotiable paper, see Comp. L. 1 § 6071 et seq.

Kinds of indorsement, see Comp. L. 1 § 6074 et seq.

Who are indorsers, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6

¶ 182. One cannot be an indorser unl someone possesses the correlative charac of indorsee. When one holds a note un bare manual delivery by the maker, with any act or knowledge of the payee to conn the latter as a party, the character of le indorsee is not filled.—Gibson v. Miller, Mich. 355.

¶ 183. The payee of a note drawn to or becomes an indorser by signing his na on the back of it, and unless he adds words to create a different relation is chargeable otherwise. And until he indor the note no third person can become an dorser.—Smith v. Long, 40 Mich. 555.

¶ 184. Where the plaintiff has acqui the equitable title to the promissory note sues upon, prior to bringing suit, the indor ment of the same over to him by his ven is mere matter of form, and may be m at the time of the trial.—Brown v. McHu 35 Mich. 50.

¶ 185. The consideration for an indor ment and the good faith in using it may be important questions where there are original equities and the indorser is bou to make the paper good at all events. I if the maker had no right to give it c rency, no one can get any better right unl he takes the paper under circumstances t would legally exonerate him from equi that bind his assignor.—Kelly v. Freedm 56 Mich. 321.

¶ 186. Upon transferring a promiss note, the payee wrote the following upon back of the note, above his signature: hereby assign the within note" to M. and Held, that he was not thereby relieved fr liability as indorser.—Markey v. Corey, Mich. 184.

¶ 187. A promissory note made paya to a limited partnership association in name it uses, although not its full le name, is valid in the hands of an indors as if it be regarded a fictitious payee, note is payable to bearer under Comp. 1897, § 4870 and the indorsement is eit effective or unnecessary.—Shaw, Kendall Co. v. Brown, 128 Mich. 573.

¶ 188. A note to the order of J. H. S. was indorsed as by "J. H. S. & Co.," and the indorsement was shown to have been in the writing of J. H. S. Held sufficient to transfer title, and to charge J. H. S. as indorser.—Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co. v. Gibbs, 92 Mich. 29.

¶ 189. The character of an indorsement of a bill of exchange is not affected by the use of the words "Received payment" in connection with the signature of the indorser made before acceptance.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 543.

¶ 190. If several persons not partners are payees or indorsees of a bill or note, it must be indorsed by all of them; either one of the joint payees may authorize the other to indorse for him, and an assignment of interest in the paper from one to the other carries with it such authority, but there is no presumption of law that one may indorse for the other.—Kaufman v. State Sav. Bank, 151 Mich. 65.

§ 43. Indorsement for collection.

Scope of collecting or financial agent's authority, see Agency § 36.
Rights of banks to which paper is indorsed for collection, see also Banking § 34.
Liability of bank for negligence or delay in collections, see Banking §§ 36-39.
Embezzlement by indorsee for collection, see Crimes § 71.
Right of agent holding paper for collection to sue it in his own name, see post § 96.

¶ 191. Indorsement for collection does not transfer title to the note and its proceeds.—Sutherland v. First Nat. Bank of Ypsilanti, 31 Mich. 230; Locke v. Leonard Silk Co., 37 Mich. 479.

¶ 192. Indorsements for collection give no title to the collecting agent as against the owner of the note, and the latter in suing on it by copy may strike them out, together with the indorsements back to him.—Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123.

¶ 193. Indorsement of a note to a bank for collection does not preclude the payee from demanding and receiving payment.—Page Woven Wire Fence Co. v. Pool, 133 Mich. 323.

¶ 194. Where a bank sends a draft to another for collection but with a general indorsement thereon, it conveys to the second bank an apparent title; and hence where it is forwarded to a third bank for "collection and credit," such third bank has a lien on the proceeds for a general balance due it from the second bank though the first bank was in fact the owner.—Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 139 Mich. 392.

§ 44. Nature and construction of indorsements.

Effect upon negotiability of indorsement of statement as to maker's financial responsibility, see ante ¶ 8.
Interpretation and construction of negotiable instruments in general, see ante § 10.
As constituting transferee bona fide holder, see post XIII.

Provisions as to indorsement contract, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6105 et seq.
Indorsement or transfer by corporation or infant, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6058.

¶ 195. The usual indorsement of a negotiable promissory note binds the indorser to pay it if notified at maturity that the maker will not pay it; and it may even pass a perfect title to the indorsee and enable him to recover on it in cases where the indorser could not.—Aniba v. Yeomans, 39 Mich. 171.

¶ 196. Successive indorsements of negotiable paper prima facie import, as between the several indorsers, a several and successive, and not a joint, obligation, whether the indorsements be made for accommodation or for value received though it may be shown aliunde that the undertaking of the several indorsers is in fact joint.—Harrah v. Doherty, 111 Mich. 175.

¶ 197. The indorser of a certificate of deposit in the ordinary form assumes the same liability as the indorser of a promissory note of like tenor.—Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191.

¶ 198. Under the Negotiable Instruments Act, Pub. Acts 1905, Act 265, secs. 65, 69, 70, How., 2nd Ed., §§ 2736, 2740, 2741, the liability of an indorser in blank upon the note below that of the payee is conclusively presumed to be that of a subsequent indorser and not that of a joint maker or surety.—Ensign v. Fogg, 177 Mich. 317.

§ 45. Striking out indorsements.

Striking out indorsements for collection, see also ante ¶ 192.
Provisions as to striking out indorsements, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6089.

¶ 199. The indorsement of a note subsequent to the indorsement thereof in blank by the payee named therein may, under the Negotiable Instruments Law, Pub. Acts 1905, Act 265, sec. 50, How., 2nd Ed., § 2721, be stricken out by the holder.—Ensign v. Fogg, 177 Mich. 317.

¶ 200. Where the holder of a note, striking out intermediate indorsements, declares against a remote indorser as on a contract made directly to himself, he recovers on the contract of the defendant with his immediate indorsee.—Kinzie v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 105.

Indorsers of note secured by mortgagor as parties defendant in equity foreclosure, see Foreclosure § 67, ¶¶ 255-258.
Provisions as to liability of indorsers, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6105 et seq.
Provisions as to discharge of persons secondarily liable, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6161 et seq.
Liability of indorsers of bills drawn in a set, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6221.
Acceptance of check as discharge of indorsers, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6229.

¶ 201. Subsequent indorsement does not make the indorser jointly liable with his principals, and joint liability is not presumed when the indorsement is not dated. It is shown by independent proof of contemporaneous execution.—Freeman v. Ellison, 37 Mich. 459.

¶ 202. The payee and indorser of a note is not a joint promisor with the subsequent indorsers, and his release by the holder releases them.—Brewer v. Boynton, 71 Mich. 254.

¶ 203. When the holders of an indorsed note which they have agreed to turn in on a contract they have with the maker have informed the indorser that work enough has been done on such contract to satisfy the note they are bound by this statement, and in suing the indorser they cannot show that defendant lost nothing by relying on it. N will his having security for his indorseme from the maker of the note make any diffe ence.—Roberts v. Wilkinson, 34 Mich. 129.

¶ 203a. A transaction in the form of t payment of notes and the assignment of land contract to which they were incide if of a character that amounts to a payme will discharge an indorser of the notes r gardless of the intention of the parties.- Lange v. Muskegon Booming Co., 63 Mic 589.

¶ 204. The fact that indorsers of notes a induced by false representations to indor renewal notes does not relieve them fro liability on the originals.—Alpena Nat. Ban v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 205. One, to whom a note, secured b chattel mortgage, has been transferred by t payee as security for his debt, he indorsi the note in blank, need not, after payment the debt, on retransferring the note, at t payee's request, to a third party, himself i dorse the instrument; and if this party pr vails upon him to indorse it representi that the indorsement is essential to pa title, his act is without consideration, a recovery cannot be had against him by su party.—Shaw v. Stein, 79 Mich. 77.

¶ 206. Where an indorsee has had a che certified by the drawee, an indorser is di charged despite that the check was pr sented for payment and refused, and th the indorser received notice.—First Nation Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 207. The insolvency of a certifying ban after having certified a check is entirely i material on the question of the liability the indorser where the rights of the parti have been fixed before the insolvency w known.—First National Bank of Detroit Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 208. The indorser of a check, havi been discharged through the indorsee's pre entation of the check for certification to t drawee and the check being actually cert fied, the subsequent delivery of a memora dum signed by the indorser to the indors consenting to an extension of time for t payment of the check did not renew the li bility of the indorser as a surety inasmu as it was without consideration.—First N tional Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mic 72.

¶ 209. An indorser is not discharged b failure of the holder, a bank, to appropria to payment funds in a deposit held by t bank, where the deposit stood in the nam of the maker and depositor as "trustee" since the bank was not obliged to assum that he owned it individually.—State Ban of St. Johns v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

¶ 210. An ordinary indorser of a negotiable bill or note is not discharged from liability by mere delay or refusal on the part of the holder to begin suit against the maker or acceptor for any period less than that fixed by the statute of limitations where the indorser's liability had been duly fixed by demand, protest and notice although the maker may have become insolvent during the delay.—Rogers v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 146 Mich. 639.

¶ 211. Where during a delay in bringing suit the maker of the note became insolvent and an indorser's liability had been fixed the duty of the indorser is to pay the amount of the note and he may then enforce his rights against the maker.—Rogers v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 146 Mich. 639.

¶ 212. It is not necessary that the indorser of a note, prior to negotiation, who knows that it is drawn payable to the maker's order, should have knowledge also that it is to be issued without the maker's indorsement, in order that it may be valid against him when negotiated without such indorsement under How. St. § 1580, providing that notes made payable to the maker's order shall, if negotiated by him, be of the same validity as against the maker, and "all persons having knowledge of the facts," as if payable to bearer.—Peninsular Sav. Bank v. Hosie, 112 Mich. 351.

¶ 212a. The acceptance by the holder of a past-due promissory note of a new note for the amount of the old, with interest, payable "on demand after date," with interest, is not such an extension of time as will release an indorser of the old note, since the new note is due and suable immediately.—Peninsular Sav. Bank v. Hosie, 112 Mich. 351.

¶ 213. A note signed P. C. Co., "Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," and payable to and indorsed by "Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," shows a corporate note and a corporate indorsement thereon, and no individual liability on the indorsement.—Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 32 L. ed. 266, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1319.

¶ 214. The holders of a note demanded payment from the indorser, who replied that he had not expected to have it to pay, and that it was impossible to pay it at present. Held, insufficient as a promise to pay.—Cromer v. Platt, 37 Mich. 132.

§ 47. ——Defenses available to indorsers.

Defenses available as between primary parties, see ante § 20.

Waiver of notice of nonpayment or dishonor, see post § 59.

Defenses against purchaser of past due note, see also post ¶ 394.

Failure to give notice of dishonor as defense, see also post § 54.

Defenses available as against bona fide holders, see post XIII, B.

¶ 215. In an action against an indorser upon a promissory note, the fact that the maker had procured the indorsement by means of false and fraudulent representations orally made by the plaintiff to the indorser as to the maker's pecuniary responsibility is a good defense.—Lenheim v. Fay, 27 Mich. 70.

¶ 216. If one indorses a note upon the promise that the indorsement of the payee as first indorser shall be obtained before the paper is used, whoever takes and keeps it until due without said other indorsement cannot hold the conditional indorser; and indorsement by the payee after maturity and protest of the note will not fix the other's liability without his own consent. He may still show the truth as a defense.—Gibson v. Miller, 29 Mich. 355.

¶ 217. If one receives as security a note without indorsement by, or the knowledge of, the payee, but indorsed by a third person upon condition that the indorsement of the payee should be obtained before the note should be used, he accepts paper which he is bound to know will be open in his hands to any defense based upon such conditional indorsement.—Gibson v. Miller, 29 Mich. 355.

¶ 218. Where a person has, by his own act, given negotiability in appearance to an instrument drawn by another, which is an existing contract, and valid in his hands, and it gets into circulation, and it is paid by the person on whom it is drawn without notice of anything wrong, the payment will be protected.—Brennan v. Merchants' & Mnfrs. Nat. Bank, 62 Mich. 343.

¶ 219. When an indorser of a note applies to a bank to have it discounted for his own accommodation, the bank's silence as to other indebtedness of the maker of the note to the bank, and concerning the maker's assurance that he would give security if required for advances by the bank to him, is not a fraud upon the indorser.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 220. One who is induced to indorse a note, given in settlement of a charge of embezzlement, through the maker's representation that the note is for the purchase of an interest in the payee's business, is not liable to the payee if the latter knew of the means by which the indorsement was to be secured.—Beath v. Chapoton, 115 Mich. 506.

¶ 221. Where a stockholder, in indorsing his corporation's note, given for an existing indebtedness, follows an agreement with the payee that such corporation shall have the exclusive sale within the state of machinery of the payee's manufacture, any violation of the agreement, however slight, by the payee gives to the indorser, as against such payee, the right of refusing to pay or renew such note.—J. A. Fay & Co. v. James Jenks & Co., 93 Mich. 130.

§ 48. Warranties and admissions of indorser and liability for breach of warranty.

Guaranties and liability thereon, see ante § 30.

Nature and construction of indorsement contract, see ante § 44.

Representations made in connection with indorsement or transfer of paper as constituting representations as to credit of another, see Frauds, Statute of § 80.

¶ 222. An indorser admits that previous indorsements were duly made and warrants the title and genuineness of the payer he transfers; and he is not released if it appears that a previous indorsement is invalid.—Fish v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Mich. 203.

¶ 223. One who receives negotiable paper need not look beyond the signature of the last indorser if he is satisfied that it is genuine, and has no notice of facts that should put him on inquiry.—Fish v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Mich. 203.

¶ 224. One who has bought a promissory note under an oral warranty that it is good and that the maker is financially responsible, need not exhaust his legal remedy against the maker before bringing action for a breach of the warranty.—Huntington v. Wellington, 12 Mich. 10; Clark v. Roberts, 26 Mich. 506; Taylor v. Soper, 53 Mich. 96; Knauss v. Major, 111 Mich. 239.

¶ 225. An innocent purchaser of a Bohemian oat note, from whom the holder concealed its true consideration, and to whom he warranted it to be a good note, need not collect it of the maker, though able to do so, but can recover the value of the note, or the money paid for it, from such holder.—Evans v. Stuhrberg, 78 Mich. 145.

§ 49. Rights and liabilities as between indorsers.

Rights as between accommodation indorsers, see post § 63.

Right of indorser paying old notes to be subrogated to new notes, see Subrogation ¶ 7.

Extent and measure of contribution between indorsers, see Indemnity § 15.

Applicability of doctrine of marshalling to indorsee, see Marshalling Assets ¶ 4.

Right of indorser to subrogation, see Subrogation.

¶ 226. Successive indorsers of commercial paper are not, as such, sureties for each other and liable to contribution.—McGurk v. Huggett, 56 Mich. 187.

¶ 227. A second indorser by putting his name above that of the payee, who has indorsed the note for the maker's accommo tion, makes himself a joint-maker, disqualifies himself from recourse to the indorser.—Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 39

¶ 228. An agreement by a subsequ accommodation indorser of a note with prior accommodation indorser, after mat ity of the note, to pay one-half thereof, without consideration, and of no bind effect, in the absence of a precedent agr ment changing the liability of the respect indorsers, as between themselves, from t imported by their successive indorsements Harrah v. Doherty, 111 Mich. 175.

¶ 229. A note payable to order and dorsed by the payee, with a guaranty eit of payment or of collection, may be sued the indorsee.—Green v. Burrows, 47 Mi 70; Russell & Co. v. Klink, 53 Mich. 161

¶ 230. An indorsement of guaranty n not be negotiable in order to enable the or inal and first indorsee to sue the maker. indorsement in blank is a complete act, a if made by a party holding title, passes title to the obligation.—Phelps v. Church, Mich. 231.

¶ 231. On the back of a promissory n made by R. was indorsed "I guarant which was signed by W., but not dated. He that it must be presumed to have been c temporaneous with the making of the n and a part thereof, so as to render th joint makers.—Higgins v. Watson, 1 Mi 428.

¶ 232. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 1564, Ho St. § 1590, a guaranty of collection indors on a promissory note payable to bearer m be sued by any subsequent holder in own name, subject to any equities betwe the guarantor and the person to whom t guaranty was made. Said section applies existing as well as to future contracts. Waldron v. Harring, 28 Mich. 493.

¶ 233. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 5775, Ho St. § 7344, which was passed prior to t enactment of Comp. L. 1871, § 1564, How. § 1590, an assignee of the guaranty of a no could sue thereon in his own name, and t only difference between the two sections that the latter dispenses with the necessi of setting out in the declaration those al gations concerning the assignment which a necessary in the case of non-negotiab paper.—Waldron v. Harring, 28 Mich. 49

Provisions as to presentment and demand, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6111 et seq.
Provisions as to presentment of bills of exchange for acceptance, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6184 et seq.

¶ 234. Where a draft is received as conditional payment the right of action upon the debt is suspended until the draft is properly presented for payment and payment refused.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 11 Mich. 501.

¶ 235. Where a party receives negotiable paper from his debtor, with the debtor's indorsement, as collateral security for his demand, and not as agent merely, it is his duty to present the same for payment when due, and take the proper steps to charge the debtor as indorser; and failing to do this he makes the paper his own.—Jennison v. Parker, 7 Mich. 355.

¶ 236. Where a person presenting a bill agrees to present it again no protest can be made without a new demand.—Case v. Burt, 15 Mich. 82.

¶ 237. Orders payable to bearer on demand are not subject to acceptance, and demand can only be made for payment.—Sweet v. Swift, 65 Mich. 90.

¶ 238. Institution of suit upon a certificate of deposit payable to the depositor's order upon its return properly indorsed is a sufficient demand of payment.—Beardsley v. Webber, 104 Mich. 88.

¶ 239. The rights of an indorser to presentation and notice of dishonor cannot be changed because he suffered no apparent damage by reason of failure to do so.—First National Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 240. An indorser of a check may always insist that the conditions requisite to make his undertaking enforceable shall be strictly complied with; namely, presentation for payment and notice of dishonor.—First National Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 241. Where a debtor transferred notes of a third party to his creditor in part payment, indorsing them, accompanying the transfer with a letter asking the creditor to credit him with such notes, and offering to guarantee payment of the same, and the creditor does not notify the debtor of his acceptance of the guaranty, it is the duty of the creditor to present and protest the notes when they become due, notifying the debtor, as indorser, of any default, and of his intention to hold him on the indorsement.—Brown v. Spiegel, 156 Mich. 138.

§ 51. Time to make presentment or demand and effect of delay.

See also ante ¶ 57.
Maturity of instrument and time for payment, see ante § 11.
Post-dated draft purporting to be payable at sight, see ante ¶ 61.
Time in which to accept, see ante § 36.
Time to present checks, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6227.

¶ 242. Promissory notes made after the passage of Laws 1893, Act No. 185, and falling due on Saturday, are presentable for payment and payable on the next secular day or business day succeeding said Saturday, which is Monday, unless such succeeding Monday is a legal holiday, in which case they are payable on Tuesday; and notes maturing on Sunday are payable on Monday also.—Hitchcock v. Hogan, 99 Mich. 124.

¶ 243. The holder of a promissory note who is the owner is under no obligation to an indorser to take steps to enforce payment as soon as it becomes due.—Rogers v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 146 Mich. 639.

¶ 244. Bank drafts issued for negotiable purposes are not required to be forwarded at once for acceptance and payment, and delay for a reasonable time will not discharge an indorser although longer than might be held reasonable in regard to mere private drafts not meant to circulate.—Nutting v. Burked, 48 Mich. 241.

¶ 245. A creditor's failure to present promptly a draft drawn in his favor, and accepted for accommodation only, does not release the debtor where the drawee was never supplied with funds to meet it, and the maker suffered no loss by the neglect; especially if after protest the maker recognized his continued liability for the debt.—Compton v. Blair, 46 Mich. 1.

¶ 246. Where the payee has indorsed and transferred a certificate of deposit with a special request that it be not presented until the three months have expired, and has actually received from the purchaser the interest accrued at the date of the transfer, and the purchaser presented the certificate the day after the time expired, the bank having meanwhile failed, it was held that the payee, in an action against him as indorser by the purchaser, is not relieved from liability on the ground that the presentment for payment was not in due time.—Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191.

§ 52. ——Demand or sight paper and checks.

Maturity of demand or sight paper, see ante § 12.

Demand note as "due" without actual demand, see also Banking ¶ 60.

¶ 247. A demand made on a demand note over 2½ years from its date, was not made within a reasonable time to hold the indorsers, where the parties all resided in the same city so that the bank in question could have presented it at any time and notified the indorsers of nonpayment.—Home Sav. Bank v. Hosie, 119 Mich. 116.

¶ 248. Unless demand notes bearing interest are presented within a reasonable time, indorsers will not be bound.—Home Sav. Bank v. Hosie, 119 Mich. 116.

¶ 249. Demand on a note payable "on demand" must be considered to have been made at the date of an indorsement—made the day before the note would otherwise have outlawed—that the said note "shall not be outlawed."—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 250. A draft payable at sight should be presented for payment within a reasonable time; and no delay is reasonable beyond that which is required in the ordinary course of business without special inconvenience to the holder, or by the special circumstances of the particular case.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 11 Mich. 501; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Gray, 13 Mich. 191.

¶ 251. Evidence was given showing that the delay in making presentment of a draft payable at sight was for the purpose of enabling the creditor to correspond with the debtor as to the funds that should be received in payment. But as neither party could change the character of the bill, which was collectible according to its terms, it was held that the reason assigned was no excuse.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Gray, 13 Mich. 191.

¶ 252. The rule of diligence as to the presentation of checks for payment is not affected, so far as parties are concerned, by customs prevailing in the transaction of business through a clearing-house.—Holmes v. Roe, 62 Mich. 199.

¶ 253. Where the indorsee of a check and the banker on whom it is drawn are in different towns, the check must be forwarded for presentment on the day after it is received, at the latest.—Hamilton v. Wi Salt & Lumber Co., 95 Mich. 436.

¶ 254. The fact that there are no f in the account against which a chec drawn does not relieve the holder presentation and notice of dishonor to indorser, unless it appears that the indo knew it.—First National Bank of Detro Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 255. The indorsee of a check as betw himself and the indorser, undertakes to mand payment within the day following indorsement, and if payment is not mad give due notice of dishonor. This is sole duty, and he does anything else at peril.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. rie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 256. Verdict for plaintiff payee o check held properly directed in an ac against the drawee bank upon a check w was received by plaintiff by mail on Fri sent to their bank in another city on Sa day and presented at drawee bank in same city on Monday morning for payn which was refused though the bank open and doing business, but in the a noon of the same day closed its doors did not again resume business.—Haggert Baldwin, 131 Mich. 187.

¶ 257. The loss on account of the fai of a bank falls on the payee of a check sends it direct to the bank instead of senting it in the regular way where drawer had funds in the bank to pa when drawn.—Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co Fincher, 138 Mich. 666.

¶ 257a. The undertaking of the indorse a check is that, if not paid on presenta within a reasonable time, he will pay it, vided he is properly notified. A reason time for presentation and demand for ment must be admitted to be such w within a day following the indorsemen First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Currie, Mich. 72.

¶ 258. Where parties living in diffe towns are present in one of them, and gives the other a check on a local bank assents to taking it home with him, he th by extends the time within which the re ent would otherwise be bound to presen for payment; but saying that he should h it certified or get a New York draft, if was going to take it home, would not be s assent.—Holmes v. Roe, 62 Mich. 199.

¶ 259. A check for a small sum was gi late in the afternoon at a lumber ca twenty miles from the place where the b was, to a merchant whose place of busi was twenty-seven miles by rail in anot direction, and who had to be there on following day, which was Saturday. Monday he left the check at the local b for collection, but the other bank failed es that day. Held, that the delay in presenting the check for payment was not such as would release the debt for which it was given.—Freiberg v. Cody, 55 Mich. 108.

§ 53. Place and manner of presentment or demand.

Place of payment, see ante § 14.
Identification of payee presenting check, see Banking § 14.
Provisions as to place of presentment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6114.

¶ 260. As against the maker of a promissory note payable at a particular place, the plaintiff is not required to prove presentment or demand of payment at the place specified.—Reeve v. Pack, 6 Mich. 240.

¶ 261. A note dated at a certain city and made payable at "The First National Bank," without designating the location thereof, is payable at the bank of that name at the city where the instrument is dated, and is properly presented there for payment, notwithstanding the fact that the makers live elsewhere.—Finch v. Calkins, 183 Mich. 298.

¶ 262. Forwarding a check for collection to the drawee bank by mail is not proper presentation to charge the drawer.—Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Fincher, 129 Mich. 687.

¶ 263. The fact that a check is forwarded to the drawee bank itself for collection will not prevent recovery from the drawer upon its dishonor if the drawer had no funds in the bank with which to pay it.—Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Fincher, 129 Mich. 687.

§ 54. Notice of nonpayment or dishonor.

Notice of protest, see post § 58.

Notice of dishonor not necessary in certain cases, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6153 et seq.
Dishonor for nonpayment and rights and liabilities thereon, see Comp. L. 1915, § 85 et seq.

¶ 264. Indorsers of negotiable paper who are named as payees in it are liable on it only as indorsers, and are entitled to notice of dishonor.—Stewart v. First Nat. Bank, 40 Mich. 348.

¶ 265. The rule requiring an indorser to be promptly notified of the dishonor of a note is one not of form, but of substance; it is a legal condition of the contract that he shall be notified or discharged, unless where reasonable diligence fails to find him.—Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 393.

¶ 266. Orders which in form are bills of exchange payable to bearer on demand are not subject to acceptance, and a demand can only be made for payment. When payment is refused they ceased to be binding on the drawer as negotiable paper unless he was notified of the dishonor.—Sweet v. Swift, 65 Mich. 90.

¶ 267. An endorser of a negotiable note is entitled to notice of its nonpayment and is not liable in absence of such notice.—Barger v. Farnham, 130 Mich. 487.

¶ 268. Want of notice of the dishonor of a check on account of the failure of the bank is no defense in an action against the drawer where the drawer had notice of the bank's weakness, of his own overdraft and previous dishonor of his paper.—Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Fincher, 138 Mich. 666.

¶ 269. The liability of the indorser of a promissory note depends entirely upon compliance with the provisions of the Negotiable Instrument Act as to notice of dishonor.—First Nat. Bank of Manistee v. Star Watch Case Co., 187 Mich. 224.

¶ 270. It is not sufficient diligence to ascertain the residence of the endorser for the purpose of notifying him of dishonor to inquire of the receiving teller of the bank at which the paper is payable and to make no other inquiries since it cannot be presumed that the receiving teller would know his residence.—Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 393.

§ 55. ——Form and sufficiency.

¶ 271. Notices of dishonor of commercial paper may be given by private holders.—Burkam v. Trowbridge, 9 Mich. 209; Cromer v. Platt, 37 Mich. 132.

¶ 272. A notice of dishonor must contain words directly, or by necessary construction, showing that the note has been presented for payment and payment refused.—Platt v. Drake, 1 D. 296.

¶ 273. The object of the notice is to inform the indorser of the nonpayment of the note by the maker, and that the indorser is liable for the payment of it; and a notice which accomplishes this object is sufficient, although it misdescribes the note in some particulars.—Snow v. Perkins, 2 Mich. 238.

¶ 274. In a notice of dishonor of commercial paper no technical phrases are necessary; but it is only required that the terms used be such as fairly and naturally lead a mind of ordinary intelligence to the idea that the paper has been presented at maturity and dishonored, and that the party notified is looked to for payment.—Burkam v. Trowbridge, 9 Mich. 209.

¶ 275. Notice of dishonor deposited in the postoffice where the person to whom it was directed received his letters was not sufficient if such person resided in the place; the notice must have been personal, or left at the place of abode or business.—Nevius v. Bank of Lansingburgh, 10 Mich. 547.

¶ 276. Service of notice of dishonor of a note by mailing was sufficient before the statute of 1867, if the person did not reside in the same place.—Nevius v. Bank of Lansingburgh, 10 Mich. 547, overruling Newberry v. Trowbridge, 4 Mich. 391.

¶ 277. A letter addressed by the holders of a note to the indorser, describing the note and stating that it was unpaid and that the holders looked to him for payment, is a sufficient notice of dishonor.—Cromer v. Platt, 37 Mich. 132.

¶ 278. One who received at New York in conditional payment a Chicago banker's draft payable to the order of Michigan debtors of his, and indorsed and mailed by them to him, and who returned it to the debtors five days after its dishonor, the protest and notices having been sent in due time, was held to have acted properly with the paper and not to be affected in his rights by the fact of the banker's failure while the dishonored draft was retained in New York.—Stringfield v. Vivian, 63 Mich. 681.

¶ 279. Where an indorser of a note does not reside or have a place of business in the place where the note is payable, but resides, as is known to the indorsee, and receives his mail more than eight miles distant therefrom, a notice of nonpayment deposited in the postoffice where the note is payable and directed to the indorser at the same place is not sufficient under How. St. § 1586, which permits mailing to the office where he resides or is reputed to reside in certain cases.—Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Cade, 73 Mich. 449.

§ 56. ——Effect of failure to give.

¶ 280. A boom company ran logs for B. under a contract. B. sold the logs, and the purchaser agreed to pay for running them, of which fact the company was informed. They drew on B., however, for part payment, and he returned the draft with directions to draw on the purchaser, which they did, making the draft of the same date and amount, and payable at the same time. The purchaser accepted the draft, which fell due and was protested without notice to B., who did not know of its nonpayment until some time afterwards when the purchaser had failed, and he was for the first time called on to pay it. Held, that the accepted draft must be regarded as having been receive conditional payment, and that the com made it their own by failing to notify its dishonor.—Blanchard v. Tittabaw Boom Co., 40 Mich. 506.

IX. PROTEST AND NOTICE THERE

§ 57. In general; nature, necessity and ficiency of protest.

Rights of party paying upon insufficient test, see also ante ¶ 82.
Agreement to make second presentmer precluding protest prior thereto, see ¶ 236.
Waiver of protest, see post § 59.
Evidence as to protest, see post § 120.
Burden of proof as to protest, see post §
Provisions as to protest, see Comp. L. § 6193 et seq.
Provisions as to acceptance and paymen honor, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6202-62
Protest of bill accepted for honor, see C L. 1915, § 6211.

¶ 281. A protest is a formal instru made by a notary public, alleging the presentment and dishonor of a bill, declaring that the notary protests the for nonpayment.—Platt v. Drake, 1 D. 2

¶ 282. A creditor who receives as c eral security the negotiable paper of a person, indorsed by his debtor, makes paper his own, and releases his debtor' dorsement if he neglects to protest it for payment. And this applies to drafts promissory notes alike.—Whitten v. Wi 34 Mich. 92.

§ 58. Notice of protest and service there

Notice of nonpayment or dishonor, see § 54.
Waiver of notice, see post § 59.

¶ 283. A notice of protest must stat time, place, and manner of presentment mand and dishonor, the person by v made and to whom presentment was m and if the paper is payable at a bank protest must state a demand made the Union Nat. Bank v. Williams Milling 117 Mich. 535.

¶ 284. A mistake in describing a pr sory note in a notice of protest—as v the note was for $200, but was describ the notice as for $175—does not necess vitiate the notice; the question in such being whether the indorser was misled b notice. And where the note was payab another state, under whose statutes not public were authorized to demand pay of promissory notes and to protest ther nonpayment, it was held that a simila tice was sufficient.—Snow v. Perkins, 2 238.

¶ 285. Notice to the indorser of a fo bill that the bill, describing it, has protested for nonpayment, and that holder looks to him for payment, is a sufficient notice of dishonor; the term payment, when thus used, implying that payment had been demanded and refused.—Spies v. Newberry, 2 D. 425.

¶ 286. A notice to a party, dated on the day of the maturity of an inland bill, and stating that the bill was on that day, by the notary who signed the notice, protested for nonpayment, after due demand and refusal, and that the holder looked to the party notified for payment, is sufficient.—Burkam v. Trowbridge, 9 Mich. 209, apparently overruling Platt v. Drake, 1 D. 296, and Newberry v. Trowbridge, 4 Mich. 391.

¶ 287. It is not necessary that a copy of the protest of a bill should accompany the notice of its dishonor.—Atwater v. Streets, 1 D. 455.

¶ 288. Street letter-boxes being a legal part of the postoffice system, depositing a letter in one of them is equivalent, for the purposes of protest, to a delivery or mailing in the postoffice.—Wood v. Callaghan, 61 Mich. 402.

¶ 289. In protesting a note the notary need not take any notice of the fact that the residence of the maker is upon the note, or make inquiry as to the residence of any of the indorsers except the last.—Wood v. Callaghan, 61 Mich. 402.

¶ 290. One who gives notice of protest must use such means as are reasonably calculated to find out the indorser's residence. —Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 393.

¶ 291. A notary who, in protesting a note discounted by a bank, inquires only of the receiving teller as to the indorser's residence, is not, if such inquiries do not develop satisfactory information, sufficiently diligent to excuse further search and to charge the indorser upon notice mailed to his last named place of residence.—Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 393.

X. WAIVER OF PRESENTMENT, DEMAND, NOTICE OR PROTEST; NEW PROMISES.

§ 59. In general.

See also post ¶ 385.

Provisions as to waiver of notice of dishonor and protest, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6150 et seq.

¶ 292. An offer by the indorser of a note to pay the sum due thereon in depreciated bank-bills, without explanation, can be regarded only as an offer to compromise, and cannot operate as a waiver of notice, or as an unqualified acknowledgment of his liability on the note.—Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 263.

¶ 293. Where there is no direct evidence of notice to the indorser a subsequent recognition of liability by him is presumptive evidence, in the nature of an implied admission, that notice has been given. But where the plaintiff attempts to prove due notice, and only succeeds in proving one which is defective in form or mode of service, this excludes the presumption of a proper and sufficient notice; and a part payment by the indorser afterwards will not operate as an unqualified acknowledgment of liability, unless it be shown that he knew at the time that the notice was defective.—Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 263.

¶ 294. Failure to demand payment and give notice is waived by a subsequent promise by the indorser to pay the note, when he makes such promise with full knowledge of the facts.—State Bank of St. Johns v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

¶ 295. The doctrine, that an indorser of a check may waive the laches or lack of formalities on the part of the holder which are strictly necessary to charge him, cannot be invoked where the maker and indorser have been discharged by payment of the obligation upon which they were liable.—First National Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 296. Where an indorser agrees to pay a note after he learns the holder has not presented it at maturity for payment, he waives his defense arising from such failure.—Bessenger v. Wenzel, 161 Mich. 61.

¶ 297. Defendants, directors of a corporation, indorsed by way of accommodation a note given by the corporation. Shortly before the maturity of the note they knew the corporation had no funds to meet it, and asked the plaintiff holder for time. Held, that they thereby, under the Negotiable Instruments Act, waived presentment, protest, and notice of nonpayment.—Bessenger v. Wenzel, 161 Mich. 61.

¶ 298. In an action for the amount of a promissory note lost through the defendant's negligence, by an indorser who had to pay it, the plaintiff cannot urge that the presentment of the copy of the note was insufficient to obligate the maker because unaccompanied by tender of a bond of indemnity where in fact it was sufficient to charge him with the liability of an indorser; the question of its sufficiency to charge him was one to be determined when he was called upon to pay it, and by paying it he conclusively admitted its sufficiency.—Rogers v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 146 Mich. 639.

§ 60. New promises and liabilities thereon.

See also ante ¶¶ 294, 296.

¶ 299. Where an indorser, with full knowledge that he has been discharged from liability by the failure to duly notify him of the dishonor of the note, states to the holder that he expects to have to pay it, but asks him to try and collect it of the maker, he recognizes his liability, and waives his defense on that ground.—Parsons v. Dickinson, 23 Mich. 56.

¶ 300. The mere fact of part payment of the note by the indorser in depreciated bank-bills will not amount to an unconditional acknowledgment of his liability to pay the whole.—Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 263.

¶ 301. Where the drawer of a check has been discharged by the holder's laches, a new promise must, in order to render the drawer liable, be made, with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances.—Hamilton v. Winona Salt & Lumber Co., 95 Mich. 436.

Provisions as to accommodation parties, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6070.

¶ 302. Defendant's son gave a bond to a medical company binding himself to pay for goods furnished to him, and plaintiffs went on his bond. The son defaulted. Plaintiffs went with the agent of the medical company to the defendant and asked him to settle the deficit. Defendant gave his note to the order of the agent of the medical company and plaintiffs indorsed said note as sureties. The agent then indorsed the note and turned it over to the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs borrowed money of a bank on their own note putting up said defendant's note as collateral and paid to the agent the amount of the deficit. In a suit by plaintiffs against defendant on the note, held, the defendant was merely an accommodation maker for plaintiffs' benefit and they were not entitled to recover.—Lamberson v. Love, 165 Mich. 460.

¶ 303. The owner of the assets of a solved corporation gave to a bank a cha mortgage on said assets to secure his n Later the reorganized corporation purcha the assets, and substituted its own note place of the former one, the chattel mortg being released and the former note retur to the maker. In a suit against the corpo tion on its note, the contention is made t the corporation signed the note as an commodation maker, and is therefore not ble, the act being ultra vires. Held, h ever, that inasmuch as the corporation, making the note, was enabled to take assets free from the mortgage, it was an accommodation maker.—Citizens' S Bank v. Globe Brass Works, 155 Mich. 3

¶ 304. The fact that an accommodat maker of a note has written his name ac the back instead of signing on the face the note tends, though not conclusively, indicate that he did not intend to sign joint maker, but only as surety, and enough to put the original creditor on quiry.—Moynahan v. Hanaford, 42 Mich.

¶ 305. An accommodation note given the maker with knowledge that it is to used by the accommodated party in reduc his overdraft with a bank, is based o sufficient consideration to bind the acc modation maker.—Irwin v. Wolcott, Mich. 92.

¶ 306. Where merely to accommodate payee and not at the request of the princ maker one signs a note on the payee's pr ise that he will not be held liable, ther no consideration for his undertaking.— lenkamp v. Groff, 71 Mich. 675.

¶ 307. An accommodation maker o promissory note is not liable on the not the hands of assignees of the wife of principal debtor and ostensible indo where the assignees having acted as principal's attorneys have full knowle that the consideration which satisfied bona fide holders of the note was furnis by the principal debtor, and the note tr ferred to his wife at his direction, as note must be treated as paid.—Baker Union Trust Co., 129 Mich. 581.

¶ 308. The obligation of a surety (acc modation maker) upon a note was not af ed by such surety having been informed he "took no risk" in signing as surety cause one of the makers owned property a certain value, where, in the action on note, there was no testimony showing the maker was not worth the amount so resented.—First Nat. Bank v. Johnson, Mich. 700.

¶ 309. A joint maker, signing for acc modation merely, is released by an exten granted without his knowledge or acqu cence.—Barron v. Cady, 40 Mich. 259.

¶ 310. A surety (accommodation maker) on a renewal note, who on signing the original had been informed by the cashier of plaintiff bank that he "took no risk" as one of the makers was worth a certain sum, was not released by the failure of such cashier to inform him, at the time of renewal, that such payor had, as defendant claimed, lost her property; where the notice attached to defendant's plea set forth no theory of fraud.—First Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 133 Mich. 700.

§ 62. Accommodation acceptance.

See also ante ¶ 181.

Acceptance in general, see ante § 35.

¶ 311. An accommodation acceptance stands upon its legal form if the drawee has not had notice that it is only for accommodation; but if he has had notice he cannot treat the maker as surety and the acceptor as principal except for the purpose of choosing his form of action on the acceptance. The acceptor must be treated like any other surety so far as relates to prejudicing his rights.—Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358.

¶ 312. Where the paper drawn upon a bank and accepted for accommodation has been taken up it cannot be sued as belonging to the bank, or sued at all if known to be accepted for accommodation.—Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358.

§ 63. Accommodation indorsers.

Indorsements in general, see ante § 42.

¶ 313. The liability of those who, in order to facilitate a transfer of a note which has previously been in circulation, indorse said note, is the same as if they had backed the note at its inception.—Michigan State Bank v. Trowbridge, 92 Mich. 217.

¶ 314. One who has signed a note after it has become operative against the maker, but in order to induce others to take it, must be held as a joint debtor.—Robbins v. Brooks, 42 Mich. 62.

¶ 315. Indorsement by the payee at the time the note is signed, in order to enable the maker to negotiate it, does not enlarge the indorser's liability or create any new relation between him and third parties who may afterwards become holders.—Smith v. Long, 40 Mich. 555.

¶ 316. An accommodation indorser of a defaulting employee's notes given to his employer was discharged by employee's breach of agreement to keep employee in his service until stipulated drawback from salary should pay the notes.—Maclean v. Fitzsimons, 80 Mich. 336.

¶ 317. The second indorser who has paid the note may recover from the first, though both are accommodation indorsers.—McGurk v. Huggett, 56 Mich. 187.

¶ 318. Payment and acceptance of interest on a note for a time running beyond the maturity of it will not alone effect an extension such as will discharge an accommodation indorser.—Morse v. Blanchard, 117 Mich. 37.

§ 64. Payment by accommodation signer.

Payment and discharge of instrument in general, see ante § 24.

¶ 319. The payment of accommodation paper by the party accommodated discharges the instrument.—Lamberson v. Love, 165 Mich. 460.

Provisions as to forged instruments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6064.

Effect of alteration of instrument, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6165, 6166.

¶ 321. An indorser's consent to the alteration of paper need not be in writing.—Stewart v. First Nat. Bank, 40 Mich. 348.

¶ 322. The act of an indorsee of negotiable paper in changing a special indorsement to himself so that it shall be in blank cannot alter the title by which he holds the paper.—Minor v. Bewick, 55 Mich. 491.

XIII. BONA FIDE HOLDERS AND LIABILITY TO THEM.

A. WHO ARE BONA FIDE HOLDERS.

§ 66. In general.

Rights of purchasers with notice, see also ante § 20.
Defenses available to bona fide holders, see post § 79.
Burden of proof as to bona fide holding, see post § 110.
Evidence as to bona fide holding, see post §§ 119, 126.

Pleading fraud in negotiating paper to bona fide taker, see Fraud § 90.
Who regarded as bona fide taker of municipal or public bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 13 et seq.
Provisions as to holders in due course and for value, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6093 et seq.

¶ 323. In determining whether a purchaser is entitled to be considered a bona fide holder, it is his bona fides, and not that of the payee, that is in question.—Helmer v. Krolick, 36 Mich. 371.

¶ 324. The fact that the purchaser of negotiable paper, resident in a distant part of the state, employs for its collection a person who is also agent for the payee, does not clearly indicate want of good faith in the purchase.—Helmer v. Krolick, 36 Mich. 371.

¶ 325. A purchaser of notes and a mortgage, who makes no showing beyond the recital in the assignment to him of the payment of value for them, or that they were actually transferred and delivered to him before maturity, or that they were ever indorsed to him at all, is in no position to insist upon the rights of a bona fide holder of negotiable paper.—Hull v. Swarthout, 29 Mich. 249.

¶ 326. Where a firm have received, as collateral to advances, notes indorsed in blank, from an agent having authority to sell the same, and such agent afterwards instructs them to sell, another firm, one of whom is a member of both firms, may become bona fide purchasers of the paper and entitled to protection as such; there is nothing in such a connection between two firms that would necessarily preclude a sale in good faith from one to the other, where neither had notice of anything wrong.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

¶ 327. A bank which discounts a note for a customer, crediting the proceeds thereof to his account, is not a bona fide purchaser for value, unless such credit was drawn upon before the maturity of the note, and before notice of facts invalidating it in the hands of the payee.—Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Blue, 110 Mich. 31.

§ 67. Original parties as bona fide holders.

Rights and liabilities of primary parties, see ante § 19.

¶ 328. The payees of a note given to a certain person as their agent and by him transmitted to them cannot claim to hold it as merely bona fide purchasers.—Rickle v. Dow, 39 Mich. 91.

¶ 329. Where the cashier of a bank is one of the makers and payees of a note, the bank cannot take it as a bona fide holder without notice.—Tilden v. Barnard, 43 Mich. 376.

¶ 330. One cannot be a bona fide holder without notice of an obligation made to him directly and upon negotiations carried on with him personally.—Sweet v. Swift, 65 Mich. 90.

¶ 331. A payee of a note cannot avoid the equities in favor of the maker of the note by selling it to a bona fide purchaser and subsequently purchasing it through a third person who is in fact his agent.—Battersbee v. Calkins, 128 Mich. 569.

§ 68. Holders subsequent to bona fide purchaser.

¶ 332. The general rule that a purchaser of negotiable paper from a bona fide holder takes it with all the rights of such holder, whether he has notice of any infirmity as between the original parties or not, is subject to the exception that when the payee becomes such purchaser he takes it subject to all equities and defenses originally existing against it.—Kost v. Bender, 25 Mich. 515.

¶ 333. A transferee from a bona fide holder is entitled to recover on a promissory note given in a partnership name, even though before taking it he had notice that it was given by one of the partners, without authority, for his individual debt.—Wood v. Starling, 48 Mich. 592.

¶ 334. One who holds negotiable paper by an unimpeachable title may transfer a like title to any other person, and the latter's knowledge of original defects or equities will not affect it in his hands.—Shaw v. Clark, 49 Mich. 384.

§ 69. Notice of equities and defenses.

See also ante ¶ 217.

Notice to agent as affecting principal in general, see Agency, II, E.

¶ 335. One who pays value is to be regarded as a rightful holder, unless shown to have had such knowledge or notice of the defects of title as to make him guilty of bad faith.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249.

¶ 336. Purchasers of negotiable paper need not make inquiries not required by good faith as to possible defenses of which they have no notice from something appearing on the face of the paper or from facts communicated to them at the time.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

¶ 337. The fact that the words "City Savings Bank. Collection No. 4027, Detroit, Mich.," are stamped upon the face of a draft sent by such bank to another with which it had a running account, for "collection and credit," does not give notice to the collecting bank that the savings bank was not the owner of the draft, but an agent for collection merely.—Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 139 Mich. 392.

¶ 338. In a bill to cancel notes, where complainant claimed that the notes were forwarded to the corporation defendant upon the representation that the bicycles for which they were given were completed and set apart as the property of complainant, when in fact they had not been so set apart, and that it was thereafter agreed that the notes were to be surrendered, but that within a few days a mortgage was given by the corporation upon all its property to secure its creditors, and where the notes had been purchased by a defendant through the party who was trustee in the mortgage and also was cashier of the bank which discounted the notes and also a stockholder in defendant corporation, but who had no knowledge of anything to invalidate the notes, or put him on inquiry, the bank and such purchaser were bona fide holders, notwithstanding his relationships.—World Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton-Kenwood Cycle Co., 123 Mich. 620.

§ 70. ——Regularity and completeness of instrument on its face.

See also post ¶ 392.

Signature of accommodation maker on back of note, see ante ¶ 304.

Matters on face of paper putting purchaser upon inquiry, see post § 70.

¶ 339. The want of a stamp upon a note is not such a circumstance of suspicion as to put an indorsee upon inquiry in taking the note.—Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415.

¶ 340. The words "secured by mortgage" on a promissory note form no part of it and do not limit or impair its value; nor do they notify third persons of the contents of the mortgage, or that it contains any clause inconsistent with the note, nor put them on inquiry. If it be the intent to limit the effect of the note by the terms or conditions of the mortgage securing its payment, language appropriate to express the purpose must be employed.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

¶ 341. A promissory note in the usual form, with nothing written upon it indicating that it was taken in an illegal transaction, is "fair upon its face."—Chapman v. Remington, 80 Mich. 552.

¶ 342. A promissory note indorsed in blank by a partnership to whom it was made payable was held to be sufficient notice to the bank discounting it that it was an accommodation indorsement where the note was in the possession of the maker after the indorsement.—Mechanics' Bank of Detroit v. Barnes, 86 Mich. 632.

¶ 343. A promissory note, having nothing on its face to cast suspicion thereon, is valid in the hands of a holder for value in the absence of evidence showing mala fides on his part, and the fact that circumstances are suspicious or sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry does not change the rule.—Glines v. State Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 638.

¶ 344. The rule is well settled that when there is nothing upon the face of commercial paper to cast suspicion upon its character it can only be impeached, in the hands of a holder for value, by evidence that he took it under circumstances which rendered him guilty of bad faith; in determining which question, the circumstances surrounding each particular transaction may be taken into consideration.—Goodrich v. McDonald, 77 Mich. 486.

¶ 345. The rule is that when there is nothing upon the face of a note to cast suspicion upon its character it can only be impeached, in the hands of a holder for value, by evidence that he took it under circumstances which rendered him guilty of bad faith. The circumstances surrounding each particular transaction, however, may be taken into consideration in determining this question, and frequently direct and positive proof may not be obtainable to show such bad faith.—Goodrich v. McDonald, 77 Mich. 486.

¶ 346. One of several joint-makers of a promissory note, to whom the payee has assigned it, cannot by indorsing it before maturity to a third party convey any right except to bring suit for contribution; the appearance of his name as one of the makers being sufficient notice to his indorsees.—Stevens v. Hannan, 86 Mich. 305.

§ 71. ——Extraneous suspicious circumstances.

¶ 347. Neither suspicions nor gross negligence on the part of a purchaser of a promissory note will defeat his right to recover thereon unless such suspicions amount to bad faith.—Hakes v. Thayer, 165 Mich. 476.

¶ 348. The general rule that one cannot be considered a bona fide purchaser, who had notice of facts which would put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry, but failed to take care of his own interests, is not applied to commercial paper.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 349. The modern rule is that circumstances which ought to excite the suspicion of a prudent, careful person are not sufficient to destroy the bona fides of the holder of commercial paper, unless the circumstances or suspicions are so cogent and obvious that to remain passive would amount to bad faith.—Custard v. Hodges, 155 Mich. 361.

¶ 350. Actual mala fides must be shown to the satisfaction of the jury to deprive a holder for value of notes of the character of a bona fide holder, and negligence in not inquiring into facts which ought to have put him on inquiry, is not sufficient.—Armstrong v. Stearns, 156 Mich. 597.

¶ 351. It cannot render a purchase of negotiable paper suspicious that the payee has an interest in getting it off his hands; this fact would not necessarily be known to the purchaser, or influence in any manner his action; and in determining whether a purchaser is entitled to be considered a bona fide holder, it is his bona fides, and not that of the payee, that is in question.—Helmer v. Krolick, 36 Mich. 371.

¶ 352. Notice of facts which would be sufficient to arouse the suspicion of an ordinarily prudent man is not enough to preclude good faith in a purchase. It is a matter of mala fides.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 353. The failure of the holder of township drain orders, on exchanging them with the township treasurer for a note payable to the latter individual, to make inquiry as to how the treasurer obtained the note (which was in fact taken by the treasurer on the sale of property for taxes), is no evidence of bad faith.—Chapman v. Remington, 80 Mich. 552.

¶ 354. Mere knowledge of circumstances that would excite suspicion in the mind of a prudent man on becoming the transferee of negotiable paper is not enough to affect the paper in his hands with pre-existing equities; he must have had actual notice of such equities, or, at least, knowledge of such facts and circumstances as would have made his taking the paper with the intention of enforcing it an act of bad faith.—New Y Iron Mine v. Citizens' Bank, 44 Mich. 34

¶ 355. Parties discounting paper drawn an agent upon his principal are bound act in the light of all facts within t knowledge bearing on his authority, cannot disregard any fact which might a prudent man to suspect that the agen acting in fraud of his principal.—New Y Iron Mine v. Citizens' Bank, 44 Mich. 34

¶ 356. Knowledge on the part of a chaser of negotiable paper that the pa thereof is engaged in the sale of liquors not put such purchaser upon inquiry to certain whether the consideration for paper was the unlawful sale of liquor.— tomley v. Goldsmith, 36 Mich. 27.

¶ 357. Where the payee obtained a c by fraud his transferee, who had knowle that the former was doing business in illegal manner, held not a bona fide ho for value within the meaning of § 54 of Negotiable Instruments Act. (Act No. Pub. Acts 1905, § 2725, How. St., 2nd —People's State Bank v. Miller, 185 M 565.

¶ 358. One who, in the usual course business, surrenders a joint promissory for an indorsed note of one of the mak is not chargeable with bad faith as aga the accommodation indorser of the last tioned note, whose signature was obta by fraud, merely because he knows that maker of such note is insolvent, and that other makers of the prior note, who amply responsible, have furnished him funds with which to pay it; nor can an toppel be predicated upon his failure to close to the indorser that others were li on the former note, or to advise him the note is a renewal note, since he has right to assume that the maker has honestly with the indorser, and obtained signature fairly, and without false repre tations, or the concealment of any which the law required him to disclo Cristy v. Campau, 107 Mich. 172.

¶ 359. Plaintiff purchased a "Bohe oat note" before maturity, and at a rea able discount. He testified that at the of the purchase he had heard that the p was dealing in Bohemian oats, but had n bought any himself; that he knew not of the scheme or plan of their sale, nor the note was given for. There was no dence that such scheme or plan of sale become public at time of such purc Held, that plaintiff was entitled to re if the jury believed his testimony.—Hel Douglass, 81 Mich. 442.

§ 72. ——Knowledge of original consider or of fraud.

Recitals as to consideration or terms of tract, see ante § 8.

Fraud, duress or mistake as defense between the primary parties, see ante § 21.
Want or failure of consideration as defense between the primary parties, see ante § 22.
Fraud, duress or mistake as defense against bona fide holders, see post § 82.
Want or failure of consideration as defense against bona fide holders, see post § 87.

¶ 360. One who has been privy to and a participant in the fraudulent procurement of an indorsement has notice of the fraud, and cannot become a bona fide purchaser of the paper indorsed so as to be entitled to recover upon the contract of indorsement.—Lenheim v. Fay, 27 Mich. 70.

¶ 361. That the purchaser of a promissory note for value before maturity had reason to believe, and did believe, that the consideration was void as against public policy, will not prevent a recovery by him, unless his carelessness in not making inquiry was so gross as to imply bad faith.—Davis v. Seeley, 71 Mich. 209.

¶ 362. A note cannot be defeated in the hands of a bona fide holder for value on the ground that he had notice that it was given for a patent right.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249; Borden v. Clark, 26 Mich. 410; Cranson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 309.

¶ 363. The creditor of one copartner cannot occupy the position of an innocent purchaser of the firm's commercial paper, for he knows that the consideration is the individual debt of such partner, and that the firm receives no consideration for its promise.—Towle v. Dunham, 76 Mich. 251.

¶ 364. Where, in a suit upon a Bohemian oat note purchased by a firm composed of five members, only two of the partners were shown to have taken any part in such purchase, or to have known anything about it until after it was made, the presumption is that the remaining members were ignorant of the consideration of the note.—Ward v. Doane, 77 Mich. 328.

¶ 365. The plaintiff cannot recover on a promissory note given as a substitute for a note which was originally void as being fraudulent and without consideration where he is not a bona fide holder, but knew at the time he purchased the note what the note was given for.—Hunt v. Rumsey, 83 Mich. 136.

¶ 366. A substitute note given for an original is open to the same defenses as the original in the hands of parties who were aware of the original transaction.—Hunt v. Rumsey, 83 Mich. 136.

¶ 367. A failure of the consideration in whole or in part after a bona fide transfer does not affect the character of the purchaser although he had full knowledge of the original consideration for which the note was given.—Hakes v. Thayer, 165 Mich. 476.

¶ 368. It is not a good ground of defense against a bona fide holder for value of a promissory note that he was informed that the same was made in consideration of an executory contract, unless he was informed of its breach.—Hakes v. Thayer, 165 Mich. 476.

§ 73. ——Notice or knowledge of collateral agreements, claims or securities.

Effect upon instrument of accompanying mortgages, papers or agreements, see ante § 18.

¶ 369. A promissory note given for the purchase price of "Bohemian oats" and a contemporaneous agreement on separate papers binding the payee to sell for the maker a larger number of bushels at the same price per bushel before the note should be paid, constitute but one transaction and one who purchases the note before its maturity, but with knowledge of the agreement, takes the note subject to any equities in the maker's favor growing out of the contract.—Sutton v. Beckwith, 68 Mich. 303; McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454; Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389.

¶ 370. Where a purchaser for value and before maturity of a note valid upon its face, he having knowledge of a collateral agreement warranting the mare for which the note was given to be with foal, but being ignorant of the breach of such agreement, such purchase is a bona fide holder, against whom such breach is no defense.—Miller v Ottaway, 81 Mich. 196.

¶ 371. Where a vendor of a stallion warrants him to be a reasonably sure foal getter and agrees to substitute another horse if he proves to be otherwise, the transferee of the notes given in payment is not precluded from recovery thereon by the fact that he knew of such warranty, where there is no evidence of a breach of said warranty prior to the transfer of the notes.—Hakes v. Thayer, 165 Mich. 476.

¶ 372. The assignees of a mortgage given to indemnify and secure a surety are not bona fide purchasers as against the creditor's right of subrogation where the assignees have notice of his claim.—Albion State Bank v. Knickerbocker, 125 Mich. 311.

¶ 373. The purchaser of notes may have knowledge of a collateral agreement, but is not obliged to inquire whether the seller has performed his agreement or will be able to perform it.—Hakes v. Thayer, 165 Mich. 476.

§ 74. ——Authority or power of person executing or transferring the instrument.

Rights of bona fide taker of paper of partnership association, see post § 84.

Notice of limitations on authority or title of agent, see Agency §§ 23-25.
Receiver of insolvent corporate holder as holder subject to same equities, see Corporations § 241.

¶ 374. The bona fide transferee of negotiable paper issued by a corporation having power to issue negotiable paper may presume that it was regularly issued under authority.—Genesee County Sav. Bank v. Michigan Barge Co., 52 Mich. 438.

¶ 375. Corporate notes, given to take up individual obligations of members of the corporation, are not given in the regular course of business, and are presumptively ultra vires; and no officer can give them without special authority to do so; and this must be expressly and affirmatively shown to entitle one who takes such notes to the protection of a bona fide holder.—McLellan v. Detroit File Works, 56 Mich. 579; Merchants' Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Detroit Knitting & Corset Works, 68 Mich. 620.

¶ 376. A purchaser of paper assets formerly owned by a corporation and indorsed by the proper officer thereof may assume that the indorsement was duly authorized, and is not bound to search the corporation books for such authority before completing his purchase.—Walker v. Detroit Transit R. Co., 47 Mich. 338.

¶ 377. Where negotiable paper purports to be secured by a mortgage to a stranger and is put into an agent's hands to sell, no buyer is bound to suppose that the seller came into possession wrongfully and has no right to sell; nor is he put on inquiry.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

¶ 378. The fact that an agent makes negotiable paper in his principal's name, payable to himself, calls for special caution in one taking it.—New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank of Negaunee, 39 Mich. 644.

¶ 379. A debtor gave his creditor the notes of a third party, which the creditor discounted on his own indorsement, but had to take up when they fell due. The debtor then gave him other notes made by the same person, but with the name of a firm to which the maker belonged written across the back. Held, that they must be supposed to have had the previous debt in view, and that the creditor, therefore, had notice that the firm name was a mere accommodation, and could not recover on the note against another partner without whose knowledge or consent it was used.—Moynahan v. Hanaford, 42 Mich. 329.

¶ 380. Where a certified check deposited with a village as a guaranty of good faith in proceedings to secure a gas franchise is indorsed by the village clerk, the indorsee cannot be regarded as the holder in good faith, since the village clerk has no general power to transfer checks payable to the lage, but the treasurer of the village is proper custodian of its moneys and eviden of value.—Griggs v. Village of Red Jac 171 Mich. 142.

¶ 380a. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 6083, viding that debts contracted or liabilities curred by a limited partnership associat for an amount exceeding $500 must be writing, a transfer of a promissory note the indorsement of the association to the running account; no item of which ceeds $500, constitutes the indorsee a b fide purchaser even though he might not able to hold the association liable as dorser.—Shaw, Kendall & Co. v. Brown, Mich. 573.

§ 75. Taking in due and ordinary course.
Negotiation and transfer of paper, see a V, VII.
What constitutes taking municipal bonds "due course," see Municipal Bonds ¶

¶ 381. The indorsement "without course" by the vendor of a promissory n held as not tending to show that his ven was not a bona fide purchaser.—Borden Clark, 26 Mich. 410.

¶ 382. One who takes under an indo ment by the payee transferring only "right, title and interest" in the note is a bona fide holder without notice of defen —Aniba v. Yeomans, 39 Mich. 171.

¶ 383. The rule that a bona fide holder negotiable paper is not affected by p equities of which he has no notice does apply if he receives the paper from the o inal payee by assignment or sale instead indorsement; he thus obtains no title perior to that of the payee, in whose na only he can sue, and the maker is theref not precluded from asserting equities t would have been valid as against the pay —Spinning v. Sullivan, 48 Mich. 5.

¶ 384. Sections 27 and 29 of Act No. Pub. Acts 1905, changed the rule thereto prevailing in this state, and operated so to make anyone who has taken a negotia instrument as security for a pre-existing d a holder in due course to the extent of amount of the debt.—Graham v. Smith, Mich. 65.

¶ 385. A guaranty of payment of a n waiving protest, notice and demand, is equ alent to an indorsement within the meani of the law merchant, and operates as a tra fer in due course.—First Nat. Bank of rand v. Shaw, 157 Mich. 192.

¶ 386. In "ordinary or usual course business" means a transfer of a negotia instrument according to the usages and c toms of commercial transactions.—Van Sly v. Rooks, 181 Mich. 88.

§ 76. ——Pledgee as bona fide purchaser.

General law as to pledges, see Pledges.

¶ 387. One who in good faith receives a third person's unmatured promissory notes as collateral, parting with value for them, is entitled to recover upon them.—Crump v. Berdan, 97 Mich. 293.

§ 77. Taking before maturity or dishonor.

See also ante ¶ 55.

Maturity of instrument and time for payment, see ante § 11.

¶ 388. One cannot become a bona fide purchaser of a certificate of deposit unless he takes it within a reasonably short period.—Tripp v. Curtenius, 86 Mich. 494.

¶ 389. One in whose hands a debt, consisting of two notes, is subject to an equity, cannot transfer the whole debt as one demand at a time when one note is past due, except subject to this equity to the extent of the amount remaining unpaid on the matured note.—Hull v. Swarthout, 29 Mich. 249.

¶ 390. The delivery of a past-due negotiable note indorsed in blank, but delivered for a special purpose, does not estop the true owner from claiming title as against one to whom the paper has been fraudulently transferred, but the rule is different if the assignment or indorsement is made with the intention that it shall be negotiated.—Township of Washington v. First National Bank of Huntington, 147 Mich. 571.

¶ 391. A note transferred after maturity is subject to all defenses against the payee.—Brown v. Smedley, 136 Mich. 65.

¶ 392. A purchaser of a mutilated and past due note (name of a comaker cut off) is put on notice so that he cannot claim that the comaker of the note is estopped from treating its security as an existing lien.—Corbitt v. Brong, 44 Mich. 150.

¶ 393. When one buys a past-due promissory note, and there is a dispute whether his vendor had any title or right to sell it, the motives of the purchaser in buying are unimportant. Whether these are good or bad he can get no title unless his vendor had a right to sell.—Church v. Clapp, 47 Mich. 257.

¶ 394. The purchaser of past-due paper is bound by any equities which bind the original holder; and as between such purchaser and an indorser the latter can show the consideration and circumstances of the indorsement; as, e. g., that the indorser indorsed only for accommodation, and therefore was nothing more than a surety.—Simons v. Morris, 53 Mich. 155.

¶ 395. Negotiability does not cease when paper matures, but it is only subject to such equities as exist against the paper at the date when it is negotiated, and the equities which affect the indorsee are only such as attach to the note itself and do not include collateral matters.—Carpenter v. Greenop, 74 Mich. 664.

¶ 396. A due-bill payable to A. one day after date was assigned by A. to B. on the day of its date as collateral security for a loan by B. to A. not evidenced by writing, and ten days afterwards A. gave his note payable with ten per cent interest for the loan, permitting B. to keep the due-bill as security for the note. Held, that B. was not an innocent purchaser of the due-bill before maturity, and took it subject to any defenses existing between the maker and A.—City Bank of Dowagiac v. Dill, 84 Mich. 549.

¶ 397. It seems that the lapse of thirty-one days from the date of a certificate of deposit is not enough to raise the presumption that it is dishonored paper, even though such paper be due at its date.—Birch v. Fisher, 51 Mich. 86.

¶ 398. The dishonor of one of several notes secured by a mortgage puts a subsequent purchaser of the others notes upon inquiry, and he takes them subject to all the equities.—Lockwood v. Noble, 113 Mich. 418.

¶ 399. Where a plaintiff sells an automobile, takes a certificate of deposit on a bank from a purchaser in payment, and keeps control of the machine until he learns from the bank that the certificate is not good, he cannot recover against the bank on the certificate as being a purchaser for value in good faith.—American Trust & Savings Bank v. Moore, 161 Mich. 436.

§ 78. Parting with value.

Taker of municipal bonds in payment of antecedent debt as taker for value, see Municipal Bonds ¶ 70.

What constitutes value, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6066 et seq.

¶ 400. A pre-existing debt constitutes a valuable consideration, and a holder of a bill or note founded upon such consideration is unaffected with the equities between the antecedent parties of which he had no notice.—Outhwite v. Porter, 13 Mich. 533; Bostwick v. Dodge, 1 D. 413, overruling Ingerson v. Starkweather, W. 346.

¶ 401. A bank is not, as to an accommodation acceptor, a bona fide holder of a draft discounted prior to acceptance, unless, at the time the acceptance was secured, it parted with value in reliance thereon; and evidence that the proceeds were paid or credited to the drawer conditionally only is insufficient to establish that fact, in the absence of a showing that, when the acceptance was received, the drawer in fact had a credit on the books of the bank against which the amount of the draft could have been charged.

—First Nat. Bank v. Wills Creek Coal Co., 110 Mich. 447.

¶ 402. The discharge or extension of a pre-existing debt is a valid consideration so as to make the purchaser a bona fide holder of a negotiable instrument.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 127 Mich. 522.

¶ 403. One who has purchased a note of an agent employed by the original parties to negotiate it is not the less a bona fide holder because of having bought the note at less than its face.—Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287.

¶ 404. The consideration paid by one who purchases a promissory note need not be in money in order to constitute a taking in due course of business; so held where a bookkeeper in a bank exchanged township drain orders for a promissory note held by the township treasurer.—Chapman v. Remington, 80 Mich. 552.

¶ 405. One who has not parted with value is not an innocent holder; so held in the case of a bank which took new notes, not as payment of, but as collateral to, a dishonored note the indorser of which had refused to sign in renewal. The bank not having parted with value on account of the new notes cannot enforce them against their indorser who was induced to sign them through the maker's fraud.—Henriques v. Ypsilanti Sav. Bank, 84 Mich. 168.

¶ 406. A bank which accepts a draft payable to its order after such draft is accepted by the drawee, and which credits the amount of the proceeds of the draft to the drawer, will not be held not to be a bona fide holder of the draft, it being given for a valuable consideration, and there being no fraud in its inception.—Texarkana Nat. Bank v. Stillwell & Co., 121 Mich. 154.

¶ 407. Although an agreement to forbear bringing suit for an indefinite time, if followed by actual forbearance for a reasonable time, is a good consideration, a bank which obtained stock as collateral to a demand note for an old debt and had the same right to immediately sue the note which it had before the same was given, was not an innocent purchaser for value as against the corporation who had a prior lien against the stock by virtue of a by-law.—Bronson Electric Co. v. Rheubottom, 122 Mich. 608.

¶ 408. A bank purchasing notes and paying for them by crediting the amount to the indorser's account, the latter exhausting the amount by drawing checks against it prior to the maturity of the notes, is a bona fide purchaser though the indorser subsequently may have deposits in excess of the amount of the notes.—Fredonia Nat. Bank v. Tommei, 131 Mich. 674.

B. ADMISSIBLE DEFENSES AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

§ 79. In general.

Defenses available between primary parties, see ante § 20.

Defenses available to and between indorsers, see ante §§ 47, 49.

Pleas, affidavits and notices of defenses, see post § 102.

Liability of married women to bona fide holders of contracts, see Husband and Wife § 82.

Rights of bona fide takers and holders of municipal and public bonds, see Municipal Bonds § 13 et seq.

Provisions as to rights of bona fide holders, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6098.

¶ 409. Where an agent with full authority to negotiate certain paper has turned it out as collateral security for advances made to himself, and has afterwards directed the holder to sell it, a bona fide purchaser is not concerned with the state of accounts between his vendor and the agent.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

¶ 410. A person obtaining negotiable paper in good faith for a valuable consideration and before maturity is protected, and the mortgage security in such a case is protected equally with the note.—Barnum v. Phenix, 60 Mich. 388.

¶ 411. Bona fide holders who rediscount renewed paper and who send the proceeds to the accepting bank will not be deprived of protection as such although the bank who accepts the paper for renewal does not surrender the old note or enter the new note on the books.—Davenport v. Stone, 104 Mich. 521.

¶ 412. That the payee of a note is a copartnership which has failed to comply with Pub. Acts 1907, Act No. 101, How., 2nd Ed., § 2626, requiring the filing of a certificate of membership constitutes no defense as against a holder in due course, for value and without notice.—Pontiac Savings Bank v. Reinforced Concrete Pipe Co., 178 Mich. 261.

§ 80. Want of execution or delivery.

Evidence as to execution of instrument, see post § 117.

Issues and proof as to execution and delivery of instrument, see post § 105.

¶ 413. One Hirschberg came to defendant's store to sell him certain goods. Defendant made out notes for the purchase price and laid them on the counter until Hirschberg should make out the order for defendant to sign. Defendant stopped to wait on a customer, and Hirschberg made off with the notes. Plaintiff, as transferee of the notes, asked for a directed verdict. Held, it should not be granted.—Sheffer v. Fleischer, 158 Mich. 270.

¶ 414. Certificates of deposit are negotiable paper; and where the owner of such a certificate has indorsed it, and, through his want of ordinary business caution, it has passed beyond his control, it seems that one who within a reasonable time purchases it in good faith and for value is entitled to protection.—Birch v. Fisher, 51 Mich. 36.

§ 81. Forgery or alteration.

Forgery or alteration of instrument in general, see ante § 65.

Alteration as defense against bona fide holder, see Alteration of Instruments § 10.

Alteration as defense to action by holder in due course, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6165.

¶ 415. The bona fide holding of a forged note does not enable one to recover thereon.—Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265.

¶ 416. Where, without negligence on his part, and relying upon false representations made to him at the time that the instrument in question was a mere duplicate of a contract which he had just signed, a defendant unwittingly signed an instrument in the form of a negotiable promissory note; where, also, fraudulent means were taken to prevent him from noticing the body of the pretended duplicate, and he delivered it in ignorance of its true character, believing it to be the same duplicate contract which he supposed he had signed, it was held that the instrument was to be regarded as a forgery, and could not be enforced even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser.—Gibbs v. Linabury, 22 Mich. 479.

¶ 417. One who signs a promissory note, after filling in all the blanks in a printed form except that for the rate of interest, is liable thereon to a bona fide holder without notice, though the rate of interest has been filled in after the note left his hands.—Weidman v. Symes, 120 Mich. 657.

¶ 418. The bona fide holder of a joint and several promissory note, acquired before maturity, is entitled to recover against those signers whose signatures are genuine, although a part of the names purporting to be signed thereto are forged.—First Nat. Bank of Durand v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 362.

¶ 419. One who signs a note is not relieved from liability to a holder in due course by the fact that signatures have been forged thereon subsequent to his signature.—First Nat. Bank of Durand v. Shaw, 157 Mich. 192.

¶ 420. The forgery of a portion of the signatures to a promissory note does not invalidate the instrument in the hands of a bona fide holder in due course as to those whose signatures are genuine.—Van Slyke v. Rooks, 181 Mich. 88.

Negligence affecting actions by drawee against purchaser of check or draft forged in signature or indorsement, 14 N. C. C. A. 567-581.

§ 82. Fraud, duress or mistake.

As defense between the primary parties, see ante § 21.

Purchaser's knowledge or notice of fraud as bearing on his bona fides, see ante § 72.

¶ 421. A transferee of paper given to an individual partner for partnership property, and transferred by him in satisfaction of his individual debt and in fraud of the other partner's rights, cannot be deprived of his right as bona fide holder except on evidence of his participation in the fraud or other misconduct of the partner who transferred to him.—Nichols v. Sober, 38 Mich. 678.

¶ 422. Duress is not a defense to negotiable paper in the hands of a bona fide holder who purchased it before it fell due.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Grand Rapids v. Butler, 48 Mich. 192.

¶ 423. An accommodation indorser of a promissory note cannot escape liability to a bona fide holder on the ground that his indorsement was procured by the false representations of the maker.—Cristy v. Campau, 107 Mich. 172.

¶ 424. A plaintiff bank which rediscounts renewed paper in good faith and for value is entitled to protection even though the officials of the defendant bank who negotiated the transfer but made no record upon the bank books except to credit the maker of the notes with the proceeds thereof, less a charge made by the bank, may have sought to defraud plaintiff or the stockholders of their own bank.—First Nat. Bank v. Stone, 104 Mich. 367.

¶ 425. Where there is no fraud in the inception of a note, and it is given for an actual indebtedness, but the fraud claimed to exist arose in connection with its transfer, a holder of the note without knowledge, actual or constructive, of such fraud, who gives value therefor and receives it in good faith, is a holder in due course.—Graham v. Smith, 155 Mich. 65.

¶ 426. In the absence of actual fraud in obtaining signatures to a promissory note, the makers cannot show, as against a bona fide holder for value, that they supposed they were executing a different instrument, where they were guilty of gross negligence in failing to ascertain the true nature of the instrument.—Van Slyke v. Rooks, 181 Mich. 88.

§ 83. ——In inception of instrument.

¶ 427. If it appears that the note has never been actually delivered, and that without any confidence or negligence or fault on the part of the maker, but by force or fraud, it was put in circulation, there can be no recovery upon it, even when in the hands of an innocent holder.—Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415.

¶ 428. The maxim leaving a loss upon him who put it in the power of another to occasion it does not apply to a case where a person was deceived into signing a negotiable promissory note. The maxim supposes the action of the person upon whom it imposes the loss to have proceeded from intelligence, and not to have resulted from duress. It presumes the assent of the will of the actor. If, from any cause, this assent is wanting, the result is the same as if the act were done under duress, or by an insane man.—Gibbs v. Linabury, 22 Mich. 479.

¶ 429. Where one signs in good faith a paper that he has heard read, and that purports to be a power of attorney, deed, contract, mortgage, or the like, the rule, if any, that one who signs an instrument and puts it in circulation is bound by its terms, even though it turns out to be different from what he supposed, does not apply to hold him liable upon a negotiable note which, without any intimation to him, was embraced in the paper so signed.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113.

¶ 430. One who has been tricked into signing a promissory note will not be liable upon it unless his own negligence was so gross as to preclude his defending against a bona fide purchaser of the paper.—Soper v. Peck, 51 Mich. 563.

¶ 431. A bona fide purchaser, even, cannot recover on a note the signature to which was obtained by fraud and deceit without the fault of the person purporting to be the maker, since the equities of purchasers cannot be said to be any greater than those of innocent persons who have done nothing negligently or unfairly to mislead them.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Deal, 55 Mich. 592.

¶ 432. If the signature to a note is procured by trickery or by substitution, the note is void even in the hands of a bona fide holder.—Beard v. Hill, 131 Mich. 246.

¶ 433. The drawer of a check held not estopped from asserting fraud in its inception in an action thereon by a transferee, by having failed to make such claim in a previous action in which he intervened.—People's State Bank v. Miller, 185 Mich. 565.

§ 84. Want of authority or capacity to execute or transfer paper.

Effect of taking paper of partnership association issued in excess of authority, see ante § 74.

Right of holder at a discount to enforce full value against members in an illegal corporate maker, see Corporations ¶ 130.

Effect of ultra vires accommodation paper in hands of bona fide holder, see also Corporations ¶ 321.

Estoppel in favor of bona fide holder to deny authority of corporate maker's officer to execute note, see Corporations ¶ 552.

Estoppel to deny liability of partnership association to bona fide taker of paper, see also Joint Stock Companies § 10.

¶ 434. A promissory note signed by a drunken person who knows what he is doing, and is not deceived as to the identity of the paper, is not void, and a defense against it must be based on fraud and not on absolute incapacity. Such a note would be valid in the hands of an honest holder for value.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249.

¶ 435. Accommodation notes were outstanding when the party for whose accommodation they were made died. The makers afterwards made new notes to decedent's order to be used to take up the old notes, the business of such decedent being continued, with their knowledge and approbation, by his widow in his name, and with the same manager and agent as before. Held, that where such new notes have been regularly indorsed with decedent's name by such agent as his attorney, and have passed to a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice of anything to impeach their validity, and the proceeds have been used to take up the old notes, and the makers of the new notes having full knowledge of all the facts as they occurred, they cannot resist their enforcement.—Van Etten v. Hemann, 35 Mich. 513.

¶ 436. A note and mortgage given by a corporation cannot be defeated in the hands of a good-faith purchaser before dishonor who took the same as the result of negotiations with the officers of the corporation, on the ground that the transaction out of which the securities grew was ultra vires.—Woodcock v. First Nat. Bank, 113 Mich. 236.

¶ 437. Section 6083, Comp. L. 1897, provided that the consent of at least two managers in writing should be required to contract debts over five hundred dollars except in the case of merchandising associations, where a majority in interest might authorize in writing one manager to incur such debts. One of the managers of the merchandising association in question for a period of years contracted debts above five hundred dollars, and gave notes therefor without written authority. The other managers knew of the practice, and acquiesced in it, and the notes were paid from time to time as they came due. Held, bona fide holders of such notes might enforce them against the association.—Armstrong v. Stearns, 156 Mich. 597.

¶ 438. An indorsement of negotiable paper by an insane payee is void, and the title of the indorsee may be defeated by proving the insanity, though the paper be negotiable and taken in good faith before due.—Hannahs v. Sheldon, 20 Mich. 278.

§ 85. Illegality or invalidity.

Validity and legality in general, see ante § 9.
Issues and proof as to validity of instrument, see post § 105.
Defense by indorser that note was void as a preferential transfer by insolvent maker, see Bankruptcy ¶ 41.
Estoppel of partnership association to deny validity of notes given for goods sold to it without agreement in writing, see Joint Stock Companies § 10.

¶ 439. One who buys a note made on Sunday, but dated on Monday, and has no knowledge of the time it was actually made, may recover upon it.—Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287.

¶ 440. A married woman's note given to secure husband's debt is void and is not protected, even though negotiable, in hands of bona fide holder.—Waterbury v. Andrews, 67 Mich. 281.

¶ 441. A negotiable note, though based upon a consideration that is illegal and void as against public policy, is good in the hands of a bona fide holder for value before maturity without knowledge of the transaction in which it originated, there being at the time no statute declaring such notes void.—Davis v. Seeley, 71 Mich. 209.

¶ 442. Nothing less than a statutory enactment will subject negotiable paper in the hands of a bona fide holder to the defense of illegality in its inception.—Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 136 Mich. 460.

¶ 443. A contract, though prohibited and made a crime by statute, if it takes the form of negotiable paper, is valid and enforceable in the hands of a bona fide holder for value.—Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 136 Mich. 460.

¶ 444. Comp. L. 1897, § 6108, of the general banking act, prohibiting and making a misdemeanor the certification of a check unless its amount actually stands to the credit of the drawer, was construed as intending to make such a contract void between the parties, but as not intending that if the contract took the form of negotiable paper, its validity was affected as to a bona fide holder for values.—Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 136 Mich. 460.

¶ 445. As regards the rights of a bona fide holder, a certified check is good, even though the bank has no funds of the drawer on hand and certifies it contrary to Comp. L. § 6108.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 158 Mich. 94.

§ 86. ——Of certification of check.

See also ante ¶ 444.

¶ 446. At common law the fact that a certified check was not covered by funds in the bank affords no defense, if the check, negotiable in form, has passed into the hands of a bona fide holder.—Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 136 Mich. 460.

¶ 447. Comp. L. 1897, § 6108, of the general banking act, prohibiting and making a misdemeanor the certification of a check unless its amount actually stands to the credit of the drawer, does not expressly declare that the check so certified shall be void in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, nor does it by necessary implication, or by implication even, make the check void in the hands of such holder.—Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 136 Mich. 460.

¶ 448. Where a drawer of checks on defendant bank in favor of plaintiff knows that the plaintiff gets the checks certified before releasing to him the securities for which they were given in payment, the drawer impliedly is an original party to the certification, and the plaintiff who procures the certification may be a bona fide holder of the checks.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 158 Mich. 94.

§ 87. Want or failure of consideration.

Want or failure of consideration as defense between primary parties, see ante § 22.
Issues and proof as to consideration, see post § 106.
Burden of proof and presumption as to consideration, see post §§ 109, 115.
Evidence as to consideration, see post §§ 115, 124.
Jury questions as to consideration, see post § 131.
Absence or failure of consideration as a defense, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6069.

¶ 449. Where a note is made to be discounted for the accommodation of the payee, and is discounted accordingly, the fact that the maker received no consideration therefor is no defense to the same in a suit brought thereon by the indorsee.—Thatcher v. West River Nat. Bank of Jamaica, Vermont, 19 Mich. 196.

¶ 450. Where the consideration of a transferable aid-note given to a railroad company is the benefit to be derived by the maker from the construction of its road, he cannot defend on the ground that the road was built by another company.—Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 Mich. 456.

¶ 451. A bank which received negotiable paper before due, as collateral security to a loan then made, without notice of any infirmity in the note, was a bona fide holder, and was protected as against the claim of want of consideration as to part of the amount, on the part of the maker.—First Nat. Bank of Niles v. Shue, 119 Mich. 560.

¶ 452. Defendant gave his note to a railroad company in consideration that the company would build its road through defendant's town. The company gave its note to a trustee as a guarantee that the road would be so built, and immediately transferred defendant's note to plaintiff. The railroad failed to build the road through defendant's town, and thereafter plaintiff, who had full knowledge of the whole transaction at the time of taking the note, sued thereon. Held, he was a bona fide purchaser for value and could recover despite the failure of the consideration of the note.—Whitehead v. Purdy, 172 Mich. 31.

¶ 453. The holder of notes, the president of a corporation, which is the payee of the notes, who, at the time of the transfer of notes before maturity to him in payment of a loan had no notice or knowledge that there had been a breach of a contract which existed as a basis of the notes, is a holder in due course, and is not subject to the defense of failure of consideration.—Poss v. Meader, 189 Mich. 323.

§ 88. Misapplication of proceeds.

¶ 454. A person taking partnership paper in good faith for value before maturity and without notice that it is tainted with fraud, has good title and it is no defense to a suit on such paper that the money obtained was misapplied by the partner who issued the paper.—Stevens v. McLachlan, 120 Mich. 285.

§ 89. Payment or discharge.

Payment, release or discharge as between primary parties, see ante § 24.
Evidence as to payment or discharge, see post §§ 121, 128.
Jury questions as to payment, see post § 135.

¶ 455. The maker of a negotiable note cannot assume that it has not been transferred and make payment thereof before maturity to the original holder, thus defeating the rights of a purchaser for value before maturity.—Williams v. Keyes, 90 Mich. 290.

Bill, note or check as payment, and right to sue on original debt if dishonored, see Payment, I, II.
Measure of damages for conversion of commercial paper, see Damages § 116.

¶ 456. Parties must sue and be sued on negotiable paper in the order in which they have seen fit to sign it.—Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 393.

¶ 457. A tax collector's agent who took as pay for taxes a draft on the collector which the latter refused to accept, and who then paid over the amount of the tax, became a holder for value and could collect the draft.—Elliott v. Miller, 8 Mich. 132.

¶ 458. Negotiable paper may always be sued upon, by the party having the legal title, in the name of another.—Bachelder v. Brown, 47 Mich. 366.

¶ 459. Possession of a promissory note payable to bearer is prima facie evidence of ownership or right to sue.—Hovey v. Sebring, 24 Mich. 232; Brigham v. Gurney, 1 Mich. 349.

¶ 460. Possession of a promissory note indorsed in blank is sufficient evidence of the plaintiff's right to sue on it.—Battersbee v. Calkins, 128 Mich. 569.

¶ 461. One need not be the real or beneficial owner of a note payable to bearer to enable him to recover; but he cannot claim to recover as owner upon a note payable to bearer to which he did not obtain title until after he began suit.—Hovey v. Sebring, 24 Mich. 232.

¶ 462. An instrument consisting of a promise to pay and an added stipulation that the article for which payment is to be made shall remain the payee's property until the note is paid; that if there is any default in payment it shall be at his option to take possession of the article or collect the note; and that if he takes possession he shall not be required to refund any money already paid, but that it shall be deemed to have been paid for rent of the article, is a contract sufficient to sustain an action, and on which the transferee can sue.—Soper v. Mills, 50 Mich. 75.

¶ 463. One party to a contract cannot sue upon a note placed by the other in a third person's hands as mere security for his fulfilment of the contract, so long as it is not agreed that the note shall be liquidated damages for nonperformance, and the damages therefor have not been determined in a suit on the contract.—Rumney v. Coville, 51 Mich. 186.

¶ 464. An indorsement in blank by the payee of a note payable to his order does not affect his right to sue while the note remains in his hands.—Kerrick v. Stevens, 58 Mich. 297.

¶ 465. Where a note is payable to order an indorsement in blank by the payee does not prevent his suing on the note still in his hands.—Kerrick v. Stevens, 58 Mich. 297.

¶ 466. Where an indorsement of guaranty was made by the party to whose order the note was payable the indorsement itself need not be negotiable in order to enable the first and original indorsee to sue the maker.—Phelps v. Church, 65 Mich. 231.

¶ 467. Inasmuch as indorsement of a note conveys the legal title to the indorsee, he may maintain suit on the note if his indorser could have done so, even though he may have no equitable interest therein.—Wintermute v. Torrent, 83 Mich. 555.

¶ 468. A note payable to the order of a firm and by the firm indorsed in blank may be sued by any holder.—Whitworth v. Pelton, 81 Mich. 98.

¶ 469. The right of the payee in a note payable to his order, and unindorsed by him, to recover in a suit against the maker, could not be defeated at the common law by the fact that the note was in the possession of a third person.—Hoil v. Rathbone, 98 Mich. 323.

¶ 470. A plaintiff, as assignee of the foreign administrator of the payee, may sue on a note.—General Conference Ass'n of Seventh-Day Adventists v. Michigan Sanitarium & Benevolent Ass'n, 166 Mich. 504.

¶ 471. A promissory note bearing annual interest providing that at the death of the payee it is to become the property of his grand-daughter, and that no part of the principal was to be paid during the lifetime of the payee if the annual interest was regularly paid, secured by a mortgage containing similar provisions, is construed to mean that the amount unpaid at the time of his death belongs to the grand-daughter, and includes interest accruing since the date of the payment of the annual interest, and no recovery can be had in a suit in behalf of the estate of the payee.—Rogers v. Osborne, 146 Mich. 618.

¶ 472. In a suit on a note where the defendant contended that the plaintiff had requested him to pay the money due to another person and had subsequently stated that the note would not be enforced, such statement would not estop the plaintiff from making claim on the note.—Barnett v. Saloman, 118 Mich. 460.

§ 91. Time to sue and conditions precedent.

Maturity of instrument and time of payment, see ante § 11.
Necessity of demand or presentment, see ante § 50.
Time to make presentment and demand, see ante § 51.
Time in which to accept bills of exchange, see ante § 36.
Exhaustion of remedies against maker before recourse to indorser, see also ante § 48.
Duty to present draft received as conditional payment before suing on the debt, see ante ¶ 234.
Bond or security upon suing on lost paper, see post § 94.
Limitations of actions on the paper and on liabilities incident thereto, see Limitations.
Time when limitation runs on antedated note payable one day after date, see Limitations ¶ 208.
Running of limitations on demand paper, see Limitations § 54.
Limitations on paper payable at death, see Limitations § 56.
New promises, acknowledgments, and indorsements to toll limitations or to revive debt, see Limitations § 81 et seq.
Giving of new note or renewal by one obligor as tolling limitations, see Limitations § 83.
Indorsement of payment as acknowledgment under statute of limitations tolling it, see Limitations § 91 et seq.
Effect of part payment by coparty or secondary party to toll limitations, see Limitations § 96 et seq.
Laches in pursuing equitable relief, see also Equity ¶ 157.
Waiver of fraud or bar of complaint by laches, see also Fraud § 82.
Right to sue for fraud without surrendering note involved therein, see Fraud § 84.
Return of notes to guarantor thereof as condition precedent to judgment against him, see Guaranty § 22.

¶ 473. An action is prematurely commenced upon a promissory note on the last day of grace.—Wiesinger v. First Nat. Bank, 106 Mich. 291.

¶ 474. An action by a bank against the indorser on a note was not prematurely brought, where the bank claimed that demand and notice had been waived by the indorser's promise to pay if upon the allowance of the bank's claim against the maker's estate, it became apparent that the estate could not pay, and where the administrator of such estate testified that the estate was insolvent. —State Bank of St. Johns v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

¶ 475. Exhaustion of security is not necessary before suing a note given for the absolute payment of money.—Cole v. Shaw, 103 Mich. 505.

¶ 476. An instrument signed officially by the president and secretary of a corporation, requesting its treasurer to pay to K. or bearer a certain sum of money, is a bill of exchange drawn by the corporation upon itself. Its legal effect is the same as that of a promissory note; it imports a promise to pay on demand, and an action may be maintained upon it without proof of a demand upon the treasurer.—Hasey v. White Pigeon Beet Sugar Co., 1 D. 193.

¶ 477. Defendants executed a note to plaintiff, and also assigned to him certain other securities upon the trust that he should collect the moneys due and to become due thereon and apply the proceeds to the payment of certain drafts drawn upon a third person and in indemnifying that person against his acceptances thereof. Held, that plaintiff could recover on the note without showing that such person had been damnified by reason of his acceptances.—Smith v. Barstow, 2 D. 155; and see Wheelock v. Rice, 1 D. 267.

§ 92. Nature and form of action.

Common counts on the instruments, see Assumpsit § 26.

¶ 478. It has always been competent to sue the makers of notes, negotiable or otherwise, on the common counts.—Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Potter, 55 Mich. 627.

¶ 479. A certificate of deposit may be sued upon by appending a copy thereof to the common counts.—Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191.

¶ 480. A railroad aid note, conditioned on the road's completion to a certain point, may, when it has become absolutely payable, be sued by the payee under the common counts. —Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Potter, 55 Mich. 627.

¶ 481. A creditor to whom a draft has been indorsed, to be applied, if collected, on the account of a debt, need not return the draft when dishonored; the debtor cannot recall his paper without paying the debt, and the creditor can sue either on the account or on the indorsement.—Stringfield v. Vivian, 63 Mich. 681.

§ 93. Actions on lost instruments.

Proof of lost bill or note and bond to indemnify defendant against it, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, §§ 55, 56; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12543, 12544.

¶ 482. To give equity jurisdiction where recovery is sought of the amount of a lost note, it is not necessary that it should be lost before due.—Green v. Stone, W. 109.

¶ 483. A payee of a note which it is claimed is wrongfully in the possession of the maker without his having paid it need not sue on it as a lost instrument; he may sue in assumpsit and compel the production of the instrument by the defendant.—Page Woven Wire Fence Co. v. Pool, 129 Mich. 57.

§ 94. ——Bond or security.

Indemnity on lost note against its enforcement by stranger as provision of foreclosure decree on mortgage securing note, see Foreclosure ¶¶ 396-398.

Provisions as to indemnity bonds in actions on lost negotiable instruments, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 56; Comp. L. 1915, § 12544.

¶ 484. The bond of indemnity in an action on a lost note should run to both defendants though but one was served.—Higgins v. Watson, 1 Mich. 428.

¶ 485. The filing of an indemnity bond is not required by the statute (How. St. § 7519) where suit is brought upon a lost note that is not negotiable.—Coon v. Bouchard, 74 Mich. 486.

¶ 486. The payee in a note given on the delivery by him of a deed to the maker on condition that if the maker fails to sell the land to third parties the payee's title shall be defeated and the note returned to the maker has a conditional title to the note, subject to be defeated by nonsale, and, the land not being sold, is liable in trover for the note's value if he disposes of it.—Brown v. St. Charles, 66 Mich. 71.

¶ 487. Before an indemnifying bond is required under Comp. L. 1915, § 12544, it must affirmatively appear that the note was negotiable, since § 12543, relating to suit on lost notes, is confined to negotiable instruments. —Reese v. Dyer, 199 Mich. 204.

¶ 488. Where, in case of an unindorsed note in possession of a third person plaintiff is required to furnish indemnity, and does so before the close of the case, defendant is fully protected, and it is no hardship to him to treat the note as a lost note, within the statute.—Holl v. Rathbone, 98 Mich. 323.

§ 95. Parties.

Defendants in suits on joint instruments, see also ante § 23.

Right to sue on instrument, see ante § 90.
Joinder of parties, see post § 98.
General law as to parties, see Parties.
Authority of bank officers to represent bank, see Banking §§ 54-59.
Right of holder to sue in his own name, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6092.

¶ 489. A bank holding a note as collateral security may, with the owner's assent, sue upon it in its own name.—Lobdell v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Bank of Detroit, 33 Mich. 408.

¶ 490. A payee while retaining the possession of a note which he has indorsed in blank has the right to bring suit thereon in his own name.—Atkinson v. Weidner, 79 Mich. 575.

¶ 491. Judgment creditors of the payee in a note in whom the legal title is vested by a blank indorsement and delivery, and by his agreement to apply its proceeds when collected upon the judgment, have the right to allow him to bring suit in his own name on the note.—Atkinson v. Weidner, 79 Mich. 575.

¶ 492. A promissory note payable to the "order of M. A. B. (or bearer)" is suable in the name of any holder without an indorsement.—Bitzer v. Wagar, 83 Mich. 223.

¶ 493. Under How. St. § 6871, which provides that in all actions on promissory notes or other instruments in writing, any of the parties to which are designated by the initial letter or letters or contraction of the Christian or first name or names, it shall be sufficient in any process or declaration to designate such persons by the same initial letter or letters or contraction of the Christian or first name or names, instead of stating such name or names in full, the payee in a note payable to "C. F. Shaw" may bring suit thereon in that name.—Shaw v. Fortine, 98 Mich. 254.

¶ 494. The Negotiable Instruments Law (Act No. 265, § 40, Pub. Acts 1905) provides that a qualified indorsement may be made by adding the words "without recourse" or any other words of similar character. To an indorsement was added: "Without recourse and without warrant of any character." Held, the indorsement was within the provision of the section to the effect that the use of a qualified indorsement should not impair the negotiable character of the instrument and under the indorsement in question the indorser might sue in his own name.—Schmidt v. Pegg, 172 Mich. 159.

§ 96. ——Agents and personal representatives.

Indorsements for collection, see ante § 43.
Right of agent of representative to sue in his own name on note indorsed to him for collection, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 256.

¶ 495. An agent may sue in his own name a note which he holds for collection and which is payable to bearer or indorsed in blank.—Brigham v. Gurney, 1 Mich. 349; Boyd v. Corbitt, 37 Mich. 52; Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 143; Coy v. Stiner, 53 Mich. 42.

¶ 496. One may sue in his own name on a note given him as agent for collection, regardless of the owner's death.—Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 143.

¶ 497. An agent for collection of a note indorsed in blank can sue it in his own name after paying over to his principal the amount due upon it.—Coy v. Stiner, 53 Mich. 42.

¶ 498. An agent to whom a negotiable note has been transferred for collection may sue thereon in his own name.—Watkins v. Plummer, 93 Mich. 215.

¶ 499. A bank was entitled to begin suit in its own name on a note made payable to the order of its cashier, where the cashier did not indorse the note but the evidence showed him to be plaintiff's cashier and that he acted in the transaction for plaintiff.—First Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 133 Mich. 700.

¶ 500. A foreign executor can sue in his own name on a note belonging to the estate and payable to bearer; but if the note is not negotiable, or is payable to order and not indorsed, the executor should sue in his official capacity.—Knapp v. Lee, 42 Mich. 41.

§ 97. ——Assignees.

¶ 501. Where indorsement is required for the negotiable transfer of a promissory note a mere assignee cannot sue in his own name. Sess. L. 1863, p. 102, How. St. § 7344, permitting it, does not apply to such paper.—Redmond v. Stansbury, 24 Mich. 445; Robinson v. Wilkinson, 38 Mich. 299; Spinning v. Sullivan, 48 Mich. 5; Davis v. Merrill, 51 Mich. 480; Minor v. Bewick, 55 Mich. 491.

¶ 502. A transferree of a note who incidentally stands as an assignee of the guaranty of a note can sue thereon in his own name.—Waldron v. Harring, 28 Mich. 493.

¶ 503. If the effect of the assignment of a promissory note is to make it thereafter non-negotiable, the assignee can bring suit thereon in his own name under the statute; and, if such is not the effect, the indorsement of the note in blank by the assignee and its delivery to a third party entitle him as holder to bring suit in his own name.—Stevens v. Hannan, 86 Mich. 305.

¶ 504. The payee of a note sold it to the plaintiff, writing on its back "I hereby assign my interest in this note to William H. Gale, W. R. Pelton." Section 40 of the Negotiable Instruments Law provides that a qualified indorsement constitutes the indorser a mere assignor of the title of the instrument, but does not impair its negotiable character. Held, the plaintiff could not by force of this provision sue on the note in his own name under section 10054, Comp. L., giving to the assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action the right so to sue.—Gale v. Mayhew, 161 Mich. 96.

¶ 505. The payee of a note sold it to the plaintiff, writing on its back "I hereby assign my interest in this note to William H. Gale, W. R. Pelton." Held, plaintiff could not sue on the note in his own name, as the writing did not amount to a legal indorsement, nor was he enabled to do so by section 10054, Comp. L., which allows an assignee of a chose in action to sue in his own name but excepts from its operation negotiable choses in action.—Gale v. Mayhew, 161 Mich. 96.

¶ 506. A note given in payment for a threshing machine contained the provision: "If default is made in the payment of any note or the machine is levied upon or undersigned attempts to sell or remove same, said company may declare all notes due." Held, the instrument was not rendered non-negotiable by this provision so as to enable the assignee to sue in his own name by virtue of Comp. L. 1897, § 10054.—Schmidt v. Pegg, 172 Mich. 159.

§ 98. Joinder of parties.

Liability on joint instruments, see ante § 23.

¶ 507. Comp. L. 1871, § 5776, How. St. § 7345, allowing the various parties to negotiable paper to be joined in one suit, does not change the nature of each one's liability. —Sherman v. Palmer, 37 Mich. 509.

¶ 508. One who indorses on a note payable to order a guaranty of payment may be joined as a defendant in a suit on the note.—Green v. Burrows, 47 Mich. 70.

¶ 509. Whether a firm can buy paper on which one of its members is a joint maker, and join the other maker and an indorser in an action at law, quære.—Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 393.

¶ 510. When a promissory note is joint as well as several, all must be proceeded against jointly, or each severally, subject to certain exceptions, as where one is an infant, or has been discharged in bankruptcy.—J. A. Fay & Co. v. James Jenks & Co., 78 Mich. 312.

¶ 511. One who indorses a promissory note for the accommodation of the principal maker and an accommodation maker can maintain an action against them jointly upon being compelled to pay the note; and this is so although the indorser is not the payee named in the note, and the indorsement was made before its negotiation. The rule as to contribution between cosureties does not apply to such a case.—Hanish v. Kennedy, 106 Mich. 455.

¶ 512. Where all the stockholders corporation, the stock of which is hel one stockholder as trustee for the benef all, indorse a note made by the trustee subsequently renew the note by the exec of eight notes respectively signed by ea eight stockholders as maker and indo the trustee indorser, upon payment of notes, is not a holder thereof such contemplated by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 1 10057, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 12705, 12707, so be entitled to sue all the makers an dorsers in one action at law.—Comsto Potter, 191 Mich. 629.

¶ 513. Severance in the case of pe purporting to be joint makers of a note who are so sued, is not contemplate Comp. L. 1871, §§ 5776-5778, How. St. §§ 7347, which authorize the suing togeth the maker, indorser, acceptor and guar of a note.—Reading v. Beardsley, 41 123.

§ 99. Intervention.

General law as to intervention, see Pa

¶ 514. The fact that the personal r sentative of the deceased payee in a issory note whose indorsement of the was obtained by undue influence, has a edy in equity, does not preclude him interceding in a suit by the indorsee ag the maker and raising defense of fra Coon v. Dennis, 111 Mich. 450.

¶ 515. In an action against the mak a negotiable promissory note brought b payee's indorsee, it is competent for the sonal representative of the payee to inte and defend for the maker, indemnifying against loss, where the indorsement was cured by undue influence, which is a sp of fraud.—Coon v. Dennis, 111 Mich. 45

¶ 517. In declaring on a promissory absolute on its face and in the ordinary it is not necessary to notice a contem neous agreement in writing varying terms of the note, contained in a separate paper. Such agreement is matter of defense only.—Smalley v. Bristol, 1 Mich. 153.

¶ 518. Demand of payment of a promissory note at the time and place of payment specified therein need not, in an action against the maker, be averred or proved.—Reeve v. Pack, 6 Mich. 240.

¶ 519. A count by an indorsee upon a promissory note against copartnership makers need not specially allege the capacity of the firm to make notes, or specially set forth facts to imply it.—Carrier v. Cameron, 31 Mich. 373.

¶ 520. Where a declaration on the common counts against two defendants has a promissory note appended, purporting to be signed in a firm name, it is not demurrable for a failure to aver that defendants are partners.—Danaher v. Hitchcock, 34 Mich. 516.

¶ 521. An accommodation maker of a note, who takes it up after maturity, can sue the other joint maker as for money paid to the latter's use, and if his declaration covers the case it is immaterial that he also declares specially on the note.—McClatchie v. Durham, 44 Mich. 435.

¶ 522. A declaration in a suit joining maker and indorser as defendants must set forth a paper title accordingly.—Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 393.

¶ 523. In an action by an indorsee against the payee and indorsers of notes where the declaration fails to show title in plaintiff, the indorsements actually upon the notes not being correctly set out, plaintiff cannot recover without an amendment, which, if asked, should be allowed.—Hamilton v. Powers, 80 Mich. 313.

¶ 524. A declaration by an assignee upon a conditional note not negotiable need not aver any formal assignment, but is sufficient if it avers the plaintiff to be the owner and holder.—Draper v. Fletcher, 26 Mich. 154.

¶ 525. In an action by the indorser against the indorsee of a promissory note, a declaration alleging in the first count that defendant allowed a chattel mortgage securing the note to lapse, and in enforcing its judgment against plaintiff upon the note caused him great damage by levy upon his lands, and in the second count that defendant represented to plaintiff that the note had been paid, inducing plaintiff to give no further attention to the mortgage security, but to allow it to lapse, resulting likewise in damage from defendant's levy, sets out no cause of action based on the duty of the defendant to enforce the mortgage security for plaintiff's benefit.—Roberts v. First Nat. Bank of Yale, 149 Mich. 507.

¶ 526. The only difference between Comp. L. 1871, § 5775, How. St. § 7344, and Comp. L. 1871, § 1564, How. St. § 1590 (passed six years later), in regard to suit by an assignee of a note indorsed with a guaranty, is that the latter section dispenses with necessity of those allegations concerning the assignment which are necessary in the case of nonnegotiable paper.—Waldron v. Harring, 28 Mich. 493.

¶ 527. A pleaded breach of a warranty that a note is as good as gold, or as good as money, is not equivalent to pleading a guaranty of collection.—Taylor v. Soper, 53 Mich. 96.

§ 102. Pleas, affidavits and notices of defense.

Contemporaneous agreement in writing varying the terms of the instrument as matter of defense, see also ante § 101.

Availability of defense of nonexecution in absence of denial of execution, see also post § 103.

Omission to deny execution as dispensing with proof of execution, see post § 108.

Pleading fraud as defense, necessity of notice, see also Fraud § 98.

Denial of execution of instrument sued on in justices' court, see also Justices of the Peace § 97.

¶ 528. An affidavit by two of three defendants sued as joint makers of promissory notes executed in the name of a firm, denying "each for himself that he ever signed, executed or delivered either of said notes," is not sufficient to put plaintiff to proof of execution.—Mills v. Bunce, 29 Mich. 364.

¶ 529. Affidavits of nonexecution should not be technically construed.—McCormick v. Bay City, 23 Mich. 457; Haight v. Arnold, 48 Mich. 512.

¶ 530. Where defendant in an action on a note makes an affidavit under Circuit Court Rule 79, in which, while he admits that the signature to the note appears to be his own, he also avers that it was obtained under circumstances, fully set forth, which would relieve him of liability, the affidavit is sufficient to put plaintiff to the proof of the execution and delivery of the note.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113.

¶ 531. An affidavit denying only the delivery of the note sued on admits the genuineness of the signature.—Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. McKee, 51 Mich. 426.

¶ 532. Where several persons are sued jointly as makers of a promissory note an affidavit by one of them that he has neither executed the note nor authorized anyone to execute it for him is sufficient to put the execution and validity of the note at issue so far as he is concerned, even though his codefendants do not join in the affidavit.—Wren v. McLaren, 48 Mich. 197.

¶ 533. An affidavit of the nonexecution of a partnership note is sufficient, when filed by one of the partners, if it shows that deponent did not sign, execute or deliver it, or expressly or impliedly authorize, direct, empower or consent to its execution, signature or delivery by any other person, and that if signed, executed or delivered by the firm, it was done by another copartner without deponent's authority, knowledge or consent, against the express agreement on which the partnership was created, for purposes outside of partnership matters, and without any authority in behalf of the partnership.—McRobert v. Crane, 49 Mich. 483.

¶ 534. The neglect of the remaining members of a firm to deny the execution of a note, signed by one partner in the firm name, admits the genuineness of such firm signature, and the authority of the partner to affix it, but does not admit that the firm received a consideration for such promise, or preclude such members from showing the fraud practiced upon them in the use made of the firm paper.—Towle v. Dunham, 76 Mich. 251.

¶ 535. Discretion of court in denying an application by defendants to file an affidavit denying execution of partnership notes sued upon is properly exercised, if the actual signing was done by a deceased partner and the affidavit could have been filed in the cause during his lifetime, and if the surviving partners have neglected to deny the signature.—Towle v. Dunham, 76 Mich. 251.

¶ 536. The failure of a railroad company to deny the execution of a note purporting to have been signed by the company by its auditor, as provided in Circuit Court Rule 79, is an admission that the note was so signed, but whether the authority of the auditor to execute the note is also admitted, quære.—Dewey v. Toledo A. B. & N. W. R. Co., 91 Mich. 351.

¶ 537. An affidavit by one of several defendants made and filed in an action on a promissory note bearing several signatures, denying the execution of such note, was sufficient notice to justify the requirement that the plaintiff, although claiming to be a bona fide holder, must show the execution of such note, before it could be offered in evidence, and to admit the defense of forgery as to some of the signatures.—First Nat. Bank of Durand v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 362.

¶ 538. In an action on a promissory note, a notice alleging fraud in the sale of stock for which a note was given and that "defendant has never received a dollar in profits out of said corporation, and has received no consideration whatever for the $2,400 invested by him in said corporation at the instigation of the plaintiff" pleads want of consideration only and cannot be construed as a notice of recoupment based on fraud; and, where uncontroverted testimony shows the company owned valuable property, a defense of want of consideration fails.—Morgan v. Nowlin, 126 Mich. 105, per Hooker, J., Moore, J., concurring and others concurring on a different ground.

§ 103. Issues, proof and variance.

General law as to issues and variance, see Pleading, IX, X.

Issues made by assumpsit with instrument annexed, see also Assumpsit § 55.

¶ 539. Omission to file an affidavit of nonexecution does not preclude any defense on the merits that does not contradict the execution of the note.—Freeman v. Ellison, 37 Mich. 459.

¶ 540. When one sues under the common counts (Comp. L. 1857, § 4425), and appends a copy of a negotiable instrument to his declaration, it is equivalent to an assertion that he is entitled to sue upon it in manner and form as set out, and when such a title can possibly be established, he may, if issue is taken, prove his title; if issue is not taken, he may assume it to be admitted, and the defendant must be held by default to have admitted any title not inconsistent with the paper as set out.—Wilcox v. Sweet, 24 Mich. 355.

¶ 541. In an action on an accepted draft the defendant may show, under the general issue, that when it was drawn he was not indebted to the drawee, that there was no consideration that the acceptance was merely for accommodation, or that it had been paid.—Colbath v. Jones, 28 Mich. 280.

¶ 542. A note given for an interest in a patent issued by the United States Patent office cannot be held to be without consideration, and evidence of the pecuniary worthlessness of the patent is not admissible under the general issue in an action on the note.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249.

¶ 543. In an action upon a note against two joint makers it is inadmissible under the general issue to show that one maker signed as a surety, and that he was released by an agreement with the maker, without his consent, to extend the time of payment.—Rawlings v. Cole, 67 Mich. 431.

¶ 544. In an action against the maker total failure of the consideration for the notes sued upon may be shown under the general issue.—Perkins v. Brown, 115 Mich. 41.

¶ 545. Where plaintiff declares against two or more defendants as makers of a promissory note, which is signed with a collective or partnership name, omission of sworn denial admits not only the execution of the note in the abstract, but that it was executed by the parties declared against, and in the manner alleged, and saves necessity of proving partnership.—Pegg v. Bidleman, 5 Mich.

26; Lobdell v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Bank of Detroit, 33 Mich. 408.

¶ 546. In a suit on an accepted draft the defendants may, if they see fit, waive all formal proof that the paper was filed with the justice before whom the suit originated; that the written acceptance was made by the drawees whose signatures purport to be attached, and that the parties in court as defendants compose the firm which is claimed to have accepted the draft, and whose signature purports to be attached to the acceptance; if they do waive such proof, they cannot, on the ground of its absence, claim an affirmance of the judgment granted in their favor below.—Peterson v. Hubbard, 28 Mich. 197.

§ 104. ——Evidence under the general issue.

Admissibility of evidence in general, see post § 113.

¶ 547. The defense that the one who sues a negotiable promissory note did not obtain the title or the right to sue before suit brought is admissible under the general issue.—Hovey v. Sebring, 24 Mich. 232; Reynolds v. Kent, 38 Mich. 246.

¶ 547a. In an action on a promissory note against two joint makers, one cannot show under the general issue without notice that he signed as surety only, and was released by an unauthorized extension of time to the principal debtor.—Rawlings v. Cole, 67 Mich. 431.

¶ 547b. Where the execution of a promissory note is denied on oath, the general issue in an action thereon will admit evidence tending to show that defendant made no such contract as was counted upon, and that he was fraudulently induced to sign the note when he thought he was signing something else.—Soper v. Peck, 51 Mich. 563.

¶ 548. The maker of a promissory note payable to bearer has a right to show, as against the plaintiff producing the note on trial, that the latter did not obtain the title, or the right by which he seeks to recover, until after the commencement of the suit; and this is a full defense, and may be shown under the general issue.—Hovey v. Sebring, 24 Mich. 232; Reynolds v. Kent, 38 Mich. 246.

¶ 549. Defendant gave a promissory note for two hundred dollars payable to the order of plaintiff, for certain shares of stock to be secured by plaintiff and turned over to defendant. Plaintiff indorsed this note to the bank and got the money. Later the time of payment was extended, and defendant made a new note running direct to the bank as payee, which plaintiff indorsed and had to pay, and for which he sued to recover of defendant. Defendant gave notice under the general issue that he would show that plaintiff never delivered the stock. Held, defendant was entitled under this notice to introduce evidence of the failure of consideration.—Green v. Ostrander, 160 Mich. 662.

¶ 550. In an action to recover on a promissory note, where the defendant pleaded the general issue with notice of special defense that the note was obtained by false and fraudulent representations relative to certain land which defendant was negotiating for and contracted to buy in connection with which the note was given, testimony offered by defendant after plaintiff rested to show the note was without consideration because given for a deed to the land which had not been delivered, held inadmissible under the pleadings and as showing that such defense had been litigated adversely to defendant in a former suit brought by him.—Bishop v. Dodge, 196 Mich. 231.

§ 105. ——Execution and validity of instrument.

Validity and legality of instrument in general, see ante § 9.

Want of authority to execute the paper as defense against bona fide holders, see ante § 84.

Sufficiency of pleading to put execution of instrument in issue, see also ante § 102.

Burden of proof as to execution, see post § 108.

Evidence as to execution of the instrument, see post § 117.

Necessity of sworn denial of execution to let in defense that note was ultra vires maker's power, see Corporations § 99.

Defense that notes by county treasurer are invalid for want of power without denial of execution under oath, see Counties § 56.

¶ 551. Proof of execution by a party not sued is unnecessary in suit against one of the makers of a joint and several promissory note.—Chandler v. Lawrence, 3 Mich. 261.

¶ 552. Omission to deny execution precludes defendant from showing that the note as declared on and produced was not as he executed it.—Polhemus v. Ann Arbor Savings Bank, 27 Mich. 44.

¶ 553. C. C. Rule 79 dispensing with proof of execution of the instrument sued on unless its execution is denied on oath does not apply to an action begun in justice's court, where the declaration consisted of the common counts only, and on appeal a new declaration was filed with copy of note attached, but not served; for there is no opportunity to file the affidavit.—McMillen v. Beach, 38 Mich. 397.

¶ 554. Evidence to impeach the execution of a note is inadmissible if it has not been denied by affidavit attached to the plea.—Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Edson, 41 Mich. 673.

¶ 555. The omission to file an affidavit denying the execution of a note does not waive defendant's right to show want of capacity to execute the note except for a particular consideration.—Kenton Ins. Co. v. McClellan, 43 Mich. 564.

¶ 556. Where two persons are sued on a note as partners, a denial, by one solely served, of execution by himself or by any one authorized by him, is at least an argumentative denial of execution by any partnership of which he was a member, and puts plaintiff to proof.—Haight v. Arnold, 48 Mich. 512.

¶ 557. Where several persons are sued jointly as makers of a promissory note, an affidavit by one of them that he has neither executed the note nor authorized anyone to execute it for him is sufficient to put the execution and validity of the note at issue, so far as he is concerned, even though his codefendants do not join in the affidavit.—Wren v. McLaren, 48 Mich. 197.

¶ 558. The execution of a partnership note must be proved where only one of the defendants appears, and after pleading, and in the course of the trial, files, with plaintiff's consent and the court's leave, a sufficient affidavit of its nonexecution, so far as he is concerned.—McRobert v. Crane, 49 Mich. 483.

¶ 559. Plaintiff declared in justice's court on the common counts in assumpsit and recovered a judgment, from which the defendant appealed, and on the trial at the circuit plaintiff offered a promissory note in evidence, purporting to be signed by the defendant, without offering to prove its execution. The justice's return was silent as to the note, nor did it appear that it was filed with the justice. Held, that proof of such execution was necessary.—Newton v. Principaal, 82 Mich. 271.

¶ 560. It is only in cases where the defendant has had an opportunity to deny the execution of a note under oath, and has failed to do so, that the plaintiff is not required to prove its execution.—Newton v. Principaal, 82 Mich. 271.

¶ 561. Where the payee in a note containing a power of attorney to confess judgment begins suit by declaration and annexes a copy of the note with a notice that it constitutes plaintiff's sole cause of action, the execution of the note need not be proved unless denied under oath.—Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. McKittrick, 86 Mich. 191.

¶ 562. Under First Cir. Ct. Law Rule No. 79, where suit is brought upon a draft against the drawer and an indorser, and both defendants plead the general issue, without denying the execution of the indorsement, it is unnecessary for plaintiff to prove the genuineness of the indorser's signature, even as against the defendant drawer.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 543.

¶ 563. Defendant in an action to reco the purchase price of a promissory note c not claim that the note was not delive in view of the pleadings where he pleads general issue, and gives notice that he not purchase the note from plaintiff, received it for collection, and now holds as an interest in a judgment rendered in favor against the maker of the note.—Bri erhoff v. Peek, 114 Mich. 628.

¶ 564. Where the execution of a note not denied under oath, but is admitted, maker will be held to have executed it the manner and form purported by it.— sign v. Dunn, 181 Mich. 456.

§ 106. ——Consideration.

Want or failure of consideration as defe see ante §§ 22, 87.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to c sideration, see post §§ 109, 112.
Evidence as to consideration, see post §§ 124.
Jury questions as to consideration, see p § 131.

¶ 565. It seems that where the consid tion of a note is open to inquiry at all it is much in behalf of any one of the defenda as of all.—Freeman v. Ellison, 37 Mich.

¶ 566. Though no affidavit of nonexecut has been made, an indorser may show t he signed without consideration, and a the note's delivery.—Freeman v. Ellison, Mich. 459.

¶ 567. Failure of consideration may ways be shown in a suit on a contract; in an action on negotiable paper proof be made of the purpose for which it given, or that the purpose does not requ the enforcement of payment.—Maltz Fletcher, 52 Mich. 484.

¶ 568. In an action on a promissory against an indorser thereon the consid tion for the indorsement is a material q tion if plaintiff is bound by the equities isting between maker and indorser. An can hardly be immaterial if one of the p cipal questions in the case is whether h so bound or not.—Kelly v. Freedman, Mich. 321.

¶ 569. In an action on a promissory begun in a justice court, evidence that note was given as part of the purchase p of a machine which failed to work and th after the sale was rescinded and the defe ant refused to receive and retain the mach is admissible, as total failure of consid tion, under the general issue.—Keystone Co. v. Forsyth, 126 Mich. 98.

§ 107. ——Variance.

¶ 570. If it can be shown that paper s upon is not a promissory note where the laration treats it as such, and is not ada to the case of any other special contract, the suit will fail.—Mattison v. Marks, 31 Mich. 421.

¶ 571. Where the declaration treats the paper sued upon as a promissory note, but it is shown not to be such, the variance is fatal where the declaration is not adapted to the case of any other special contract.—Mattison v. Marks, 31 Mich. 421.

¶ 572. An objection to the admission in evidence of the note sued upon for a variance from the copy appended to the declaration, in that it contained the words "secured by mortgage," which did not appear in the copy, was not well taken if accompanied by counsel's admission that he was not misled.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

¶ 573. In assumpsit by the indorser of a draft against the makers, the plaintiff, though declaring as payee, has a right to show that as an indorser he had paid the draft after receiving notice of its dishonor.—McDonough v. Heyman, 38 Mich. 334.

¶ 574. One cannot recover under a declaration in which he claims as indorsee of a note bearing ten per cent interest, if the interest clause in the note sued on is invalid, for the note sued on would be different from the one indorsed to him.—Nelson v. Dutton, 51 Mich. 416.

¶ 575. In a suit against indorsers whose defense is fraud practiced in securing their indorsement, testimony which recognizes their liability and seeks to establish a discharge by matters ex post facto is inadmissible.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 576. Where a variance between the declaration and the proof as to the middle initial of the maker of a draft could not have prejudiced anyone, it will not be noticed.—McDonough v. Heyman, 38 Mich. 334.

¶ 577. "Trobridge" for "Trowbridge" is not a material variance in naming a defendant in a declaration on a promissory note.—Buhl v. Trowbridge, 42 Mich. 44.

§ 108. Burden of proof.

Instructions as to burden of proof, see post § 140.

Burden of proof on bank in establishing existence of fictitious payee, see Banking § 18.

Burden of proof in actions on negotiable instruments against estates, see Estates of Decedents ¶¶ 609-610.

General law as to burden of proof, see Evidence, II.

¶ 578. The omission of the maker of a note when sued thereon to deny its execution does not dispense with the necessity of plaintiff's proving his title through an alleged indorsement or assignment.—Spicer v. Smith, 23 Mich. 96; Hinkley v. Weatherwax, 35 Mich. 510.

¶ 579. While the unexplained possession of a note, indorsed in blank, is presumptive evidence of ownership and sufficient to warrant a recovery in a suit by the holder thereon, the introduction of evidence tending to show that the note belongs to an insurance company of which the holder is the secretary and treasurer, and ex officio the proper custodian of the note if it belongs to the company, will destroy such presumption and cast the burden upon the holder to show his ownership.—Barnes v. Peet, 77 Mich. 391.

¶ 580. An affidavit of nonexecution filed with the plea leaves the plaintiff the burden of showing that the paper was signed by the defendant as alleged in the declaration.—Ortmann v. Merchants' Bank of Canada, 41 Mich. 482.

¶ 581. Where defendant in an action on a bill of exchange, drawn by his agent, pleads the general issue, and files with it an affidavit denying the execution of the bill, the plaintiff has the burden of proving that it was drawn with competent authority.—New York Iron Mine v. Citizens' Bank, 44 Mich. 344.

¶ 582. Where plaintiff claims title to a promissory note through its alleged indorsement by the payees by third persons as their agents and attorneys, the burden of proof is upon him to prove their authority to make such indorsement.—Newton v. Principaal, 82 Mich. 271.

¶ 583. In an action against a partnership upon partnership paper, the burden of proof is upon defendant to show any fraud, lack of authority for its issue, or that the paper was not given for partnership purposes.—Stevens v. McLachlan, 120 Mich. 285.

¶ 584. A note imports consideration, and its execution being admitted, the burden is upon the defendant to show its invalidity.—Young v. Shepard's Estate, 124 Mich. 552.

¶ 585. The burden is on defendant to show that a promissory note given in settlement of an alleged embezzlement and other claims is not for the proper amount, and that he gave the note for that amount to avoid a charge of embezzlement of which he was guiltless.—Beach v. Chapoton, 124 Mich. 508.

¶ 586. The payee in a draft, who has received it on the credit of written authority given to the drawer to make drafts upon the drawee in amounts sufficient to enable the former to meet advances on grain or other produce consigned to the drawee need not show that the funds raised by it were used for making advances on grain, or other produce, to be consigned to the persons giving the authority.—Bissell v. Lewis, 4 Mich. 450.

§ 109. ——As to consideration.

Want or failure of consideration as a defense, see ante §§ 22, 87.

Evidence as to consideration, see post §§ 115, 124.

Jury questions as to consideration, see post § 131.

¶ 587. In a suit upon a promissory note made by the defendant in consideration of the plaintiff's forbearance to seize certain property on attachment against his debtor, the onus of proving that the debtor had at the time no interest in the property, and that therefore the note was without consideration, is upon the defendant.—Rood v. Jones, 1 D. 188.

¶ 588. When indorsed commercial paper is sued by indorsee as holder, proof of signatures of maker and indorser raises the presumption that the note is supported by a good consideration and that it was indorsed at its date, or at least before maturity and before delivery to the holder. But when evidence is introduced which shows a want of consideration, or that the indorsement was not made until after delivery to the holder, then the presumption is rebutted, and the burden of proof is still on plaintiff to show a consideration and indorsement before delivery.—Manistee National Bank v. Seymour, 64 Mich. 59.

¶ 589. In an action on a promissory note signed by a wife and endorsed by her husband, the introduction of the note makes a prima facie case, and plaintiff is not bound to prove such consideration as would bind the wife, the burden resting upon defendant to prove facts which would relieve her from liability.—National Lumberman's Bank v. Miller, 131 Mich. 564.

¶ 590. The burden of proof is on the defendant in the first instance to show want of consideration for a promissory note and the plaintiff is only required to prove consideration after evidence of want of consideration has been introduced.—Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658.

¶ 591. Where a promissory note has not been negotiated the promisor may show want of consideration and on doing so the burden of proving consideration would fall upon the promisee.—Cawthorpe v. Clark, 173 Mich. 267.

¶ 592. The defendant must show want of consideration for an instrument which imports consideration.—Hinckley v. McLaughlin, 182 Mich. 707.

§ 110. ——As to bona fide holding.

Evidence as to bona fide holding, see post §§ 119, 126.

Jury questions as to bona fides of purchaser, see post § 133.

Instructions as to bona fide holding, see post § 139.

General rules as to bona fide purchasers, ante, XIII.

Provisions as to burden of proof of bona f holding, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6100.

¶ 593. Whenever the consideration of gotiable paper is illegal between the origi parties, especially if in violation of a posit prohibition of statute, proof of such illeg ity throws upon the holder the burden proving that he got it bona fide, and g value for it.—Paton v. Coit, 5 Mich. 505.

¶ 594. Evidence which showed that consideration of a promissory note was sale of liquors in violation of the prohibit liquor law threw upon the plaintiff the b den of showing that he bought the note good faith, and before it fell due.—Paton Coit, 5 Mich. 505; Bottomley v. Goldsmi 36 Mich. 27.

¶ 595. Proof of execution and indorsem makes a prima facie case; but defe ant may then show the invalidity of the n in the hands of the payee without first pr ing that the holder had notice of the defec and the burden of proving that it was ceived from the indorser in good faith, value, and before maturity, then rests the plaintiff.—Conley v. Winsor, 41 Mi 253.

¶ 596. Evidence that a note was gi for another's debt is not enough to place the holder the burden of proving that paid value for it.—Chicago & N. E. R. v. Edson, 41 Mich. 673.

¶ 597. When evidence is introduced t shows a want of consideration, or that indorsement was not made until after del ery to the holder, then the presumptions to consideration and indorsement at or fore maturity and delivery to the holder rebutted; and the burden is on the hol to show that such were the facts.—Manis National Bank v. Seymour, 64 Mich. 59.

¶ 598. Where the fraudulent inception a note has been shown in an indorsee's tion against the maker, the burden is thro upon plaintiff to show that he or his vend was a bona fide purchaser for value.—M v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389.

¶ 599. Where in an action on a due which has been assigned by the payee plaintiff as collateral security, the mak gives evidence that it was without consider tion and that he did not know of its be assigned, plaintiff has the burden of sho ing that it was purchased before matur and without notice of facts which wou constitute a defense to it in the paye hands.—City Bank of Dowagiac v. Dill Mich. 549.

¶ 600. After proof by the maker that promissory note sued upon by an alleged nocent holder was fraudulently obtained the payee by a prior transferee, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show that he is a bona fide holder for value.—Horrigan v. Wyman, 90 Mich. 121.

¶ 601. Where, in a suit by an indorsee upon a promissory note, the plaintiff produces the note with proof of protest, a defense that it was paid while in the hands of a prior indorsee is inadmissible, unless accompanied by evidence that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder of the paper, and upon this issue defendant has the burden of proof. —Little v. Mills, 98 Mich. 423.

¶ 602. Where, in a suit by an indorsee, it conclusively appears that the note sued upon was given without consideration, and that the transaction upon which it was based was contrary to public policy, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show that he is a bona fide holder, and that he purchased the note without knowledge of the illegal character of the transaction.—French v. Talbot Paving Co., 100 Mich. 443.

¶ 603. Where bonds sued upon are shown by defendant to have been illegal or void in the payee's hands, the burden is upon plaintiff to show that they were purchased in good faith before maturity, for a valuable consideration, and without notice of their original invalidity.—Grant Township v. Reno Township, 114 Mich. 41.

¶ 604. In an action upon partnership paper after fraud has been shown as a defense, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show that he took the paper in good faith and for a valuable consideration.—Stevens v. McLachlan, 120 Mich. 285.

¶ 605. The burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show that it was a bona fide holder, in an action against the receiver of an insolvent bank on a fraudulently certified check.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 606. In an action by the assignee of accepted drafts where it is shown that the drafts were obtained from the drawer by the original drawee through fraud, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that he was a bona fide holder.—Stouffer v. Fletcher, 146 Mich. 341.

¶ 607. Where there is strong evidence that a note was obtained from the maker through the fraud of the payee, a plaintiff holder, to be entitled to recover on same, has the burden of showing that either himself or a prior indorser was a bona fide purchaser of the same.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Wadsworth, 166 Mich. 528.

§ 111. ——As to presentment, demand, payment, protest and dishonor.

As to payment and discharge as defense, see ante §§ 24, 89.
Presentment, demand, dishonor, and protest generally, see ante VIII, IX, X.
Evidence as to, see post §§ 120, 127.
Jury questions as to, see post § 134.

¶ 609. The burden of proof in an action by the holder of a promissory note against an indorser rests upon such holder to show a compliance with the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act as to notice of dishonor, as the liability of the indorser rests solely upon compliance with such provisions. —First Nat. Bank of Manistee v. Star Watch Case Co., 187 Mich. 224.

¶ 610. Although the payee of a note who claims that demand and notice was waived by a subsequent promise of the indorser to pay the note, has the burden of proving that such promise was made with full knowledge of the facts, positive or direct evidence of knowledge is not necessary.—State Bank of St. Johns v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

¶ 611. In an action against an estate on promissory notes the burden of proof is on the estate to show payments made.—Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658.

§ 112. Presumptions.

Presumption as to place of payment where no place of payment specified, see ante ¶ 64.
Presumption as to place of delivery of instrument, see ante ¶ 65.
Presumption as to right of one of several payees to indorse for the others, see ante ¶ 199.
Presumption as to joint liability of indorser and his principals, see ante ¶ 201.
Presumption of notice of protest, see also ante § 59.
Lapse of time as raising presumption that paper is dishonored, see also ante ¶ 397.
Possession of instrument as evidence of ownership and right to sue, see also ante ¶ 459.
General law as to presumptions, see Evidence, II.
Presumptive authority of attorney to collect note in his possession, see Attorneys § 24.
Presumptions and evidence as to alteration, see Alteration of Instruments §§ 12, 13.
Presumption as to consideration, see also Contracts § 139.
Presumption against party failing to testify or produce available evidence or witnesses, see Evidence §§ 63-65.
Presumption that paper issued by partner is partnership paper, see Partnership.

Presumption as to consideration, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6065.
Presumptions as to bona fide holding, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6100.

¶ 612. A charge for native wine or beer, sold in lawful quantities (Comp. L. 1871, § 2152), was not unlawful so as to taint a note given for it; and in a suit on a note given for liquor, if no facts were found to show that the liquor for which it was given belonged to the forbidden class, it could not be presumed that it did.—Brown v. McHugh, 36 Mich. 433.

¶ 613. A note was given by a debtor to an execution creditor to obtain a release from a levy, and was indorsed in the name of a firm by one of the partners. There was no showing that the firm received any consideration, or that one of the partners consented to the indorsement. Held, that it must be presumed that it was purely an accommodation indorsement, and that the creditor, who of course was not a bona fide holder, was privy to all the facts.—Heffron v. Hanaford, 40 Mich. 305.

¶ 614. A negotiable promissory note presumes consideration even though "for value received" is not contained in the instrument.—Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658.

¶ 615. The presumption of consideration for a promissory note when rebutted disappears as evidence in the case, unless upon consideration of the whole testimony on both sides the weight of evidence is equally balanced; then the presumption arising from the usual course of business in regard to commercial paper entitles plaintiff to recover.—Manistee National Bank v. Seymour, 64 Mich. 59.

¶ 616. The presumption arising from the existence of a promissory note, unless in the hands of a bona fide holder, may be overcome by credible testimony. Thus, a mortgage and a note were adjudged to be fabricated, and the bill to foreclose dismissed, on proof that the mortgagee was a grasping money-lender, unlikely to run risks, but the mortgage was for a large sum, on property of little value, contained no release of dower, and had been assigned, without any apparent consideration, to a nonresident brother of the mortgagee, in whose name the foreclosure suit was brought. Matteson v. Morris, 40 Mich. 52.

¶ 617. In the absence of anything to the contrary a note is presumed to have been made at the place where it bears date.—Finch v. Calkins, 183 Mich. 298.

¶ 618. An indorsee suing the indorser in justice's court is presumed to be the owner of the paper on which the suit is brought.—Wilson Sewing Machine Co. v. Spears, 50 Mich. 534.

¶ 619. The indorsement and delivery o negotiable instrument to another is presu tive evidence of his ownership, but this p sumption is not conclusive; it may be butted by showing that the title is still the original maker.—Reed v. McCready, Mich. 532.

¶ 620. Neglect to protest a note and g notice to an indorser is conclusively p sumed to injure him, and the contrary can be shown.—Whitten v. Wright, 34 Mich. Smith v. Long, 40 Mich. 555.

¶ 621. The presumption which exists favor of written instruments cannot be ov come except upon evidence from which an ference of duress, deception, misrepresen tion, substitution, or artifice is clearly ducible.—Mishawaka Woolen Mfg. Co. Stanton, 188 Mich. 237.

¶ 622. The indorser of a note for wh benefit it was discounted does not, in co quence of that fact, incur any other liabil than that of his indorsement; and proof that fact is, therefore, irrelevant in a s against him.—Newberry v. Trowbridge, Mich. 263.

¶ 623. Proof is irrelevant that a note renewal of which the one in suit was gi was purchased of the maker thereof by indorser for less than its face; as no s evidence could change the nature of indorser's contract, or excuse a failure take the necessary steps to charge him u it.—Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 26

¶ 624. In an action upon a promiss note it was held error to refuse to admit evidence a certain contract, and certain sp fied facts in connection with it, if there w anything in them to materially change nature of the obligation created by the n and the effect of the other evidence, or wh would constitute a defense to the action or any part of it.—Preston v. Whitney, 23 Mich. 260.

¶ 625. When the defense of fraudulent alteration of a promissory note as to rate of interest is set up for the first time on a second trial, it is competent to read the affidavit of the defendant upon which a former default was opened, and the plea then introduced, as tending to show that the new defense was an afterthought and fictitious.—Tupper v. Kilduff, 26 Mich. 394.

¶ 626. In an action upon a negotiable note evidence cannot be received to show that the maker, at an interview with the payee, when interest on the note was arranged, but before the note fell due, made no objection to the payment of the note; nor can any inference against the good faith of the defense be drawn from the mere fact of payment of interest before the principal matured.—Buck v. First Nat. Bank, 27 Mich. 293.

¶ 627. H. made a note to R. and W. indorsed it. H. made a contract with R., and what he earned on it was to be turned in on the note. When he had done enough to pay the note, but before he had finished the job, he failed, stopped work and went into bankruptcy. R. thereupon sued W. on the note. Held, that the bankruptcy proceedings were immaterial to the suit.—Roberts v. Wilkinson, 34 Mich. 129.

¶ 628. An accommodation acceptor of paper may properly seek information from the agent or manager of a bank to which the paper is to be paid as to the condition of the person whom both understand to be really responsible on it. And in a suit by the drawee against the acceptor the latter may show his condition and the agent's statements or admissions.—Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358.

¶ 629. The agent of a manufacturing corporation was one of a firm organized for selling its goods. The firm owed money, and the agent furnished it from funds of the corporation, taking as security the note of one of the partners, on which the maker's father was surety. The note was payable to the corporation and was afterwards taken up and another given. In a suit on the last note defendants claimed that it had never been intended that it should be delivered to the payee. Held proper to refuse to allow defendants to show that certain members of the firm had, with others, projected a partnership for selling the plaintiff's goods some time before the note was given; or to show what funds were in the firm's hands and that the agent had charge of and used them; or what the surety's intention was, when he signed the first note, as to its delivery; or what property belonging to the firm the corporation had taken possession of on finding that their agent was short in his accounts.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. McKee, 51 Mich. 426.

¶ 630. Proceedings taken to establish a lien upon partnership property to satisfy a debt evidenced by their note are immaterial in an action on the note if the lien has not been enforced or anything realized from it.—Kerrick v. Stevens, 58 Mich. 297.

¶ 631. In an action upon a note given during infancy the question whether the maker was or was not emancipated by his father at the time of the note's execution cannot affect his liability, and it is irrelevant.—Tyler v. Gallop's Estate, 68 Mich. 185.

¶ 632. In suit upon an order drawn on defendant in plaintiff's favor it is not error to allow plaintiff to testify that he never looked to the drawer for pay after presenting the order to defendant.—Mitts v. McMorran, 85 Mich. 94.

¶ 633. A will whereby testatrix left a legacy of $2,000 to her mother is inadmissible in an action on notes alleged to have been given for the purchase of her mother's notes, since such will throws no light on the question.—Crampton v. Newton's Estate, 132 Mich. 149.

¶ 634. In an action by a bank against the indorser of a note, based on an alleged new promise to pay, it was competent for the officers of the bank who made an arrangement with such indorser for the filing of its claim against the maker's estate, to testify that they relied upon the indorser's promise to pay and in reliance thereon, presented the claim against the estate.—State Bank of St. Johns v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

¶ 634a. Where suit is brought in assumpsit with notice that a certain note made by defendant corporation will be introduced in evidence and defendant omits under oath to deny the execution of the note, it is admissible in evidence, and establishes a prima facie case.—Barnes v. Spencer & Barnes Co., 162 Mich. 509.

¶ 635. In an action on a promissory note where plaintiff claimed that an agreement was made for the exchange of such note for two smaller notes, and that such agreement was invalid because made on Sunday, and that he returned such smaller notes to the defendants, and defendants claimed that the agreement was made after midnight, and denied that such smaller notes were returned, but claimed that they were subsequently paid, held that the wife of one of the defendants was properly permitted to testify where the money came from that was used to pay such notes, as bearing upon the probabilities.—Prussia v. Bailey, 193 Mich. 77.

¶ 636. In an action on a promissory note where plaintiff claimed that an agreement was made for the exchange of such note for two smaller notes, and that such agreement was invalid because made on Sunday, and that he returned such smaller notes to the defendants, and defendants claimed that the agreement was made after midnight, and denied that such smaller notes were returned, but claimed that they were subsequently paid, held that evidence as to where plaintiff was on the Monday following the Sunday on which plaintiff claimed the agreement was made was properly excluded as immaterial.—Prussia v. Bailey, 193 Mich. 77.

¶ 637. In an action on a promissory note it was held competent to call defendant to rebut one of his own witnesses by producing his account book, and identifying as in his own handwriting an entry showing the date of a certain note payable to the same person to be earlier than that of the note in suit, the purpose being to show that the latter was not the note concerning which the witness had testified.—Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104.

¶ 638. Where indorsers, being sued by a bank, alleged that their indorsements were secured by the fraudulent representations of plaintiff's president as to the solvency of the maker of the notes indorsed by them, evidence that but for this communication defendants would have taken steps to collect the debt from the maker's other property was irrelevant and prejudicial.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

§ 114. ——As to ownership of instrument and right to sue.

Possession of instrument as evidence of plaintiff's right to sue on it, see also ante § 90.

¶ 639. The joint ownership by plaintiffs of a negotiable promissory note indorsed in blank and put in evidence without objection may be shown by testimony that they bought it from the payee.—Cilley v. Van Patten, 68 Mich. 80.

¶ 640. In a suit on a note by an indorsee it is irrelevant that the plaintiff had put in a claim against the estate of the indorser.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 293.

§ 115. ——As to consideration.

Jury questions as to consideration, see post § 131.
Parol evidence as to true consideration, see Evidence § 161.
Issues and proof as to consideration, see ante § 106.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to consideration, see post § 124.

¶ 641. In an action on a negotiable promissory note evidence of what the person of whom the plaintiff bought the note paid for it, he being a bona fide holder before maturity, is inadmissible.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96.

¶ 642. Where the evidence is direct, clear and uncontradicted that the plaintiff is a bona fide purchaser of a note sued upon, the court, trying the case without a jury, may refuse to permit the defendant to inquire into or contest the consideration.—Polhemus v. Ann Arbor Savings Bank, 27 Mich. 44.

¶ 643. In an action upon a promissory note given in satisfaction of a judgment upon an original subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, and defended for want of consideration, evidence as to the misfortunes or bad management of the corporation is irrelevant.—Gould v. Vaughan, 30 Mich. 376.

¶ 644. Where plaintiff is presumptively a bona fide holder, and before any evidence has been introduced to impeach his position as such, it is not error to exclude evidence that the note sued upon was obtained without consideration and by false inducements and fraudulent representations.—Wright v. Irwin, 33 Mich. 32.

¶ 645. Parol evidence is admissible as to the consideration of an indorsement, or to show that it was obtained by fraud or merely to facilitate collection, or had been fraudulently perverted.—Ortmann v. Canadian Bank of Commerce, 39 Mich. 518.

¶ 646. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary a note so as to show a different consideration from that expressed on its face.—Johnson v. Sutherland, 39 Mich. 579.

¶ 647. Where the execution of a corporate note is admitted, evidence in defense to show that it was given to satisfy a claim against another is inadmissible to show want of consideration; it would only show that the consideration was another's liability, and defendant's right to assume the liability cannot be questioned if execution has been admitted.—Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Edson, 41 Mich. 678.

¶ 648. Where a written agreement is shown as consideration for a note, but not referring to it or indicating what the entire dealings were, evidence of additional consideration is admissible.—Taylor v. Dansby, 42 Mich. 82.

¶ 649. B. and F. were litigating in equity the ownership of certain logs, and B. filed a separate bill to restrain F. from interfering with them. In this latter proceeding a receiver was appointed by consent of the parties, and he, being authorized to sell the logs, delivered them to F. and took his notes therefor, upon which he afterwards brought suit. The bill in the last-mentioned suit was dismissed, and the receiver thus became a mere bailee for the party actually entitled to the logs. Held, that in the suit by the receiver on the notes F. had a right to show that it was understood when they were given that they were to be paid only if the logs should be adjudged not to belong to him, and that as the logs were in fact his, the notes were without consideration.—Maltz v. Fletcher, 52 Mich. 484.

¶ 650. Where a deed had been given in settlement of a debt, and notes were also given for an alleged balance, the makers resisted suit on the notes on the ground that as the deed covered the debt they were without consideration. Held, that they could put the deed in evidence as an element bearing on the consideration.—Duflo v. Juif, 63 Mich. 513.

¶ 651. In an action on a note, where the sole defense is an entire failure of consideration, evidence of false representations in sales to other parties similar to those upon which the note in suit was obtained are inadmissible to establish a defense that the goods were not as represented and the other promises were false.—Altman v. Fowler, 70 Mich. 57.

¶ 652. Notwithstanding the evidence is very strong on the issue, it is competent for plaintiff to testify whether an alleged settlement with defendant was final for which the note in suit was given, that point being one on which defendant has raised a dispute and has testified.—Eastman v. Cleaver, 72 Mich. 167.

¶ 653. In a suit upon a note the defendant may introduce in evidence the bond received by him as a part of the transaction in which the note was given, the two papers being construed together as showing the true nature of the contract.—Goodrich v. McDonald, 77 Mich. 486.

¶ 654. The contract containing a guaranty of a stallion and evidence of the breach thereof, in a suit upon certain notes given in payment for such animal, is rightly admitted, where there is evidence to show that the plaintiffs, indorsees of such notes, were not bona fide purchasers.—Carey v. Nissle, 145 Mich. 383.

¶ 655. In an action on a promissory note evidence as to the existence of a contemporaneous indebtedness of the maker to the payee, for which the note might have been given and probably was given, is admissible.—Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416.

§ 116. ——As to fraud, duress or mistake.

Jury questions as to fraud, duress and mistake, see post § 132.

Cross-examination as to notice or fraud, see Examination of Witnesses § 53.

¶ 656. In an action against copartners upon a promissory note signed with the firm name, the plaintiff simply showed the existence of the firm and who composed it; the making of the note by one of the firm in the firm name; the indorsement by the payee over to the plaintiff, the ownership by the plaintiff and the amounts due on it. Held, that it could not be assumed that this conclusively established the plaintiff's cause of action to the exclusion of evidence tending to show that the note was fraudulent in its inception as against the copartnership, and that the payee not only knew this, but was a party to the fraud.—Carrier v. Cameron, 31 Mich. 373.

¶ 657. Plaintiff having been shown not to be a bona fide holder, it was error to exclude evidence that the only inducement for giving the note sued on was an untrue statement of fact.—Wright v. Irwin, 33 Mich. 32.

¶ 658. Where, in an action upon a note, the defense of fraud is raised, and evidence is introduced showing that other notes were obtained by the same parties by a similar fraud, and that early in 1886 the fraud was talked of in the community, and that plaintiff, who bought the note of the payee, must have known of it, plaintiff can show by one who bought similar notes that the fraud was not known until the summer of 1886.—Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389.

¶ 659. In an action upon a note given for "Bohemian oats" defendant set up the defenses of fraud and failure of consideration. Held, that evidence tending to show that defendant, after giving the note, had taken steps to join a fraudulent association similar to that to which the payee of the note belonged, was immaterial and inadmissible.—Sutton v. Beckwith, 68 Mich. 303.

¶ 660. Where, in an action upon a promissory note given by the grantee in a quit-claim deed in part consideration therefor, the defense interposed is want of consideration in that the grantor had no title to convey, but that an attorney represented to defendant that there was an outstanding title, evidence by such attorney that no representation was made as to the nature of the title at the time the deed was given is admissible to show that the grantor practiced no deceit.—Walton v. Mason, 109 Mich. 486.

¶ 661. Where, in an action upon a promissory note brought by a transferee thereof, there is proof of fraud in the inception of the instrument, the burden of showing a bona fide purchase is upon plaintiff; but if plaintiff, at the outset, makes a prima facie case of bona fide holding, it is not error to exclude evidence of such fraud until such prima facie case has been attacked by evidence raising a question of fact in relation thereto.—Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Blue, 110 Mich. 31.

¶ 662. In an action on a promissory note brought by an indorsee, it is within the court's discretion to exclude evidence of fraud until the plaintiff's prima facie proof of bona fide ownership is contradicted by sufficient testimony to raise a question for the jury.—Shaw, Kendall & Co. v. Brown, 128 Mich. 573.

¶ 663. In an action on promissory notes where defendants gave notice of fraud in the inception of the notes, and plaintiff gave evidence of bona fides, it was incumbent upon defendant to show some evidence of mala fides before introducing evidence of the fraud.—Fredonia Nat. Bank v. Tommel, 131 Mich. 674.

¶ 664. It is improper to receive in evidence in an action on a promissory note, testimony of other alleged fraudulent dealings of plaintiff not connected with the transaction in issue.—Smith v. Nixon, 145 Mich. 593.

¶ 665. Parol evidence that defendant's signature to the note in suit was obtained after the note's execution and delivery by the payee's request and on his promise that defendant should not be held thereon, and that his signature was only desired to aid in securing prompt payment by the real maker, who knew nothing of this transaction, is not admissible to show fraud, or that the note was delivered conditionally or for a specific purpose. But in an action by the original payee it is admissible to show that there was no consideration for the undertaking.—Kulenkamp v. Groff, 71 Mich. 675.

§ 117. ——As to execution of instrument and authority to make or transfer.

Evidence of making of contract of which notes are part, see also Contracts § 312.
Secondary evidence of note sued on without notice to produce, see Evidence § 146.
Evidence to rebut existence of note claimed to have been last in possession of decedent, see Evidence ¶ 439.

¶ 666. In an action on a note given in consideration of an agreement to secure the respondent in bastardy proceedings from damages arising from the complaint, proof that the injured woman agreed to be satisfied with the arrangement made was no more than proof of its execution, and was held admissible.—Taylor v. Dansby, 42 Mich. 82.

¶ 667. In an action under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10183, 10184, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 12828, 12829, for money loaned evidenced by a promissory note which had been lost, evidence was properly admitted to show t transaction on which the note was based tending to prove that the note had be given.—Sick v. Schug, 179 Mich. 578.

¶ 668. A corporation, sued on renew notes given to take up individual obligatio can show that it formally repudiated t notes when they came to its knowledge. McLellan v. Detroit File Works, 56 Mic 579.

¶ 669. Under Circuit Court Rule 79, promissory note, a copy of which was tached to and served with the declaratio may be read in evidence under the comm counts, without proof of the signature, whe its execution is not denied on oath.—Hoa v. Little, 7 Mich. 468.

¶ 670. Where a draft declared upon justice's court has not been filed, and proof of the signature has been given, it error to admit it in evidence against obj tion.—Colbath v. Jones, 28 Mich. 280.

¶ 671. A promissory note made payable C. T. Allen, cashier, or order, indicates th it was made to him not as an individual, b as a bank officer, and that it was a contra with the bank; and in a suit upon it by t bank no indorsement by such cashier is necessary to the admission of the note in evidence.—Garton v. Union City Nat. Bank, 34 Mich. 279.

¶ 672. When payees made defendant have indorsed in blank, and have failed to deny execution, objection to introduction of note in evidence because indorsements are not proved will not avail; payee's indorsement is thereby admitted, and subsequent indorsements need not be proved.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

¶ 673. A note is admissible in evidence under the money counts, under Comp. L. 1871, § 5777, How. St. § 7346, when a copy is filed and served with the declaration, although the action on the note, on its face, appears to be barred by the statute of limitations.—Michael v. Tuttle, 37 Mich. 502.

¶ 674. As between the original parties to a note, parol evidence is admissible to show that the maker, who is signing the note added "Agt." to his name, executed the note in a representative capacity, and that the payee so understood.—Keidan v. Winegar, 95 Mich. 430.

¶ 675. The maker of a promissory note, upon its delivery to him for a temporary purpose, cannot, by marking it "Paid" and retaining it upon the claim that he is entitled to a credit equivalent to the balance due thereon, destroy the character of the note as an existing obligation or as evidence of the indebtedness, but the same will be admissible upon explanation being made of its condition.—Liesemer v. Burg, 106 Mich. 124.

¶ 676. Parol evidence is admissible to show that indorsers whose indorsements are successive were accommodation indorsers, and were, by agreement among themselves, cosureties, and so liable to contribution.—Farwell v. Ensign, 66 Mich. 600.

¶ 677. A joint maker of a note cannot show a parol agreement limiting his liability to that of a mere indorser entitled to notice of nonpayment.—Aultman & Taylor Co. v. Gorham, 87 Mich. 233.

¶ 678. Whether a written contract of sale, executed some days before, in accordance with the terms of which the notes in suit were given, could properly be examined by the court for the purpose of determining the character of the transaction as bearing upon the negotiability of the notes in case the recitals in the notes had left the matter in doubt, quære.—Choate v. Stevens, 116 Mich. 28.

¶ 679. The real payees of a negotiable note have the right to transfer by indorsement; and if the name of another person who never had any interest in the note appears thereon as a payee, evidence aliunde is admissible to show that he was not a payee, and thus the indorsee's title will be supported.—Pease v. Dwight, 6 How. (U. S.) 190, 12 L. ed. 399.

§ 119. ——As to bona fide holding.

What constitutes bona fide holding, see ante XIII, A.
Materiality of motives of purchaser, see also ante ¶ 393.
Burden of proof as to bona fide holding, see ante § 110.

Res gestæ showing knowledge or notice, see also Evidence § 451.
Evidence and proof of good faith and value in transfer of bonds, see also Municipal Bonds § 16.
Cross-examination as to notice, see Examination of Witnesses § 53.

¶ 680. Where it appears that one who claimed to be the bona fide holder of promissory notes had, before buying them, consulted an attorney on the street as to being able to collect them, evidence of the value of such advice is inadmissible, as being too remote to support an inference that the purchaser of the notes had contemplated litigation.—Tupper v. Kilduff, 26 Mich. 394.

¶ 681. In an action by an indorsee if the defendant alleges the note to have been fraudulent and that the plaintiff knew it, and shows that other notes were fraudulently obtained and sold to third parties before maturity. The plaintiff cannot show, on cross-examination, that such purchasers were reputable citizens.—Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389.

¶ 682. Where indorsers defend on the ground that their indorsements were secured by the fraudulent representations of the president of plaintiff bank, evidence that another banker told such president that the maker of the notes was in bad condition and would soon fail is inadmissible to show notice to him when not shown to have occurred before defendants took the last of the notes in suit.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 683. In an action on a note given by one partner payable to himself and transferred after maturity and a few days prior to the dissolution of the partnership to the plaintiff, where the bona fide character of the plaintiff's purchase of the note is challenged by the other partner, who attacks it as without consideration and as fraudulent it is competent to inquire of plaintiff on cross-examination as bearing upon the question of whether he in fact held the note at the time he had paid the other partner certain sums of money in excess of the amount due on the note, and upon the further question of whether it was a bona fide note and believed by him to be such, his conduct toward the other partner being inconsistent with his holding a long past due note against him.—Carpenter v. Greenop, 84 Mich. 49.

¶ 684. Circumstances of suspicion, or even gross negligence, are merely admissible as evidence tending to show mala fides on the part of the purchaser of a promissory note, but do not of themselves preclude him from recovery.—Hakes v. Thayer, 165 Mich. 476.

¶ 685. It was competent to show the knowledge of plaintiff's officers as to the pecuniary standing, methods, and dealings of a bank and its executive officer, which issued a fraudulently certified check, in an action against the receiver of such bank, upon such check, and to show the volume of similar business done, the terms upon which it was done, whether transactions were ordinary or usual in their character, and to show that the business done with such executive officer was not communicated to or known by plaintiff's directors; where the crucial question in such action was whether such check was purchased upon an honest belief of the validity of the certification, since such testimony naturally raised doubt of such belief.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 686. Evidence tending to show that printed official statements of the bank which fraudulently certified a check were brought to the knowledge of plaintiff's officers, that such statements contained an item of only $10,000 of certified checks, and that plaintiff's officers must have known that it held a much greater amount of such checks at the time, was admissible, where in an action upon such fraudulently certified check, the question of plaintiff's good faith in purchasing such check was at issue.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 687. Where a bank in seeking to show that it gave value for a check which had been fraudulently obtained by the payee, in order to show the latter's indebtedness to it, introduced drafts and other checks which had been "kited" by the payee, the drawer may show that such paper represents illegal transactions.—People's State Bank v. Miller, 185 Mich. 565.

§ 120. ——As to presentment, demand, protest and dishonor.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 127.

Jury questions as to presentment, demand, protest and notice of dishonor, see post § 134.

Conclusion of notary as witness that note was dishonored, see Evidence ¶ 1273.

¶ 688. Where an indorser sued on a n or bill does not annex to his plea an affids denying receipt of notice of nonpayment notary's certificate under seal is evidence such notice.—Fish v. First Nat. Bank Detroit, 42 Mich. 203; First Nat. Bank Negaunee v. Freeman, 47 Mich. 408.

¶ 689. Evidence of a notary who made a certificate of protest of a pron sory note, that, while he does not recol mailing notice of dishonor to the indor he has no doubt, from the fact that it his habit to mail such notice upon protest a note, that he did so upon the occasion question, as recited in his certificate, is c petent as tending to show notice of dishor —Martin v. Smith, 108 Mich. 278.

¶ 690. A certificate of protest made dated more than six months after the sentment is nevertheless prima facie dence of the facts therein stated.—Un Nat. Bank v. Williams Milling Co., 117 M 535.

¶ 691. Testimony as to the nonreceipt notice of dishonor of a promissory note an indorser is immaterial in an action such note against such indorser where properly executed certificate of the not showing such mailing is introduced in dence.—First Nat. Bank of Manistee v. S Watch Case Co., 187 Mich. 224.

¶ 691a. Where a disinterested witness notary public, testifies in an action aga an indorser upon a promissory note notice of dishonor was properly mailed, timony of the nonreceipt of such notic immaterial.—First Nat. Bank of Maniste Star Watch Case Co., 187 Mich. 224.

§ 121. ——As to payment or discharge.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as payment and discharge, see post §

Jury questions as to payment and discha see post § 135.

Parol evidence as to time, manner or det of payment, see Evidence §§ 176, 177.

¶ 692. In a suit upon a promissory which the plaintiff in interest had purcha at a receiver's sale, plaintiff being enti to whatever is due on it, evidence on part of defendant to show what was st at the time of the sale to be due on the is not admissible when not offered in nection with proof of some payment m to the receiver, and for the purpose of sh ing such payment.—Newberry v. Tr bridge, 13 Mich. 263.

¶ 693. In an action on a promissory the mere fact that T. has sent his check A. for the difference between the amo due to himself as paid on A.'s note, and own indebtedness to A., does not show ei payment or settlement of such amount, it cannot be shown by A.—Tredway v. tisdel, 86 Mich. 82.

¶ 694. In an action upon a promissory note defended by an accommodation maker on the ground that the note had been altered, it is error to allow plaintiff, the payee, to be cross-examined by defendant as to his knowledge about the maker's becoming insolvent after the note was given, and about the maker's conveying property to him; where there was no issue of payment.—Weidman v. Symes, 116 Mich. 619.

¶ 695. In an action against several joint obligors on a note, proceedings before commissioners on the allowance of a claim against the estate of a deceased obligor for his pro rata liability under the note, is admissible to show what portion of the joint obligation had been paid by decedent's estate.—McKinley v. Small, 178 Mich. 555.

¶ 696. One seeking to enforce notes growing out of several successive transactions in one of which the defendants claim that some of the notes in suit were satisfied should be allowed to cross-examine the defendants fully pertaining to the details of the alleged settlement.—Port Huron Engine & Thresher Co. v. Bloom, 183 Mich. 180.

¶ 697. Where indorsers, being sued by a bank, alleged that their indorsements were secured by the fraudulent representations of plaintiff's president as to the solvency of the maker of the notes indorsed by them, evidence to show payment, that the president, after mortgages had been executed to him by the maker in trust to pay the maker's debts, told defendants that the mortgages covered enough property to pay all the debts, and that defendants need not fear about their liability was irrelevant and extremely prejudicial.—Alpena National Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

§ 122. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

Sufficiency of evidence of fraud in procuring execution of notes, see Fraud § 50.

¶ 698. Proof of any one or more of the legal conditions necessary to charge an indorser has no tendency whatever to prove a compliance with the rest.—Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424.

¶ 699. A mere inference that a note sued on is identical with a note referred to by a witness cannot support a judgment.—Nelson v. Dutton, 51 Mich. 416.

¶ 700. In an action by a bank against indorsers on a note, a prima facie case was made by proving execution and indorsement of the note in suit, and thereupon the burden was upon the indorsers to show that the first note was not protested, and that they were discharged as indorsers thereof, and failing to do so, the assumption was that when the first renewal note was given, they were still liable on the first note.—Citizens Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Platt, 135 Mich. 267.

¶ 701. Where the evidence of a justice, before whom an action on a note was tried, warrants the conclusion that the note was produced, and filed, and canceled by the judgment on the return day, it is sufficient to support a judgment without other proof of execution, and whether complainant appeared or not, where it is not shown that any plea was filed nor any denial of the execution of the note under oath.—O'Donnell v. Wade, 151 Mich. 103.

¶ 702. In an action upon a promissory note, made according to the laws of Ontario and payable in such province, a husband who was then residing in the province being the maker and his wife the indorser, a prima facie case against the wife is established by proof of the note and her signature, there being no disability by coverture in such province.—Millar v. Hilton, 189 Mich. 635.

¶ 703. In an action against the drawer of a check dishonored on account of failure of the bank, evidence that the drawer knew the bank was not strong is not sufficient to raise an inference or warrant an instruction implying positive fraud on the part of the drawer so as to enable the plaintiff to recover, notwithstanding improper presentation and lack of notice of dishonor.—Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Fincher, 129 Mich. 687.

¶ 704. In an action upon a promissory note for $100 to the defense that it was void under the prohibitory liquor law is not sustained as matter of law by proof that the payee was a grocer and four dollars of it was for liquor got at his store.—Brown v. McHugh, 36 Mich. 433.

¶ 705. The defense that a note was void under the prohibitory liquor law was not made out by a finding merely that part of its consideration was intoxicating liquors.—Brown v. McHugh, 36 Mich. 433.

¶ 706. Where a copy of a promissory note and its indorsement is served with the declaration, and the note and indorsement are read in evidence without objection, and no evidence is given tending to disprove the indorsement, any further proof of the indorsement is unnecessary.—Thatcher v. West River Nat. Bank of Jamaica, Vermont, 19 Mich. 196.

¶ 707. An admission by a subsequent indorser of a note that he signed under an agreement to become liable as cosurety is not established by evidence merely that he told the holder, after maturity, that he would see the prior indorser, and arrange so that the latter and himself would pay the note.—Harrah v. Doherty, 111 Mich. 175.

¶ 708. In assumpsit by money counts with notice of a promissory note to a corporation, where the declaration does not set out an indorsement to the plaintiff and plea is of general issue and on trial the plaintiff introduces the note with the indorsement of the original payee, by one as receiver, without proof of the receiver's authority to indorse, the judgment should be for the defendant.—St. Johns Table Co. v. Brown, 126 Mich. 592.

¶ 709. Recognition of a debt does not establish a right of action upon an unauthorized note, though it might strengthen evidence otherwise given of ratification.—Carleton v. Jenness, 42 Mich. 110.

¶ 710. The addition of the word "surety" to the signature of one of the makers of a joint and several note is some evidence of the relations of the makers to each other.—Ensign v. Dunn, 181 Mich. 456.

§ 123. ——As to ownership of instrument and right to sue upon it.

Admissibility of evidence as to ownership of instrument and right to sue, see ante § 114.

Right to sue negotiable paper generally, see ante § 90.

Jury questions as to ownership of instrument and right to sue, see post § 130.

Possession of promissory note by payee as prima facie evidence of delivery, see Execution of Instruments ¶ 211.

¶ 711. Where, upon the trial, the plaintiff produces the promissory note sued on, it would ordinarily raise the presumption that the state of facts authorizing him to sue on it in his own name existed when the suit began; but the defendant may rebut the presumption by evidence to the contrary, and defeat the action.—Hovey v. Sebring, 24 Mich. 232.

¶ 712. Where suit is brought upon assigned paper the testimony of one of the plaintiffs that they owned the paper sued upon, when considered in connection with his further statement that such ownership was derived from the original party thereto, through its attorney, the person whose name was signed to the aforesaid assignment, is construed as no more than the inference of the witness as to the effect of the written form of assignment, and as adding nothing to the proof of ownership afforded by that writing.—Hinkley v. Weatherwax, 35 Mich. 510.

¶ 713. Title to a promissory note by equitable assignment is sufficiently made out in an action thereon in justice's court against the maker, if it appears that plaintiffs are the successors to the firm to which it was made payable; and proof of indorsement is needless.—Gray v. Wilcox, 56 Mich. 58.

¶ 714. Ownership of a note in plaintiff is not fully established in assumpsit, where the note was made payable "to the F. N. Bank of B., Idaho, in favor of" plaintiff or order, and was indorsed with plaintiff's name, followed by an indorsement to the order of C. E. Bank "for collection, for account of F. N. Bank," and signed "John Huntoon, Cashier," and where a line is drawn through the words between the indorsed name of plaintiff and that of "John Huntoon"; and where there was no direct evidence to establish that "John Huntoon" was the cashier of either bank.—Pinkham v. Cockell, 77 Mich. 265.

¶ 715. Possession of a promissory note sued on, by a plaintiff, and its production by him upon the trial, are presumptive evidence of the plaintiff's title or his right to sue, and that such right existed when the suit was commenced, and the plaintiff need not be the real or beneficial owner, to entitle him to recovery. The maker of a note has the right to rebut such presumption and show that the plaintiff has no title, or that he did not acquire title until after the commencement of the suit, and thus defeat recovery thereon in such action. Accordingly a plaintiff who produces acceptances which belong to a bank and which were duly indorsed by an authorized agent of the bank, at a trial, establishes the fact of ownership.—Hogan v. Dreifus, 121 Mich. 453.

¶ 716. An indorsement on a note by defendant maker of payments of interest by plaintiff holder, coupled with testimony of defendant that said indorsements were entered as the payments were made, establishes a prima facie case of ownership by plaintiff, entitling him to recover under Act No. 265, Pub. Acts 1905, §§ 18, 53, 61.—General Conference Ass'n of Seventh-Day Adventists v. Michigan Sanitarium & Benevolent Ass'n, 166 Mich. 504.

¶ 717. In a suit on a note, plaintiff put in evidence a deposition of a Canadian advocate setting out the Canadian law and stating that thereunder one Ruiter, as universal legatee, was entitled to administer and had authority to indorse and deliver said note to plaintiff. Held, the proof was sufficient that Ruiter owned the note.—General Conference Ass'n of Seventh-Day Adventists v. Michigan Sanitarium & Benevolent Ass'n, 166 Mich. 504.

§ 124. ——As to consideration.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to consideration, see ante §§ 109, 112.

Admissibility of evidence as to consideration, see ante § 115.

Jury questions as to consideration, see post § 131.

¶ 718. Defendants were large brewers, and had a contract with an ice company to supply them with ice during the season of 1880 at $1.75 a ton, or $2 if the crop was short. The contract was made in November, 1879. The following winter was so mild that the ice crop was a failure. In May defendants were notified by the ice company that no more ice would be furnished them under the contract. Defendants had then on hand a considerable amount of beer that would be spoiled without ice, and under stress of the circumstances they made a new arrangement with the ice company, and agreed to pay $3.50 per ton for the ice. At this rate ice was received and paid for afterwards. A note given for ice at this rate in October being sued, held, that the note was not without consideration, and that the refusal of the ice company to perform its contract, and the exaction of a higher price, was not legal duress.—Goebel v. Linn, 47 Mich. 489.

¶ 719. In an action between maker and payee upon a promissory note, if the whole evidence, upon both sides, leaves it doubtful whether there was a good consideration for the note, plaintiff fails to establish case and defendant is entitled to a verdict.—Manistee National Bank v. Seymour, 64 Mich. 59.

¶ 720. The admission of value received in a note containing power of attorney to confess judgment is prima facie sufficient to show that the promise contained in the note is supported by an adequate consideration.—Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. McKittrick, 86 Mich. 191.

¶ 721. A note reciting that it is for value received imports upon its face that it was given for a valuable consideration; but no recovery can be had upon it by the payee unless all the evidence satisfies the jury by a preponderance of proof that value was in fact received.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 722. Want of consideration for a note executed by defendant to decedent in her lifetime is established where it is shown that the note was executed merely as a memorandum of a previous transaction, whereby decedent paid to defendant the amount of the note in consideration of his agreeing to use the same in the construction of a house where she might make her home and receive maintenance and support, which agreement was carried out to the satisfaction of decedent.—Kelley v. Guy, 116 Mich. 43.

¶ 723. Where uncontradicted testimony shows that deceased, a married woman, purchased her mother's notes and gave her own notes therefor, the jury should not be permitted to find that her notes were without consideration.—Crampton v. Newton's Estate, 132 Mich. 149.

¶ 724. In a suit upon a note which is introduced in evidence, the duty of introducing evidence to show want of consideration is upon defendant but he is not required to prove by a preponderance of testimony that there was no consideration.—Farnsworth v. Fraser, 137 Mich. 296.

¶ 725. Recovery on a promissory note cannot be defeated by showing a contemporaneous parol agreement that the note was not to be enforced in a certain contingency, though such agreement was offered to show partial or total failure of consideration.—Central Sav. Bank v. O'Connor, 139 Mich. 82.

§ 125. ——As to accommodation signatures.

Accommodation signatures and liability thereon, see ante XI.

Sufficiency of evidence to show liability of estate for notes made for accommodation of decedent though in form indorsed to him, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 630.

¶ 726. Testimony held to show that one maker of a note against whose estate the note was presented as a claim by the other maker was only an accommodation maker.—Devereaux v. Phillips' Estate, 97 Mich. 104.

¶ 727. Testimony that one of the two signers of a note, since deceased, stated that the other wanted some money "and I signed his note to M. for $500" and "helped" him, also that at the time "I hadn't sold my wheat and hadn't the money on hand; but I will try and take care of that note so that it shan't trouble him," and also that he referred to it as "his" (the other maker's note), shows that it was signed by decedent as an accommodation maker.—Devereaux v. Phillips' Estate, 97 Mich. 104.

¶ 728. That a note was for accommodation was supported by a letter in evidence from the since deceased maker transmitting the note to the payee and stating that it was for the latter's accommodation and the testimony of the payee to the same fact.—Baker v. Union Trust Co., 129 Mich. 581.

¶ 729. Campbell shipped lumber on vessels owned by Graham, who had a partnership interest with him. Coumbe was Campbell's agent, and was to receive half the profits of the lumber business. It was arranged that Coumbe should settle freight bills with Graham by accepting Graham's drafts on the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and that the drafts were to be taken up by Campbell out of the proceeds of sales. In an action by the bank against Coumbe upon these acceptances it was held (1) that defendant's testimony that he told Graham and Campbell that he would accept the drafts if they would not hold him responsible, and that he was not himself a partner, and was neither expected nor bound to provide for freight, would justify the jury in finding that the acceptances were accommodation acceptances; (2) that in order to prove the relations of the parties and the consideration for the acceptances defendant might properly show the details of the shipments, including bills of lading and accounts of the several transactions; (3) that the jury might consider plaintiff's course in discounting the drafts before acceptance and in treating the maker as the primary debtor.—

Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358.

§ 126. ——As to bona fide holding.

What constitutes bona fide holding, see ante XIII, A.

Burden of proof as to bona fide holding, see ante § 110.

Admissibility of evidence as to bona fide holding, see ante § 119.

Jury questions as to bona fides of purchaser, see post § 133.

Instructions as to bona fide holding, see post § 139.

¶ 730. Where, in a suit on a note that is shown to be fraudulent in its inception as between the original parties, the only proof explaining the character of the plaintiff's holding of it is that he is "owner" of it, and that the payee indorsed it over to him before maturity, the inference would be that he gave no value and was not a bona fide holder, as it must be intended, in that state of things, that the original party, not being able to sue upon the instrument himself, turned it over to another to sue on it for his benefit.—Carrier v. Cameron, 31 Mich. 373.

¶ 731. Evidence that plaintiff, in purchasing the note in suit and before delivering the alleged consideration therefor, was told it was given in a wheat deal and admitted having made no further inquiry, together with the almost common and universal knowledge that wheat and oat deals were being fraudulently made, tended to show that he was not a bona fide holder without notice.—Goodrich v. McDonald, 77 Mich. 486.

¶ 732. Evidence held insufficient to support a finding of the court that plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser of the note sued upon; there being no competent testimony to support the further necessary finding that plaintiff's alleged agent had possession of plaintiff's stock at the time of the sale of certain other stock to defendant, or during the negotiations which led up to its sale, and the giving of the note in payment for the same.—Henneberger v. Matter, 88 Mich. 396.

¶ 733. An admission by counsel, at the hearing of a suit to enforce contribution to the payment of a judgment upon township bonds which were illegal in the payee's hands, that the judgment-plaintiff became the owner of the bonds through one who had "purchased" them from a specified person, is not equivalent to a showing that they were at some time held by one who had purchased them in good faith before maturity, for a valuable consideration, and without notice of their invalidity.—Grant Township v. Township of Reno, 114 Mich. 41.

¶ 734. The fact that a fraud was perpetrated upon defendant maker in procuring from him the note sued upon does not te to contradict positive testimony of pla tiff indorsee's cashier that the note w bought before maturity for a certain su and that plaintiff had no notice that t maker had any defense or that there h been any fraud.—Drovers' Nat. Bank v. P vin, 116 Mich. 474.

¶ 735. The fact that the particular offi of a bank who acted for it in buying pa before the maturity thereof had no kno edge that such paper was fraudulently p cured from the maker, is sufficient pri facie without calling all the other officers show want of notice.—Drovers' Nat. Ba v. Potvin, 116 Mich. 474.

¶ 736. In an action by a bank upon promissory note taken by it before matur but originally obtained from the mal through a fraud perpetrated upon him the payee's agent, the fact that before note was made plaintiff recommended payee as responsible and reliable does connect it with the fraud or tend to sh it was not a bona fide purchaser; there ing no evidence to show that plaintiff or officers knew the payee was engaged in fraudulent business.—Drovers' Nat. Bank Potvin, 116 Mich. 474.

¶ 737. In an action against a partners upon partnership paper, the defense be that it was given in fraud of the other pa ners, proof of circumstances which wo put a prudent man upon inquiry is insu cient to defeat recovery, evidence being quired to show mala fides on the part the holder.—Stevens v. McLachlan, Mich. 285.

¶ 738. In an action by an alleged bona f indorsee of a check given for a gambl debt under the laws of Maine, which ma such a check void except in the hands o bona fide purchaser, testimony that agent of the holder had known of and h a prior draft on the defendant upon wh payment was stopped because given for gambling debt, that subsequently the pay of the check indorsed the check to him st ing that matters had been fixed up with defendant, and that the agent knew that parties were engaged in making bets a pools is sufficient to show that the plain is not a bona fide holder.—Maine Mile-Tra Ass'n v. Hammond, 127 Mich. 690.

¶ 739. A plaintiff bank received a certif check by a defendant bank for an amou in excess of the funds of the drawer hand. Defendant introduced in evidence scrap book of the plaintiff bank, which corded that the defendant bank had only small amount of outstanding certified chec Held, the scrap book was not evidence sho ing that plaintiff had knowledge of the il gal certification.—First Nat. Bank v. Uni Trust Co., 158 Mich. 94.

§ 127. ——As to presentment, demand and notice of dishonor.

¶ 740. A witness called to prove the dishonor of a note, who only testifies that he went to find the maker's last place of residence, and that the note was not paid, and that he then protested it, but does not testify concerning his knowledge of the residence, nor whether, if no personal demand was made, there was any valid reason for the omission, does not sufficiently show the dishonor.—Nevius v. Bank of Lansingburgh, 10 Mich. 547.

¶ 741. A promissory note payable at the I. bank was left with the C. bank for demand and protest. In an action upon the note, the testimony tended to show that it was the custom among the banks of the city to send messengers with commercial paper once a day to one of the banks for the purpose of clearing and adjusting their accounts; that it was the duty of each messenger, on receiving paper against the bank represented by him, to take the same to such bank, to be passed on by the cashier; that, on the day the note in suit matured, it was delivered to the messenger of the I. bank. It further appeared from the clearance books of both banks that, on the day in question, there was a balance of a certain amount in favor of the C. bank, but that an item corresponding with the amount of the note in suit was rejected by the I. bank, and the account adjusted by the giving of a check to the C. bank for the difference between the two amounts. A certificate of protest was made on the same day by the cashier of the C. bank, as notary public. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to warrant a finding of circumstances equivalent to timely presentment, demand, and nonpayment.—Martin v. Smith, 108 Mich. 278.

§ 128. ——As to payment or discharge.

Payment and discharge as defense, see ante §§ 24, 89.
Burden of proof as to payment, see ante § 111.
Admissibility of evidence as to payment and discharge, see ante § 121.
Jury questions as to payment and discharge, see post § 135.

¶ 742. A general receipt of payment, indorsed on the back of a draft by the payee before acceptance and before notice of dishonor, raises no presumption of payment by either drawer or drawee.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 543.

¶ 743. Where the makers of a note admit that they have not paid it, possession of the note by an indorser who produces it in court is prima facie evidence that he has paid it in full at maturity according to his obligation.—Alderton v. Williams, 130 Mich. 626.

¶ 744. Proof of an indorsement of a part payment in the handwriting of the maker on a note is proof from which an actual payment may be inferred.—Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416.

¶ 744a. On an issue of payment of a note so as to discharge the maker's liability to the indorser, the claim being that it was paid from partnership funds and that the indorser and maker were partners, evidence, that the indorser raised money by a mortgage on his individual property and deposited it in an account carried in the firm name and that the note was then paid by a check on that account, has no tendency to prove payment by the firm, where the note did not on its face appear to be a firm note and the account was one in which both firm and individual deposits were carried, both in the firm name.—Tredway v. Antisdel, 86 Mich. 82.

§ 129. Questions of law and fact.

What constitutes reasonable time in which to indorse demand paper, see ante ¶ 57.
General law as to jury questions, see Trial, VI.
Jury questions and instructions as to alterations, see Alteration of Instruments § 14.
Court and jury questions, see also Contracts, X, C.

¶ 745. What is a reasonable time after which a note payable on demand becomes overdue is a question for the court.—Carll v. Brown, 2 Mich. 401.

¶ 746. If the genuineness of the signature is admitted the note may be read in evidence, though defendant claims it has been altered. In thus submitting the note to the jury the court does not pass upon its genuineness, which is the jury's province.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96; Willett v. Shepard, 34 Mich. 106.

¶ 747. Where, in an action on a promissory note, the evidence tends to show on one side that defendant deliberately signed and delivered the note at the same time that he executed an agency contract in duplicate, and, on the other, that only the two other papers were executed, or mentioned, or read to him, and that there was no talk of a note, and no note shown or signed, there is no room for leaving any question of defendant's negligence to the jury.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113.

¶ 748. The identity of words in a written instrument is for the jury, who may be aided by parol evidence of facts connected with the giving of the paper. So held, where a note which purported in the margin to be for $50 was so written in the body that it was uncertain whether it was for fifty or sixty dollars.—Paine v. Ringold, 43 Mich. 341.

¶ 749. Whether original notes renewed by those in suit were given by defendant's husband, defendant signing them as surety only, and not to benefit her individual estate, is a question for the jury.—Holland v. Maus, 69 Mich. 180.

¶ 750. Testimony by the daughter of the maker of a promissory note regarding a conversation "at Christmas time in 1892 or 1893" in which the plaintiff's intestate stated that the note was not to be collected during the life time of the maker raises no issue for the jury where it is not shown to be subsequent to an indorsement dated August 2, 1893, reading "for a valuable consideration, I hereby agree to pay the said note in two years from date" and signed by the maker. —Walbridge v. Tuller, 125 Mich. 218.

¶ 751. In an action on a promissory note, which plaintiff claimed was for services, and which defendant claimed was given for plaintiff's accommodation, it appearing that defendant had given plaintiff two notes for personal services, and that plaintiff owned a third note of plaintiff's which he claimed he bought from another, who was the payee, and which defendant claimed was given for the accommodation of the plaintiff, and it further appearing that plaintiff had reduced two notes for services to judgment against plaintiff of the amount sued upon, held that it was a question for the jury whether the note sued upon was, or was not an accommodation note.—Alpert v. Plotkin, 189 Mich. 232.

¶ 752. In a suit on a promissory note copies of the same were introduced as secondary evidence upon proper proof of loss of the original. Plaintiff testified that he had seen the original and knew defendant's signature, and that defendant had indorsed said original. Defendant's evidence was contradictory and denied indorsement of the note by defendant. Held, the question of said indorsement was one of fact for the jury.—Gelder v. Welsh, 169 Mich. 490.

¶ 753. In an action by a bona fide purchaser on a promissory note dated June 29th, 1895, testimony by the defendant that the only note signed by him was one dated April 2nd, 1895, for a like amount and sent to him in a letter on March 23rd, which letter is introduced in corroboration, raises a question of alteration or identity as a fact for the jury.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Bowen, 125 Mich. 281.

§ 130. ——Ownership of instrument and right to sue upon it.

Evidence as to ownership of instrument and right to sue on it, see ante §§ 114, 123.

¶ 753a. Where a partner's testimony explicitly disclaims any interest in the note sued on, it is error to submit the question of ownership to the jury.—Weaver v. Bromley, 65 Mich. 212.

¶ 754. Where the authority of a holder of a promissory note to bring suit thereon in his own name is shown by the uncontradicted evidence in the case, it is error to submit that question to the jury.—Horrigan v. Wyman, 90 Mich. 121.

¶ 755. The question of the ownership of a note sued on is properly for the jury where there is testimony that plaintiff had sold it before maturity and also that he had redeemed it after it had gone to protest.—Big Rapids National Bank v. Peters, 120 Mich. 518.

¶ 756. Where the testimony as to the ownership of a note indorsed in blank is in conflict, it is proper to submit the question to the jury.—Molby v. Murray, 173 Mich. 143.

§ 131. ——Consideration.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to consideration, see ante §§ 109, 112.
Evidence as to consideration, see ante §§ 115, 124.

¶ 757. Whether a note in suit arose from the indebtedness of a firm or of an individual partner is a question for the jury in a suit thereon.—Roberts v. Pepple, 55 Mich. 367.

¶ 758. The presumption of consideration for decedent's post obit note arising from the recital therein that it was for value received, supplemented by testimony that she was the payee's mother, and that, a number of years before the note was given, personal property was furnished her and her husband by the payee under such circumstances that she recognized her obligation to make some compensation therefor, is sufficient evidence that it was given for a moral obligation to warrant its submission to the jury.—Van Buskirk v. Hoy, 114 Mich. 425.

§ 132. ——Fraud, duress or mistake.

Evidence as to fraud, duress and mistake, see ante § 116.

¶ 759. In an action against the drawer of a check dishonored on account of the failure of the bank, testimony that the bank books showed a balance for the defendant but that when the check was drawn he had accepted a draft and drawn other checks for practically the entire amount, contradicted by testimony of the defendant that the bank had sufficient funds to pay the check when it was received, raised an issue of fact for the jury, whether it was drawn and sent in fraud.—Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Fincher, 129 Mich. 687.

¶ 760. Where the defense to a promissory note was that it was obtained by fraudulent misrepresentations on a sale, and the evidence showed that the property for which it was given had been tendered back before suit was brought, and that the damage arising from the alleged deceit greatly exceeded the amount of the note, it was not error to refuse a peremptory charge that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the note; such evidence raised questions proper for the jury.—Browne v. Moore, 32 Mich. 254.

§ 133. ——Bona fides of purchaser or holder.

What constitutes bona fide holding, see ante XIII, A.

Burden of proof as to bona fide holding, see ante § 110.

Evidence as to bona fide holding, see ante §§ 119, 126.

Instructions as to bona fide holding, see post § 139.

¶ 761. The question of whether, upon conflicting evidence, a person is a bona fide holder of a note, is one for the jury.—Neyens v. Worthington, 150 Mich. 580.

¶ 762. It is for the jury to determine upon conflicting evidence whether the purchaser of a certificate of deposit took it in good faith.—Birch v. Fisher, 51 Mich. 36.

¶ 763. Evidence that the indorsee, grandmother of one of the payees of fraud-infected notes given for an agency for a patent fence, took the note in suit and other like ones at $100 for a face of $120, that in another trial indorsee testified that she knew there was "a fence contract behind the note" and that her grandson said he would protect her, and that about this time the other payee, her grand-daughter-in-law, lived at her house and that the business out of which the notes grew was prosecuted from her house, though she denied knowledge of the business, its nature, or the responsibility of the makers,—is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of the bona fides of plaintiff in purchasing such notes.—Fink v. Chambers, 95 Mich. 508.

¶ 764. Plaintiff's prima facie case of good faith in acquiring a fraudulently certified check is sufficiently disputed to make a case for the jury, where in an action against the receiver of an insolvent bank upon such check, there is testimony that the claimant had received from time to time many certified checks aggregating large sums of money, of such bank, some of which were withheld for a day or two from the clearing house at the request of the vice-president of such bank, and for a high rate of interest, that such vice-president during the same time was overdrawing his account largely with claimant in favor of such insolvent bank, and it was known by claimant's cashier that such vice-president was speculating in stocks during this time.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 765. In a suit upon a promissory note, the evidence showed that defendant's indorsement had been materially altered, that plaintiff's agent had examined the notes and noticed the erasure and the writing over it before he consummated the purchase of the note, and that he made no inquiries. Held, that this is sufficient to take the question of good faith to the jury, and to shift the burden of proving good faith to plaintiff.—Custard v. Hodges, 155 Mich. 361.

¶ 766. Gross carelessness on the part of the holder of notes is not conclusive of notice, though it is perfectly competent evidence to go to the jury on the question of bad faith.—Armstrong v. Stearns, 156 Mich. 597.

¶ 767. The cashier of plaintiff bank took a check from one Andrews, drawn on the City Savings Bank. The City Bank illegally certified the same when it had on hand no funds of Andrews. Plaintiff's officers testified that they took the check in good faith. Defendant receiver of the City Bank offered evidence to show that the president of the plaintiff bank was accustomed to examine the statements of other banks, and that the City Bank's statement as to its certified checks outstanding was palpably false; that a subordinate officer of plaintiff bank warned his superiors that their method of dealing with Andrews was bad banking; and that plaintiff at Andrews' request withheld the presentation of the check, and charged Andrews a high rate of interest. Held, that this evidence was admissible and, with other circumstances, warranted the court in submitting to the jury the question of the good faith of the plaintiff in taking the check.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 158 Mich. 557.

¶ 768. Defendant, a stockholder in a corporation, gave his promissory note payable to the corporation, and turned over to it certain shares of his stock to be used as collateral, to enable it to secure a loan from plaintiff bank. Many other shareholders did the same thing. In a suit on the note, held, it was a question for the jury whether the plaintiff knew the note was given on condition that all other shareholders should do the same.—People's Bank v. McMahon, 160 Mich. 46.

¶ 769. Whether plaintiff, suing on a note, was a bona fide holder thereof, held, upon the facts in evidence, to have been a question for the jury.—Harrison v. Grier, 198 Mich. 672.

§ 134. ——Presentment, demand, protest and notice of dishonor.

Presentment, demand, protest and dishonor in general, see ante VIII, IX, X.

Burden of proof as to presentment, etc., see ante § 111.

Evidence as to presentment, etc., see ante §§ 120, 127.

¶ 770. A draft drawn at Cincinnati, May 2, 1861, on persons in Chicago, payable at sight, was received in Detroit May 4, but not transmitted for presentment until the 25th of that month. There was a daily mail between Detroit and Chicago, occupying from twelve to fourteen hours in its passage. No evidence was given to explain or excuse the delay in presentment; and it was held that, without any evidence bearing upon the point, it was error to submit to the jury the question whether the draft was presented for payment in a reasonable time.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 11 Mich. 501.

¶ 771. One who gives a check may expressly or by implication extend the time during which he will remain liable for the amount thereof before its presentment for payment. And the question whether he has consented to such extension is for a jury if the evidence conflicts.—Holmes v. Roe, 62 Mich. 199.

¶ 772. In an action against the drawer of a check which has been dishonored on account of the failure of the bank, evidence that the drawer had notice that the bank was weak, that his checks had been dishonored and that he overdrew his account without intimation to the plaintiff of the dangerous situation, tends to show that the check was drawn without expectation of payment and is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of whether or not notice of dishonor was necessary.—Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Fincher, 138 Mich. 666.

¶ 773. The sufficiency, in itself, of a written notice of dishonor is to be determined by the court as matter of law.—Platt v. Drake, 1 D. 296.

¶ 774. The question as to whether notice of dishonor of a promissory note was actually mailed to an indorser, defendant in an action by a bank upon such note, held properly submitted to the jury when the notary who claimed to have mailed the notice was an officer of the bank and an interested witness, and an officer of the maker stated that he saw the note without any writing thereon three days after the date the notary claimed to have marked the note as protested for nonpayment.—First Nat. Bank of Manistee v. Star Watch Case Co., 187 Mich. 224.

¶ 775. Defendant, secretary and manager of a corporation, personally indorsed a promissory note given by said corporation. Same being presented when due, defendant informed plaintiff that the corporation could not pay the same immediately but hoped to do so soon, and asked for time. Plaintiff did not protest the note. Held, the evidence was sufficient to submit the question to the jury as to whether defendant waived such protest.—Gelder v. Welsh, 169 Mich. 490.

§ 135. ——Payment or discharge.

Burden of proof as to payment, see ante § 111.

Evidence as to payment and discharge, see ante §§ 121, 128.

¶ 776. Where a note not enforceable in the payee's hands because of fraud and want of consideration is received by a subsequent taker in payment of a precedent debt, it must appear, to render such taker a holder for value, that the debt was extinguished by the note's transfer; which is a question for the jury.—Burroughs v. Ploof, 73 Mich. 607.

¶ 777. Whether a note sued upon has been paid, and whether an accommodation maker has been discharged by extension of time of payment, should, if depending upon conflicting testimony, be submitted to the jury.—McInerney v. Lindsay, 97 Mich. 238.

¶ 778. In an action on a promissory note, the questions of payment and of the existence of a subsequent agreement for the application of certain funds to the note are for the jury.—Dow Law Bank v. Godfrey, 126 Mich. 521.

¶ 779. In an action on a promissory note where plaintiff claimed that an agreement was made for the exchange of such note for two smaller notes, and that such agreement was invalid because made on Sunday, and that he returned such smaller notes to the defendants, and defendants claimed that the agreement was made after midnight, and denied that such smaller notes were returned, but claimed that they were subsequently paid, held that it was a question for the jury whether the note sued on had been paid.—Prussia v. Bailey, 193 Mich. 77.

§ 136. ——Directing verdict.

See also ante ¶ 413.

Instructions, see post § 137.

General law as to directing verdict, see Directing Verdict.

¶ 780. Where, in suit on a note, it appears that plaintiff has taken goods in another state on attachment for the same demand, the value of such goods should be ascertained and applied in reduction of plaintiff's demand, and it is error to direct verdict for the note's full amount.—J. A. Fay & Co. v. James Jenks & Co., 78 Mich. 304.

¶ 781. Verdict may be directed for the indorsee suing on a note where the only issue made is on the question of bona fides and there is no dispute in the evidence showing it.—Drovers' National Bank v. Potvin, 116 Mich. 474.

¶ 782. A bank deposited checks in defendant bank in due course of business and drew checks against such deposits. The depositing bank became insolvent and one of its depositors brought suit against defendant for the amount of certain checks which he had deposited in the insolvent bank. Defendant had no notice of the insolvency and took the checks in good faith, as cash, and paid out the proceeds on checks of the insolvent bank. Held that verdict should be directed for defendant.—Glines v. State Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 638.

¶ 783. A directed verdict for plaintiff for part of the amount claimed in an action by a bank on a note was error, where the important question involved was one of fact as to whether the defendant gave the note in consideration of wood purchased from the bank and not all delivered, or whether the wood was owned by a third party and the note was given directly to the bank and such owner credited with its amount.—First Nat. Bank v. Stringer, 133 Mich. 630.

¶ 784. In a suit by the transferee of a promissory note, defendant set up that the note was given for liquors sold by the payee to defendant, and that such sale was illegal for lack of a license in the payee. Plaintiff contended that the sale was made in bulk and was justifiable. Held, the court properly refused to direct a verdict for the defendant on the ground that the sale by the payee was illegal, especially in view of the fact that defendant failed to request the court to submit this disputed question of fact to the jury.—Rothschild v. Schneider, 167 Mich. 501.

¶ 785. Defendant gave a promissory note for two hundred dollars payable to the order of plaintiff for certain shares of stock to be secured by plaintiff and turned over to defendant. Plaintiff indorsed this note to the bank and got the money. Later the time of payment was extended and defendant made a new note running direct to the bank as payee, which plaintiff indorsed and had to pay, and for which he sued to recover of defendant. Defendant gave notice under the general issue that he would show that plaintiff never delivered the stock. Held, it was error to direct a verdict for the plaintiff where the evidence showed that the bank knew of the whole transaction and took the note with notice of equities.—Green v. Ostrander, 160 Mich. 662.

¶ 786. Where plaintiff and defendant, owners of interests in a corporation, indorsed a corporate note, with plaintiff's name appearing first, and there was evidence of an agreement that, in consideration of such indorsement, defendant promised to personally pay the note; that the note was twice renewed, but indorsed in the reverse order from the indorsement on the first note; that plaintiff did not see the renewals after their indorsement by defendant and had no knowledge of the change in the order of indorsement until after the last renewal fell due, and, in fact, did not know that the order of indorsement affected the liability of the indorsers as between themselves, it was error to direct a verdict for defendant in an action by plaintiff against defendant to recover the net amounts of a judgment on the note in favor of the payee, since the evidence afforded by the order of indorsement is only prima facie under Pub. Acts 1905, No. 265, § 70, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2741, providing that as "respects one another, indorsers are liable prima facie in the order in which they indorse, but evidence is admissible to show that as between or among themselves they have agreed otherwise," it being unnecessary, in order to overcome the prima facie effect of the later order of indorsement, that there should be evidence of new agreements at the time of the second and third indorsements.—Goldman v. Goldberger, 208 Fed. 877.

§ 137. Instructions.

Directing verdict, see ante § 136.
General law as to instructions, see Instructions.
Sufficiency of instructions to be ascertained by construing them as a whole, see also Instructions § 19.
Instruction erroneous as assuming facts in question, see also Instructions ¶ 438.
Refusal of instruction giving undue emphasis or prominence to evidence, see also Instructions ¶ 487.
Instructions as to alterations, see Alteration of Instruments § 14.
Instructions as to authority of wife to execute promissory note for illiterate husband, see Execution of Instruments ¶ 90.

¶ 787. An instruction on notice to a bank by reason of facts coming to an officer and challenging his inquiry is erroneous, if the bank purchased the paper through another officer and the tendency is to mislead the jury into believing that such knowledge by any officer would be imputed to the bank on a purchase of the paper by any other of its officers without such knowledge; it should be limited to that officer through whom the purchase of the paper was made.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 141 Mich. 175.

¶ 788. An instruction from which the jury would be likely to infer that, if the notes sued on were obtained through threats to prosecute, they were necessarily void unless a bona fide holding should be established, is erroneous as ignoring the possibility of a legal consideration.—Wolf v. Estate of Troxell, 94 Mich. 573.

¶ 789. Where, in response to a request to charge that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover upon an instrument against the defendant as indorser because the same was not in law a negotiable promissory note, the court charged that the instrument was a promissory note, and that the defendant was liable as indorser upon the same, the charge was construed to mean only that defendant was liable as an indorser in the same manner and to the same extent as if the instrument had been a promissory note in the ordinary form, indorsed by him, and was not open to the objection that it took the evidence entirely from the jury.—Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191.

¶ 790. In an action upon a non-negotiable note given for a lightning-rod, it is error to instruct the jury that in case of a recovery it must be for the full amount claimed by the plaintiff, when there is proof of a much smaller consideration.—Closs v. Thiefels, 79 Mich. 589.

¶ 791. In an action on a forged promissory note given as collateral security to a title note given for the purchase price of a horse which died before trial and before defendants denied the forgery, an instruction that it was the duty of the defendants, as soon as either of them learned that the plaintiff had a note against them, to notify plaintiff of the forgery, and that if they received such notice and delayed notifying plaintiff for three months, such delay was unreasonable, if unexcused, and that if plaintiff, by reason of the conduct of defendants, suffered damages, he was entitled to recover the full amount of the note, held sufficient.—Kole v. Lampen, 191 Mich. 156.

¶ 792. In an action by the administrator of an estate against a son of decedent on a lost promissory note, which defendant claimed was barred by the statute of limitations, an instruction that if the jury found that such a note was given as plaintiff claimed and the indorsements were made thereon by defendant as claimed, then the burden of showing payment was upon the defendant, that payment was a matter of defense and must be shown, and that if the note was in court and the indorsements were on the back of it as claimed the plaintiff might make out a prima facie case by proof of the note and indorsements, held not prejudicially misleading as tending to confuse the jury on the question of payment, where none was claimed, it appearing that it was given in relation to a request made by counsel for defendant regarding a settlement of the estate by the heirs before proceedings were taken in the probate court.—Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416.

¶ 793. Where, in an action on a promissory note, defendant denied having signed it, or having received any consideration therefor, and further testified that, while being taught to write by plaintiff, he signed his name to several pieces of paper, which he left on plaintiff's desk, it was held that it was error to refuse to charge the jury, as requested, that if defendant signed the note without receiving any consideration therefor, or without understanding it to be a promissory note, or if he signed his name to a blank piece of paper, and the body of the note was filled in without his knowledge or consent, defendant was not liable, and to charge merely that, if defendant signed the note, plaintiff could recover.—Trombly v. Trombly, 106 Mich. 227.

¶ 794. In an action on a note where it is alleged that a part payment of the amount due for which the note was given was made before the note was executed, but such payment was not taken into consideration, an instruction that if the alleged payment was made that fact alone would not authorize a denial of relief to plaintiff, but if such payment was made and the amount was inadvertently included in the note the jury might allow defendant such payment and render verdict for the balance due is proper.—Baird v. Salnave, 174 Mich. 409.

¶ 795. Where a defendant sued on a note has testified that as a compromise to avoid litigation he offered to pay the note if plaintiff would discount it, it is proper to instruct the jury that if they find that such offer was made under circumstances that constituted it an admission of liability, they may consider it as bearing upon the question whether defendant ever became originally liable or not; but if they find the offer was not a recognition of liability, then they should not consider it at all.—Steers v. Holmes, 79 Mich. 430.

§ 138. ——As to ownership of instrument.

Evidence as to ownership of instrument, see ante §§ 114, 123.

Jury questions as to ownership of instrument, see ante § 130.

¶ 796. In an action on a note there was no error in charging that it was the plaintiff's property at the beginning of the suit, if the fact was fully proved and there was no contrary evidence.—Toledo & Ann Arbor R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 Mich. 456.

¶ 797. Where, in a suit upon a note delivered to the secretary of an insurance company as security for a loan made by him, the question of fact to be determined by the jury is whether the money loaned belonged to the secretary or to the company, they can determine such issue without any special instructions as to the law of ownership, or as to what would constitute an ownership of the note either in the secretary or in the insurance company.—Barnes v. Peet, 77 Mich. 391.

§ 139. ——As to bona fide holding.

What constitutes bona fide holding, see ante XIII, A.

Burden of proof as to bona fide holding, see ante § 110.

Evidence as to bona fide holding, see ante §§ 119, 126.

Jury questions as to bona fide holding see ante § 133.

¶ 798. Where the question before the jury related solely to the genuineness of a certain negotiable promissory note, and on that point they had been instructed that any material alteration would vitiate it, it was held unobjectionable to charge that the law would sustain the claim of an innocent or bona fide holder of such a note, purchased before due, however viciously other parties might have acted, or whatever objections to the consideration might arise.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96.

¶ 799. Where the purchaser of a Bohemian oat note testified that he had read of this Bohemian oat note scheme, and knew that some farmers were getting into it, in the absence of a denial on his part that said scheme was a fraudulent one, the jury and court have a right to presume that it was the same fraud with which the whole state is now familiar, and in such a case the jury should be instructed that if they found that the plaintiff knew that the note was given for Bohemian oats, or was so informed before its purchase, he could not recover.—Ward v. Doane, 77 Mich. 328.

¶ 800. An instruction, in an action on a promissory note by an indorsee, that if such indorsee knew that the note was given for Bohemian oats, and was a fraud, at the time he purchased it, or if he had such notice of it as would put an ordinarily prudent man on inquiry as to its illegality, and he neglected to make such inquiry, it would show bad faith, and he could not recover, was more favorable than the defendant was entitled to under the law.—Helms v. Douglass, 81 Mich. 442.

¶ 801. In an action on a note where the question in issue was whether plaintiff bought the note in good faith, a charge that he bought the note was a conceded fact, no matter whether he paid more or less is error, if thereby the court meant to say that it was a conceded fact that plaintiff bought the note in the sense of being a good faith purchaser without any knowledge of or participation in any fraud that may have been perpetrated upon the defendant, that fact not being conceded, and it was only in that sense that it was material to speak of the plaintiff having bought the note at all.—Carpenter v. Greenop, 84 Mich. 49.

¶ 802. Where a defendant sued upon promissory notes claims they were procured by fraud, there being, however, no evidence tending to show that plaintiff was guilty of any fraud in their purchase, or to contradict his statement that he bought the notes in the usual course of business, paying value therefor, defendant is not prejudiced by an instruction which, standing alone, might leave the jury with the impression that the burden of proof was upon him to show want of good faith on the part of the plaintiff in the purchase of the notes, it appearing that the correct rule as to the necessity of plaintiff's showing good faith, and want of notice of any imperfection in the paper, after defendant had shown fraud in its inception, was clearly given to the jury.—Rice v. Rankans, 101 Mich. 378.

¶ 803. An instruction as to whether a holder of a check took bona fide is correct and sufficient which states that a person in taking paper is not bound to make inquiry; but if he has knowledge of facts and circumstances making it dishonest for him to take the check with intent to hold the bank, he is not a bona fide holder.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 158 Mich. 94.

¶ 804. A plaintiff bank received a check certified by a defendant bank for an amount in excess of the funds of the drawer on hand. Defendant introduced in evidence a scrap book of the plaintiff bank, which recorded that the defendant bank had only a small amount of outstanding certified checks. Held, in the absence of evidence that the officers taking the certified check had knowledge of the contents of the scrap book, that it was proper for the court to refuse to single out evidence and state its effect by instructing that the scrap book was evidence that plaintiff had knowledge of the illegal certification.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 158 Mich. 94.

¶ 805. Defendant signed a contract and gave certain promissory notes to a company in payment for a cash register. The plaintiff became a purchaser of the notes. Held, an instruction was correct which stated that the plaintiff, if he had no knowledge of the contract behind the notes, could recover on them even though the company had not fulfilled its warranty under the contract.—People's Building & Loan Ass'n Co. v. Rutz, 158 Mich. 440.

¶ 806. In a suit by the transferee of promissory notes, it is error for the court to charge that if plaintiff from circumstances brought to this knowledge, as an ordinarily prudent man, had reason to believe that some defense might be made to the notes, he is not a bona fide purchaser.—Hakes v. Thayer, 165 Mich. 476.

¶ 807. It is the court's duty to charge the jury that one is a bona fide holder of a promissory note for value and not to leave such question to the jury, where the evidence as to the plaintiff's bona fides is undisputed, and shows that the instrument was acquired for value in the usual course of business under circumstances not suggesting any bad faith.—Van Slyke v. Rooks, 181 Mich. 88.

§ 140. ——As to burden of proof.

Burden of proof in general, see ante § 108.

¶ 808. Charging that execution of the note being admitted makes a prima facie case unless defendant proves want of consideration, and that the burden is on him to show it, is not error though the maker testified that he gave the note to escape a charge of embezzlement, where he also admitted that a settlement was made on the claim of embezzlement and of other matters and the amount was agreed on but did not testify wherein or how it was excessive or give any evidence as to the exact amount, some being concededly due, and where the remainder of the charge fairly left the question of the consideration to the jury.—Beath v. Chapoton, 124 Mich. 508.

¶ 809. Fraud by the maker on the indorser being admitted or proved, it was not error to charge that if the holder knew of it and had directed the maker to practice it for the purpose of procuring the indorsement he was not a bona fide holder, and to charge that the burden of proving fraud was on the defendants.—Beath v. Chapoton, 124 Mich. 508.

¶ 810. When in a suit upon a promissory note by an alleged innocent holder defendant gives evidence, which is not disputed, that the note was given in an illegal transaction, void as between the original parties on the ground of public policy, it is not error for the court to instruct the jury that the evidence shows a fraudulent transaction as to the original consideration, and that the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show by a preponderance of evidence that he is a purchaser in good faith.—Goodrich v. McDonald, 77 Mich. 486.

§ 141. Verdict and findings.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see ante § 122.

¶ 811. A defense that a promissory note was signed by the maker as surety, as a result of fraudulent representations by a comaker, is effectually disposed of, in a suit brought by the holder of the note who had acquired it before maturity, in payment of a balance due, by a verdict in favor of the plaintiff which operates as a finding either that there were no fraudulent representations, or that the plaintiff had no notice thereof.—First Nat. Bank of Paw Paw v. Houseknecht, 121 Mich. 313.

¶ 812. In an action by a maker of a joint note against his comaker to recover his proportion of the amount paid thereon, plaintiff having made payments at different times, the defendant is not injured by the trial court requiring the jury to state in their verdict the several sums allowed plaintiff and their dates and amounts.—Moffet v. Sebastian, 149 Mich. 451.

¶ 813. A finding that the plaintiff purchased a certain promissory note "before it was due, and without the knowledge of any special matter of defense connected with the making of it," is not equivalent to finding that he acquired it without any notice of the matters impairing its validity; or that he became the holder upon such consideration as the law deems requisite to invest one with the character of a bona fide holder.—Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 526.

¶ 814. A finding that a note was transferred before maturity for a valuable consideration, and that at the time the transferee had no knowledge of the details of its origin, cannot be regarded as equivalent to a finding that he was a bona fide holder for value.—Tilden v. Barnard, 43 Mich. 376.

¶ 815. In a suit on a promissory note, the court in its finding stated that the note had not been canceled or destroyed; that its execution had not been denied under oath by defendant; that it was offered in evidence, and its execution proved; that no legal defense was offered thereto; and that plaintiff was entitled to recover the full amount thereof and interest. Held, said finding was sufficient to support a judgment in plaintiff's favor.—Thurber v. Aldrich, 167 Mich. 656.

§ 142. Judgment.

Assessment of damages on default, see Defaults, V.

¶ 816. In an action against the maker and indorser of a promissory note, where several pleas are filed and issue joined as to both defendants, plaintiff cannot sever, but must proceed to trial against all, though he may move for judgment against one defendant only. But proper severance was presumed on error, and the judgment sustained, where the record showed no objection taken to the trial of the separate issue.—Maynard v. Penniman, 10 Mich. 153.

¶ 817. The contracts of the maker of a note and of the indorser are several, and do not authorize a joint judgment upon lawful service on only one of them.—Church v. Edson, 39 Mich. 113.

¶ 818. Where several persons are sued as copartners upon a note signed in the name of a company, Comp. L. 1871, § 5778, How. St. § 7347, does not allow judgment against those only who are shown to be members of the company.—Anderson v. White, 39 Mich. 130.

¶ 819. Comp. L. 1871, § 5778, How. St. § 7347, authorizing judgment to be taken against one or more of the defendants, does not apply to a case where a note is signed in the name of a company, and the defendants, being sued as copartners doing business under that name, deny its execution and the partnership, and no evidence is given that some of them are connected with the company.—Anderson v. White, 39 Mich. 130.

¶ 820. One who signs a note with an infant may be held as sole maker after dis continuance against the infant.—Taylor v. Densby, 42 Mich. 82.

¶ 821. When the maker and indorser of a promissory note are jointly sued under the statute, and one is defaulted, and issue is joined as to the other, plaintiff may have the damages assessed against the defaulted defendant by the jury sworn to try the issue against the other, and upon verdict and assessment may take a joint judgment against both.—Storey v. Bird, 8 Mich. 316; People ex rel. Ellison v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 222.

¶ 822. A separate verdict against one will not authorize a judgment against another as to whom there has been no assessment.—People ex rel. Ellison v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 222.

¶ 823. The statute (Comp. L. 1871, §§ 5776-5778; How. St. §§ 7345-7347) authorizing the maker, indorser, acceptor and guarantor of a note to be sued together, and judgment against any one or more of them, does not contemplate a severance in the case of persons purporting to be joint makers and sued as such.—Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123.

¶ 824. In an action upon a promissory note plaintiff need not include all the parties in one judgment, but may have judgment against any of the parties against whom he could have proceeded separately (How. St. § 7355).—Phelps v. Church, 65 Mich. 231.

¶ 825. In an action under the common counts upon a note, against joint indorsers, notice of dishonor was shown only as to one indorser. Held, that a judgment against that indorser was error. There must be a joint judgment or none.—Seligman v. Gray, 66 Mich. 341.

¶ 826. In an action on a promissory note against the maker, and against indorsers who—not being the payees, and having indorsed before delivery—are also joint makers, a discontinuance against him is a discontinuance against them.—J. A. Fay & Co. v. James Jenks & Co., 78 Mich. 312.

¶ 827. A discontinuance as to one of four makers of a note because she, being a married woman, could not be held liable, will not prevent the rendition of a valid judgment against the remaining defendants.—Atkinson v. Weidner, 83 Mich. 412.

¶ 828. A joint judgment against makers and indorsers of a note who resided in different counties upon service on former in different county from that in which suit was begun and indorsers served is not authorized.—First National Bank v. Dwight, 85 Mich. 509.

¶ 829. A joint and several note entitles the holder to proceed against either of the makers in a several action, or to join the two; and, under How. St. § 7355, the holder has the right to take judgment against one before the other.—Beals v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 91 Mich. 146.

¶ 830. A cognovit filed by one of two makers of a joint and several promissory note, in a suit brought against both, may properly be treated as a default as to the defendant filing it, under How. St. § 7355, which provides that, if a default is obtained against part of the defendants in a suit on a promissory note, the plaintiff may proceed to the hearing or trial against the remaining defendants in the same manner as if the suit had been commenced against them only, and that the action shall thereby be severed.—Beals v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 91 Mich. 146.

¶ 831. Judgment on cognovit against one of two makers of a joint and several note, in suit against both, does not preclude plaintiff from thereafter prosecuting the suit against the other defendant.—Beals v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 91 Mich. 146.

¶ 832. It does not follow that because notes are joint and several the judgment taken on such notes is the same.—Rohrabacher v. Walsh, 170 Mich. 59.

¶ 1. A new trial should be granted whenever it becomes necessary for the protection of a party in his just rights, where such party clearly has merits, and has not legally waived his rights or lost them by some improper or unjustifiable laches.—Loree v. Reeves, 2 Mich. 133.

§ 2. Waiver or bar of right.

Effect of rights waived or barred on first trial, see post § 51.
Waiver of remedies generally, see Election and Waiver.

¶ 2. A party has a right to waive the right to move for a new trial, and will be bound by such waiver unless it is invalid for some cause relating to him; no one else can set it aside.—Hackley v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 454.

§ 3. Power and discretion of court.

To grant or deny new trial after remand of cause, see post § 4.
Discretion of court to extend time for making motion, see post ¶ 122.

Necessity that court state reasons for denial or granting of motion, see post § 48.
Review of discretion to grant or deny, see Appeal § 413.

¶ 3. The circuit court has discretion to grant or refuse a new trial; and this discretion is not, usually, reviewable.—Dibble v. Rogers, 2 Mich. 404; Bourke v. James, 4 Mich. 336; Cuddy v. Major, 12 Mich. 368; Sleight v. Henning, 12 Mich. 371; Pennsylvania Min. Co. v. Brady, 14 Mich. 260; People ex rel. Shimer v. Branch Circuit Judge, 17 Mich. 67; Final v. Buell, 50 Mich. 89; People v. Francis, 52 Mich. 575; Nelson v. Lumbermen's Min. Co., 65 Mich. 288; Graham v. Myers, 67 Mich. 277.

¶ 4. Courts of record are vested with general discretionary power on the subject of granting new trials; which power is judicial, and not arbitrary.—Loree v. Reeves, 2 Mich. 133.

¶ 5. In a clear case the trial court has discretionary power in an action for a personal injury to set aside the verdict rendered, and order a new trial, of its own motion, if it deems the award insufficient.—Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 110 Mich. 173.

¶ 6. The fact that a judgment is obtained for or against a party who moves for a new trial has no bearing upon the question whether the judge has abused his discretion in granting or denying the motion.—Detroit Tug & Wrecking Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 360.

¶ 7. The circuit court has authority to set aside judgments and grant new trials after the expiration of the term at which they were entered.—Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Gratiot Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 241.

¶ 8. After an order has been made giving plaintiff until the first day of the next term to move for a new trial, if the county is placed in a new circuit, the judge thereof has jurisdiction to grant a new trial.—Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Gratiot Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 241.

§ 4. ——To grant or deny new trial after remand of cause.

Power to grant new trial after remand, see Appeal § 565.

¶ 9. A circuit judge may hear and grant a motion for a new trial on the merits even though the supreme court may have affirmed the former judgment.—Parkey v. Galloway, 147 Mich. 693.

¶ 10. Where a case brought by writ of error to the supreme court, and there affirmed, is remitted without direction as to the final disposition thereof, the trial court has power, in the absence of laches, to grant a new trial, if, in its opinion, justice requires it.—Reynolds v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 403.

§ 5. Effect of death of trial judge.

¶ 11. The death of a trial judge without acting upon a bill of exceptions duly submitted to him entitles the party applying for it to a new trial.—People ex rel. Wright v. Superior Court Judge, 41 Mich. 726.

¶ 12. Laws 1879, Act No. 8, authorizing exceptions to be settled on the stenographer's minutes in case of the trial judge's death, did not take away the right to a new trial which had been asserted and had vested before the statute was passed.—People ex rel. Campau v. Superior Court Judge, 40 Mich. 630; Stebbins v. Field, 41 Mich. 373.

II. GROUNDS FOR.

A. IN GENERAL; DEFECTS IN THE ACTION.

[Note. In a great many cases language is found to the effect that a given thing was error and constitutes ground for a new trial. Very often this means only that error was committed, the statement as to new trial being gratuitous. These cases have been classified, so far as it was possible to segregate them, into the procedural topics Trial; Instructions; Argument of Counsel; Evidence; and the like. New Trial is not designed to treat of the law of practice and of judicial errors therein, but of the rules by which such errors may or may not afford ground for a retrial.]

§ 6. Existence and materiality of grounds and probability of different result.

Defects in pleading or form of action, see post § 7.
Bias or interest of trial judge, see post § 8.
Misconduct of parties, counsel or witnesses as ground, see post II, B.
Rulings and instructions on trial, see post II, C.
Misconduct of or irregularities affecting jury, see post II, D.
Verdict or findings contrary to law or evidence or unsupported by evidence, see post II, E.
Irregularities in verdict or findings, see post II, F.
Surprise, accident or mistake, see post, II, G.
Newly discovered evidence, see post II, H.
Nature and right in general, see ante I.
Motion, procedure and order or ruling, see post III.
Necessity for stating ground for new trial on making of motion, see post ¶ 119.
Probability of different result based on newly discovered evidence, see post §§ 30-34.
Grounds for awarding new trial on error, see Appeal, XIII, B.
Final judgment without remand where there is no jurisdiction or cause of action, or where new trial would be hopeless, see Appeal §§ 508-511.
Propriety and occasion for remanding for new trial or for entering final judgment on error, see Appeal, XIII, B.
Grounds for new trial in quo warranto, see Quo Warranto, IV.
Necessity that ground relied on for new trial be made basis of objection in trial court, see Saving Questions.
Judicial errors regarded as harmless in themselves or as cured or neutralized by other incidents, rulings, or event of trial, see Harmless Error.
Judicial powers generally, see Courts, V.

¶ 13. New trial on reversal of a judgment for plaintiff is not ordered where it is not probable a different case could be made thereon.—Mynning v. Detroit, Lansing & N. R. Co., 67 Mich. 677.

¶ 14. A new trial will not be ordered for an error that did not tend in any degree to prejudice the rights of appellants.—Finan v. Babcock, 58 Mich. 301.

¶ 14a. A new trial may be granted after a trial on quo warranto upon the same grounds and on the same showing as in civil cases generally.—People ex rel. Dickinson v. Sackett, 14 Mich. 243.

§ 7. Defects in pleading or form of action.

General law of pleading, see Pleading.
Waiver of variance by failure to object in motion for new trial, see also Pleading § 179.

¶ 15. The joining of several demands for different torts is permissible, and the fact that some demands for which plaintiff was not entitled to recover were so joined with one upon which he did recover could not have prejudiced the jury and refusal of new trial was not error.—Dickinson v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 148 Mich. 461.

§ 8. Bias or interest of trial judge.

Disqualification of judge for interest or bias generally, see Judges § 10.

¶ 16. An order by a trial judge vacating a judgment and ordering a new trial on the ground that he had, as he supposed, discovered that he had a personal interest in the case, is proper, and will not be reviewed.—People ex rel. Alderman v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 550.

B. MISCONDUCT OF PARTIES, COUNSEL OR WITNESSES.

§ 9. Of parties or their witnesses.

Misconduct of or affecting jury as ground, see post II, D.

What amounts to erroneous misconduct or distraction during trial, see Trial, II.

¶ 17. A new trial in an action for damages for assault and battery upon the ground of alleged misconduct of the wife and daughter of plaintiff, witnesses in the case, in weeping when plaintiff's counsel, in his closing argument, referred to the fact that plaintiff would always be affected in his hearing, held properly denied.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 198 Mich. 746.

¶ 18. There was no abuse of the discretion of the trial court, in an action by a husband for damages for expenses incurred and loss of services due to injuries received by the wife, in refusing to pronounce a mistrial after the wife of plaintiff fainted, upon being called to the witness stand, and was taken to a hospital, where the verdict was clearly not excessive.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 385.

§ 10. Of adverse counsel.

Association and conversation between counsel and juror as misconduct warranting new trial, see also post ¶¶ 43-46.

What constitutes improper opening statement or argument, see Argument of Counsel.

¶ 19. New trial will not be granted for remarks of counsel regarding the poverty of the plaintiff, when they are based on the evidence and no ruling had thereon, though excepted to.—Druck v. Antrim Lime Co., 177 Mich. 364.

¶ 20. A motion for a new trial based upon the claim that the argument of counsel was improper and prejudicial, is properly denied where counsel's argument was justified by the testimony except that part of it based upon testimony which had been stricken out, and the court at once informed counsel that such testimony had been stricken out, and counsel made no further allusion to it.—Scheer v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 561.

¶ 21. Language employed with regard to defendant in the closing argument of counsel, is no ground for a new trial where the point raised is merely one of good taste.—Township of Alpena v. Mainville, 153 Mich. 732.

¶ 22. Where it is testified to that a certain lost paper was subsequently found in the shoe of a child five years of age, it is no ground for a new trial that, in his argument to the jury, counsel produced a child's shoe which he asserted would be the size of a shoe ordinarily worn by a child of that age, and argued to the jury the improbability of a paper such as the one in question having been lost in such a place, although the shoe had not been offered and put in evidence.—Township of Alpena v. Mainville, 153 Mich. 732.

¶ 23. Where counsel for plaintiff employs considerable latitude in his argument to the jury, in a way calculated strongly to move them, the defendant will not be granted a new trial where the argument was based on the evidence, and the reasonableness of the verdict indicates that the jury were not unduly prejudiced by it.—Shepard v. Platt, 158 Mich. 181.

¶ 24. Where, in a suit on a written contract for a correspondence course, the execution of said contract by defendant is the only point in issue, a verdict for defendant will be set aside where by imputing questions and accusing answers on immaterial matters the jury are apparently led to believe that defendant was inveigled into the signing of said contract by glowing promises of plaintiff's agent that the course would open to defendant the royal road to learning.—International Text-Book Co. v. Roberts, 168 Mich. 501.

C. RULINGS AND INSTRUCTIONS ON TRIAL.

§ 11. In general.

Instructions or directing of verdict, see post § 12.

Rulings on admission, exclusion or striking of evidence, see post § 13.

Powers of court generally, see Courts, V.

¶ 25. Where the trial court, in refusing to postpone a suit for commissions on account of the failure of a subpoenaed witness to appear for plaintiff, acts within his sound discretion, his ruling cannot be held to have grown into reversible error by reason of his refusal to grant a new trial on such ground.—Roney v. Healy, 170 Mich. 46.

§ 12. Instructions or directing of verdict.

Propriety of instructions, see Instructions; and see also sections in specific topics treating of instructions.

New trial for inapplicable charges on damages, see also Damages ¶ 1427.

¶ 26. An instruction given to a jury after retirement when such jury requested further instructions, which correctly stated the law, is not ground for a new trial where counsel made no objection to the delivery of the instruction by the clerk of the court, at the time.—Barnett v. Saloman, 118 Mich. 460.

¶ 27. Where, in action to recover for the value of automobiles and supplies sold, an ambiguous opening statement is made by the counsel for plaintiff and there is testimony supporting such statement, but also testimony supporting the declarations, and the verdict is directed upon the ground that such testimony as was not conformable to the opening statement of counsel should be stricken out and that what was left made no case within the pleadings, a new trial should be granted where there was testimony remaining to support the declaration.—Kimmerle v. Bonine, 188 Mich. 148.

§ 13. Rulings on admission, exclusion or striking of evidence.

Propriety of rulings on evidence, see Evidence; Examination of Witnesses; Trial, V; Witnesses.

¶ 28. The denial of a motion for a new trial on the ground of the exclusion of testimony is proper, where, if such testimony had been received, it would not have changed the result.—Moore v. Harneck, 200 Mich. 642.

¶ 29. The counsel of a party is not stopped by the court from introducing testimony so as to warrant a new trial where there is no available testimony known to him, which is not given.—Moore v. Harneck, 200 Mich. 642.

¶ 30. In an action for negligent injury the court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial at the request of the plaintiff, where after the commencement of the cross-examination the plaintiff by reason of his enfeebled condition was compelled to retire from the court room, and his testimony was on motion stricken out, and there was a verdict by the jury for plaintiff, his counsel having elected to proceed with the trial. There had been, however, a special finding by the jury that there were no box-cars standing or being stored on defendant's side-track on the north-easterly side of the highway at the time when the plaintiff was injured, there being thus an ambiguity between the general verdict and the special finding; the plaintiff's evidence upon the point involved (which was stricken out) was material.—Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Genessee Circuit Judge, 89 Mich. 549.

D. MISCONDUCT OF OR IRREGULARITIES AFFECTING JURY.

§ 14. In general.

Disqualification of jurors and irregularities in selection, see post § 15.

Conduct causing or exhibiting prejudice, see post § 16.

Separation of jury during deliberations, see post § 17.

Interference by or association or communication with other persons, see post § 18.

Affidavits of jurors or evidence as to their misconduct in proceedings for new trial, see post § 44.

Misconduct of parties, counsel or witnesses, see ante II, B.

Proper custody and seclusion of jury from improper communications or separation during trial, see Trial, VIII.

¶ 31. A trial judge is incompetent to decide that a verdict was not affected by outside influences to which the jury had been exposed; and if he refuses to set it aside on the ground that it was just, he usurps the functions of the jury. The presumption that the jurors were honest will not save the verdict.—Churchill v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 56 Mich. 536.

¶ 32. The fact that it took the jury less than five minutes to reach a verdict is no ground for a new trial.—Farnsworth v. Fraser, 137 Mich. 296.

§ 15. Disqualification of jurors and irregularities in selection.

Eligibility for jury service generally, see Jury, II.

Disqualification of jurors respecting cause, see Jury, III.

¶ 33. In a civil case a juror's disqualification by alienage not discovered until after verdict is not ground for a new trial.—Johr v. People, 26 Mich. 427.

¶ 34. Where a juror, who had served in a condemnation proceeding wherein the jury had disagreed, upon his examination as to his qualifications, denied having formed or expressed an opinion as to the necessity of taking the land for public use, and the contesting party was ignorant of his having acted as a member of the former panel, and of the submission of the question of such necessity to him as a member thereof, until after the second proceedings were ended, he is entitled to have the verdict set aside and to a new trial.—Hester v. Chambers, 84 Mich. 562.

¶ 35. A new trial will not be granted after a verdict for defendant in an action against a city for personal injuries, because one of the jurymen was a member of the common council, where plaintiff's attorney knew of that fact at the time the jury were selected, and made no objection to him on that account.—Walker v. City of Ann Arbor, 111 Mich. 1.

§ 16. Conduct causing or exhibiting prejudice.

¶ 36. In an action against the estate of a decedent for services rendered, the commissioners on claims appointed by the probate court failed to agree as to the claim presented. Claimant appealed to the circuit court, and recovered a judgment. It appeared that several of the jurors had read articles commenting on the cause published in newspapers. The articles were colored, and gave decedent's estate at double what it actually was, and assumed that the commissioners were favorable to claimant, but were unable to agree upon the sum she was to receive. Held, that it was not ground for a new trial, since it could not be presumed that the jury would render a verdict contrary to the sworn testimony in the case.—In re Thompson's Estate, 157 Mich. 669; Forsythe v. Thompson's Estate, Id.

¶ 37. Where, during the progress of a trial and before the submission of the case, a juror has made statements outside the jury room concerning the case or evidence offered therein, indicating a fixed opinion unfavorable to the moving party or ill-will towards him, it is ground for a new trial, and it need not be shown that the verdict was actually influenced by such improper conduct.—Cooper v. Carr, 161 Mich. 405.

¶ 38. The expression of mirth by a juror, upon cross-examination of the defendant, because of his apparent inconsistent statements as to the amount due on a mortgage, held not ground for new trial, especially in the absence of an exception at the time of the incident.—Cutler v. Spens, 191 Mich. 603.

§ 17. Separation of jury during deliberations.

¶ 39. Separation of a jury before arriving at a verdict and going for supper to their respective boarding houses unaccompanied by an officer, by consent of both parties to the case, held not ground for new trial in the absence of any prejudice shown.—Hampton v. Van Nest's Estate, 196 Mich. 404.

¶ 40. In order that the separation of the jury during deliberation may be ground for the granting of a new trial, it must be shown that it was prejudicial to the defeated party, or the facts of the separation must be such as to create a presumption that there was prejudice, in that a juror might have been improperly approached.—Spencer v. Johnson, 185 Mich. 85.

¶ 41. The fact that by reason of illness, a juror was absent from the jury room during the deliberations of the jury, for several hours under the care of a physician, held not prejudicial to the defendant, so as to entitle him to a new trial.—Spencer v. Johnson, 185 Mich. 85.

§ 18. Interference by or association or communication with other persons.

See also post ¶ 124.

¶ 42. The denial of a motion for new trial based upon the ground that the sheriff in charge of the jury was in the jury room with the jury and within hearing while they were deliberating on their verdict, held not erroneous where the evidence tended to show he was not present during deliberations of the jury and only as occasion required for the purpose of replenishing the fire in the room and furnishing water to the jury.—Hampton v. Van Nest's Estate, 196 Mich. 404.

¶ 43. The mere fact that a lawyer converses with a juror while the case is on trial, is not sufficient ground for a new trial where the conversation is upon indifferent matters.—Township of Alpena v. Mainville, 153 Mich. 732.

¶ 44. A new trial should be granted a defeated party where a juror, after the jury had been cautioned not to talk with the witnesses or attorneys connected with the case, was, during the course of the trial, entertained at a large social gathering at the home of an attorney of record of the successful party, although the trial was not discussed, and such attorney had withdrawn from active participation in the trial because of being a very material witness for the successful party.—McCartney v. Saul, 180 Mich. 502; In re Quinn's Estate, Id.

¶ 45. It is not necessary, in order to obtain a new trial, because of the entertainment of a juror during its progress by an attorney of record, that a bad motive or intent existed, or that the defeated party was unfavorably affected thereby.—McCartney v. Saul, 180 Mich. 502; In re Quinn's Estate, Id.

¶ 46. An attorney who stayed at the same hotel during the trial of a particular case and other cases tried previously to such case and occupied the same table during such period, and goes into the dining room on a particular day with no knowledge that one of the jurymen in a case in which he is trying is present at the table, and is seated by the head waitress at the same table with the juryman and other people, and converses with the juror, is not guilty of misconduct authorizing a new trial.—Vincent v. Heenan, 194 Mich. 316.

E. VERDICT OR FINDINGS CONTRARY TO LAW OR EVIDENCE OR UNSUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

§ 19. In general; verdict contrary to law or instructions.

Verdict contrary to or unsupported by evidence, see post §§ 20-22.

Inadequacy or excessiveness of verdict, see post § 23.

Successive verdicts, see post § 24.

Irregularities in verdict or finding, see post II, F.

Surprise, accident or mistake as ground, see post II, G.

Newly discovered evidence as ground, see post II, H.

Sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, see Evidence, X, and see also portions of specific topics treating of proofs and evidence.

Power of court to order new hearing before referee on ground that referee's conclusion is contrary to weight of evidence, see Reference, VI.

General requisites and sufficiency of verdicts and findings, see Verdicts and Findings.

Presumption on error as to verdict or findings, basis and manner of agreement, and adequacy or excessiveness, see Appeal §§ 382-385.
Tests applied on review of sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict, see Appeal §§ 452-454.
Direction of verdict on evidence insufficient to sustain verdict against motion for new trial, see Directing Verdict § 8.

¶ 47. Where the jury ignores the charge of the court and the evidence in the case, and agrees upon a compromise verdict outside of the evidence, the trial court should set aside the verdict.—Morley v. Liverpool, London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

§ 20. Verdict contrary to or unsupported by evidence.

Conflicting evidence, see post § 21.
Number and credibility of witnesses, see post § 22.
Newly discovered evidence as ground, see post, II, H.
Absence of expected evidence as ground for surprise entitling to new trial, see post § 27.
Surprise from unexpected evidence as ground, see post § 28.

¶ 48. Where a verdict is palpably unjust and at variance with the great preponderance of the evidence a new trial should be granted.—Whipple v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 130 Mich. 460.

¶ 49. A verdict for six cents damages for sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband is ground for new trial as against the evidence, where the evidence showed a sale after notice not to sell, a material loss of support, and beatings by the husband when drunk.—Fleming v. Gemein, 168 Mich. 541.

¶ 50. Motion for a new trial was properly denied, where the testimony upon all the material questions preponderated in the prevailing party's favor and error did not appear.—Hartz v. Eddy, 140 Mich. 479.

¶ 51. A new trial will be granted where a verdict for plaintiff for the entire amount claimed is not warranted by his own evidence.—Salmer v. Hicks, 188 Mich. 391.

¶ 52. In an action for personal injuries by a fireman of a locomotive through a collision, evidence examined and held that the testimony presented so strongly required an affirmative answer to the two vitally important questions submitted on the question of the negligence of the train dispatcher instead of the negative answer given by the jury that the motion for a new trial should have been granted.—Moon v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 143 Mich. 125.

¶ 52a. A motion for a new trial on the ground that findings are against the weight of evidence and are contrary to the evidence will not lie in cases of findings by a referee, since there is no way to have the evidence before the court in determining such a motion.—People ex rel. First Nat. Bank v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 18 Mich. 483.

§ 21. ——Conflicting evidence.

¶ 53. It is not error to refuse a motion for new trial on the ground that a verdict is against the weight of evidence when the evidence is sharply conflicting on material questions.—Gleason v. Stone, 200 Mich. 187.

¶ 54. It is not error to deny a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict for plaintiff is against the evidence where there is a sharp conflict in the testimony as to whether plaintiff, who was run over by a motor truck after falling from his bicycle, was about 100 feet ahead of the truck or fell directly under the wheels.—Goosen v. Packard Motor Car Co., 174 Mich. 654.

¶ 55. In an action by a beet sugar company against a railroad company to recover demurrage charges paid under protest for "spotting" cars for plaintiff's plant, held that the verdict for plaintiff was not against the overwhelming weight of evidence so as to warrant a new trial.—Mt. Clemens Sugar Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 200 Mich. 33.

§ 22. ——Number and credibility of witnesses.

Absence of expected witness as ground, see post § 27.

¶ 56. Where two witnesses testify to one state of facts and three to another, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, on motion for a new trial, that the verdict is against the clear weight of the evidence.—Morrison v. Carpenter, 179 Mich. 207.

¶ 57. In a suit for injuries against a street railway for starting up its car while plaintiff was alighting, where plaintiff's case is made out only by her unsupported testimony, which is contradicted by four disinterested and unimpeached witnesses and by the physical facts attending the accident, it is the duty of the trial court to overturn the verdict as being against the weight of the evidence.—Krouse v. Detroit United Ry., 166 Mich. 147.

¶ 58. In an action for personal injuries caused by a rope coming off a hoisting apparatus where plaintiff testified he had never before operated the hoist, but also showed great familiarity with it, and numerous other witnesses testified that they had seen him operate it, the weight of the evidence was so overwhelmingly against him that if he went to the jury because of such evidence and recovered, a new trial should be granted.—Bays v. Warren Featherbone Co., 131 Mich. 205.

§ 23. Inadequacy or excessiveness of verdict.

Irregularities in verdict or findings, see post II, F.

Adequacy and excessiveness of verdicts for damages, see Damages, IX.

Verdict against evidence, excessive amount of damages, see also Damages ¶ 88.

¶ 59. The remedy for inadequacy in the amount of the verdict is by motion for a new trial.—Love v. Halladay, 139 Mich. 575.

¶ 60. A verdict for six cents in an action for damages for personal injuries should be set aside as inadequate and as against the weight of evidence and a new trial granted where the uncontradicted testimony shows that the plaintiff is entitled to substantial damages.—Walker v. Britton, 193 Mich. 174.

¶ 61. A verdict in an action on a claim against an estate for services rendered deceased and his wife, should be set aside as excessive where there is no competent testimony which would warrant so large a verdict.—Oliver v. Jessup's Estate, 137 Mich. 642.

¶ 62. Where one who sues for an injury to his knee alleged to have been caused by his being ejected from a railroad train, made no claim of injury to those who saw him immediately after, and at once walked four miles to a lumber camp, and where one of his physicians testifies that he would eventually get the full motion of his knee joint, but not in less than a year, while his other physicians testify that he will always be somewhat lame, the court's refusal to grant a new trial upon a verdict of $7,000, is close to an abuse of judicial discretion.—Brassel v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co., 101 Mich. 5.

¶ 63. In an action of trespass for cutting and removing timber, a new trial on the ground that the verdict is excessive and against the weight of evidence, will not be granted where it appears that defendant had full notice of plaintiff's claims, and instead of keeping an account of the timber cut, intentionally mingled it with other timber then being cut by defendant in carrying on extensive lumbering operations.—North Michigan Land & Live Stock Co. v. Kneeland, 149 Mich. 495.

¶ 64. It cannot be said that a verdict for $3,000 for libel is the result of vindictiveness or prejudice, where it appears that the jury offered to return a verdict for $1,500 with a condition that defendant publish a retraction, and that having been informed that they could not legally return such a verdict they then retired and brought in one for double the amount; since the jury may have thought that retraction would prevent future injury to plaintiff.—McCormick v. Hawkins, 169 Mich. 641.

§ 24. Successive verdicts.

Force of successive verdicts with same result, see Appeal § 449.

¶ 65. Where a jury renders a verdi against the weight of the evidence, eithe through inadvertence, sympathy or preju dice, it is the duty of the trial court to se it aside, and the fact that a second jury fal under the same error affords no reason fo changing the rule or its application.—Krous v. Detroit United Ry., 166 Mich. 147.

¶ 66. The fact that two duly qualified an disinterested juries have reached the sam result, while not controlling, is significan and the court will only interfere when suc a verdict is so manifestly against the ove whelming weight of evidence and so palp bly wrong as to force the conviction that was the result of either passion or preju dice or a dense incapacity to analyze test mony and discern the truth.—Silverstone London Assurance Corporation, 187 Mic 333.

F. IRREGULARITIES IN VERDICT O FINDINGS.

§ 25. In general.

Verdict or findings contrary to law or ev dence, see ante II, E.

Verdict unsupported by the evidence, s ante §§ 20-22.

Inadequacy or excessiveness of verdict, s ante § 23.

Effect of successive verdicts, see ante § 2

General requisites of verdicts and finding see Verdicts and Findings.

Sufficiency of the evidence to support th verdict, see Evidence, X, and see als portions of specific topics treating proofs and evidence.

¶ 67. New trial will not be granted correct the erroneous allowance, in a judg ment, of interest, when the precise extent the error is easily determinable.—Bresn han v. Nugent, 97 Mich. 359.

¶ 68. Unless the jury abuse their discretio a verdict is not to be set aside merely b cause it does not appear exactly how it wa made up.—Swift v. Plessner, 39 Mich. 178.

¶ 69. The plaintiff sued a newspaper an a private person for publishing an allege libelous article. The jury found the privat person guilty, but not the newspaper. Plai tiff appealed. Held, that notwithstanding h had recovered against one of two join defendants, the erroneous acquittal of th other defendant was prejudicial and plai tiff was entitled to a new trial.—Lawrenc v. Herald Pub. Co., 158 Mich. 459.

¶ 70. Where the contract received in ev dence differs so radically from the one d clared upon as to be inadmissible under th special count in the declaration, and plaintiff, on objection being made, does not choose to amend his declaration, and the findings of fact and law show that the judgment was rendered upon said special count, the judgment will be reversed, and a new trial ordered.—Reynolds v. Reeder, 104 Mich. 265.

G. SURPRISE, ACCIDENT OR MISTAKE.

§ 26. In general.

Absence of witness or evidence, see post § 27.
Surprise from unexpected evidence or change in theory of case, see post § 28.
Necessity for showing of diligence to procure witness or evidence, see post ¶ 73.

¶ 71. The affidavit of counsel for defendant that he had not expected to try a case, and had intended only to assist at the trial, and was not as familiar with the details of the testimony to be presented for the defendant as he otherwise would have been, and had a mistaken idea of the character of some of the evidence, and, though prompted by defendant's wife, when defendant was on the stand, failed to get the significance of her advice that plaintiff, the owner of a telephone system, who was suing to recover the telephone and attachments which defendant was claiming the right to use after the expiration of the period for which he had rented it, had orally promised to give defendant a rebate, is not a sufficient excuse for failure to present such testimony at the trial, so as to warrant a new trial.—Moore v. Harneck, 200 Mich. 642.

¶ 72. Motion for new trial on the ground that defendant had been deprived of the use of certain evidence given by plaintiff upon a former trial, is properly denied where the evidence in question had reference to testimony at a trial immediately preceding which the stenographer, who was the same at both trials, had not had time to copy since the testimony could have been read from the notes during the trial.—Stevens v. McLachlan, 120 Mich. 285.

§ 27. Absence of witness or evidence.

¶ 73. Sufficient diligence to procure the testimony of a witness, formerly the superintendent of the movant's factory at F. in Michigan, is not shown by proof that the movant's president on October 1st, ten days after the trial, wrote a letter from Pittsburg addressed to such former superintendent, sent such letter to a person at F. with request to have the superintendent's father, who lived there, forward the letter, and that on the 9th a reply from said superintendent, dated in Texas, was received.—Grand Rapids Elec. Co. v. Walsh Mfg. Co., 142 Mich. 4.

§ 28. Surprise from unexpected evidence or change in theory of case.

¶ 74. The administrator is not guilty of laches in failing to introduce upon the trial of an appealed claim in circuit court the testimony of the attorney who drew the deed and bill of sale out of which the claim arose, to the effect that the transfer was in trust, so as to preclude him from asking a new trial upon the discovery of such evidence, although he knew the papers were in the attorney's handwriting, since there was nothing to indicate that claimant would proceed on appeal upon a new and different theory.—Raub v. Nisbett, 111 Mich. 88.

H. NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

§ 29. In general.

Sufficiency of evidence discovered and probability of different result, see post §§ 30-34.
Willingness to change testimony, see post § 35.
Diligence in procuring evidence, see post §§ 36-38.
Sufficiency of affidavits on ground of newly discovered evidence, see post § 43.
Motion, procedure and order or ruling, see post III.
Newly discovered evidence as ground for rehearing in equity, and cumulative effect of it as ground for denying rehearing, see Equity § 229.
Newly discovered evidence as ground for bill of review, see Equity § 241.

¶ 75. Whether a new trial will be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence is largely a matter of discretion.—Luckhurst v. Schroeder, 183 Mich. 487.

Discovery of facts after the trial minimizing the injury as ground for new trial, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 417-419.
Matters occurring subsequent to trial as newly discovered evidence on question of extent of injury, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 94-109.

§ 30. Sufficiency of evidence discovered and probability of different result.

See also post ¶¶ 130-135.
Inadmissible, incompetent or irrelevant evidence, see post § 31.
Evidence which is merely cumulative, see post § 32.
Evidence impeaching witness, see post § 33.
Evidence going only to question of damages, see post § 34.
Effect of willingness of witness to change testimony, see post § 35.
Necessity for diligence in procuring evidence, see post §§ 36-38.
Probability of different result as test of materiality of ground generally, see ante § 6.

¶ 76. A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence which, if admitted, would not result in a different verdict.—A. E. Wood & Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 184 Mich. 672.

¶ 77. The denial of a new trial because of newly discovered evidence, is not an abuse of discretion, where it cannot be said that such evidence would produce a different result if a new trial were granted.—Luckhurst v. Schroeder, 183 Mich. 487.

¶ 78. A new trial should not be granted upon the ground of newly discovered evidence unless such evidence is very clear and satisfactory, and likely to seriously affect the result if admitted.—People ex rel. Dickinson v. Sackett, 14 Mich. 320.

¶ 79. In an action by an officer of a corporation to recover an amount for services alleged to be due under a written contract held that a sufficient showing as to newly discovered evidence had been made to warrant the granting of a new trial.—Clark v. Onaway-Alpena Tel. Co., 196 Mich. 168.

¶ 80. Whether newly discovered evidence is of such a character and a different conclusion ought to follow, or is probable on a retrial, is a question primarily and peculiarly addressed to the good judgment and discretion of the judge who heard and saw the witnesses, and such discretion will not be interfered with, except in case of manifest abuse.—Wilson v. Johnson, 195 Mich. 94.

§ 31. ——Inadmissible, incompetent or irrelevant evidence.

Evidence going only to question of damages, see post § 34.

¶ 81. The trial court properly denies a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence where the evidence tendered is inadmissible as being hearsay.—Antosik v. Michigan Alkali Co., 166 Mich. 415.

¶ 82. A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence should not be granted in a personal injury suit on affidavits made by a physician after the trial and containing evidence which would not have been admissible had said physician appeared at the trial to testify for defendant.—Wilkens v. Detroit United Ry., 169 Mich. 437.

¶ 83. It is not error, in an action by a wife under the Civil Damage Act to recover for the death of her husband due to falling in a hot pond while intoxicated by liquor purchased from defendants, to refuse to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of alleged contradictory statements made in proofs of claim for insurance on the life of her husband, where it appears that they were made by a doctor, were not in fact inconsistent, and it was not shown that plaintiff had knowledge of the statements nor that by due diligence defendant could not have procured the testimony in time for trial.—Holtquist v. O'Connell, 196 Mich. 484.

§ 32. ——Evidence which is merely cumulative.

¶ 84. Newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative is not ground for a new trial.—Morin v. Robarge, 132 Mich. 337.

¶ 85. A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will not be granted where such evidence is merely cumulative.—In re Rockett's Estate, 191 Mich. 499.

¶ 86. A motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is properly denied where the proposed evidence is merely cumulative, is on an unimportant question, and the verdict would be no different if it was admitted.—Bilakos v. Kelley, 200 Mich. 125.

¶ 87. Where the only ground urged in support of a motion for a new trial is newly discovered evidence, and the same is merely cumulative, there is no abuse of discretion by the circuit judge in refusing the motion.—Guerold v. Holtz, 103 Mich. 118; White v. Peabody, 106 Mich. 144.

¶ 88. A new trial will not be granted because of the absence and inability to procure attendance of a witness whose testimony would have been merely cumulative on the question of damages, and whose intended absence was known to counsel, if not to the party, before the trial.—North Michigan Land & Live Stock Co. v. Kneeland, 149 Mich. 495.

¶ 89. A new trial will not be granted because of newly discovered evidence where such evidence is merely cumulative, and, as bearing upon whether a verdict should be directed, would not have changed the result.—Hoover v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 188 Mich. 313.

¶ 90. A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is properly refused by the trial court, in the exercise of its discretion, where the evidence is merely cumulative and it is not shown that, by the exercise of diligence, the evidence could not have been produced at the trial.—Hydrex Silent Exhaust Works v. Seager Engine Works, 189 Mich. 431.

¶ 91. There is no abuse of discretion in denying a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence which was merely cumulative and not upon the real question in the case.—Guerold v. Holtz, 103 Mich. 118.

¶ 92. Denial of a motion for a new trial in a personal injury action against a street railway company, on newly discovered evidence which was merely cumulative in character, held not an abuse of discretion.—Goodyear v. Detroit United Ry., 177 Mich. 129.

¶ 93. The discretion of a trial judge in denying a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is not abused where it does not appear that the evidence was not cumulative and it would produce a different result on a new trial.—Wilson v. Johnson, 195 Mich. 94.

¶ 94. A motion for the new trial of a case tried five years after the actionable occurrence, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, will not be granted where the evidence of the new witness is cumulative only and could have been discovered by reasonable diligence.—National Surety Co. v. Grant, 177 Mich. 348.

§ 33. ——Evidence impeaching witness.

¶ 95. Ordinarily a new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence merely of an impeaching character.—Luckhurst v. Schroeder, 183 Mich. 487.

¶ 96. Evidence which might have been but was not introduced on the trial in impeachment of other witnesses is not newly discovered evidence such as to authorize a new trial.—Spring v. Perkins, 156 Mich. 327.

¶ 97. Ordinarily a new trial will not be granted because of newly discovered evidence to impeach a witness.—Spray v. Ayotte, 161 Mich. 593.

¶ 98. Where counsel for defendant has learned subsequent to trial that several witnesses for plaintiff had been arrested, and he on cross-examining them during the trial failed to make inquiry on this point, no issue was made for the introduction of impeaching testimony, and he will not be granted a new trial in order to cross-examine them in reference thereto.—Bosek v. Detroit United Railway, 175 Mich. 8.

§ 34. ——Evidence going only to question of damages.

¶ 99. Where in a suit upon a contract of hiring the newly discovered evidence upon which defendant seeks a new trial goes merely to the question of the amount of damages to which plaintiff is entitled, no sufficient ground for granting a new trial is established.—Richards v. Church Balance-Gear Co., 166 Mich. 464.

§ 35. Willingness to change testimony.

¶ 100. After a verdict for plaintiff in a suit on a contract of hiring, defendant's affidavit that his witness has since found several memorandum books which refresh his recollection, and have a very important bearing upon the issues in the case, and will, in his belief, bring about an entirely different result in case a new trial is granted, presents no reason for granting a new trial.—Richards v. Church Balance-Gear Co., 166 Mich. 464.

¶ 101. A motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, is properly denied in an action by a building contractor against a school district to recover on the contract, where based upon affidavits of three members of the building committee who swore that after the trial they had made a further examination of the building and had become convinced that their testimony given on the trial was wrong, and that they had been deceived during the progress of the work by the contractor and architect, as such evidence was not newly discovered.—McMillan v. Portsmouth Township School District No. 2, 200 Mich. 280.

§ 36. Diligence in procuring evidence.

Evidence known or obtainable at time of trial, see post § 37.

Evidence existing in public records, see post § 38.

Diligence required to avoid absence of witness, see also ante ¶ 73.

Necessity that affidavit show diligence exercised to secure evidence before trial, see also ante ¶ 134.

¶ 102. To entitle a party to a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence he must show diligence.—Gray v. Barton, 62 Mich. 186.

¶ 103. A new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is properly denied in the absence of a showing of diligence.—Burke v. Bay City Traction & Elec. Co., 147 Mich. 172.

¶ 104. Failure to exercise reasonable care to secure alleged newly discovered evidence will defeat a motion for a new trial.—A. E. Wood & Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 184 Mich. 672.

¶ 105. The law requires of parties care, diligence, and vigilance in securing and presenting evidence at the trial; and a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will be overruled unless it is shown that the evidence in question has in fact been newly discovered, that the failure to produce it at the trial was not due to a lack of reasonable diligence, that it is not cumulative merely, and that it is of a character calculated to render a different result probable on a retrial of the cause.—Canfield v. City of Jackson, 112 Mich. 120.

¶ 106. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence where due diligence was not exercised to bring in such evidence at the first trial.—Spray v. Ayotte, 161 Mich. 593.

¶ 107. A new trial in a personal injury suit demanded on the ground of newly discovered evidence is properly refused where defendant does not show that diligence was exercised in procuring said evidence upon the trial, and where it is not shown that such portions of said evidence as would be competent would result in changing the outcome of the trial in any degree.—Leonard v. Leahy, 169 Mich. 406.

¶ 108. Where defendant has not used due diligence, and where an amendment of the pleadings and a retrial upon a different issue would be necessitated, it is proper to refuse a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.—Ferris v. Court of Honor, 152 Mich. 322.

§ 37. ——Evidence known or obtainable at time of trial.

¶ 109. A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will be refused where such evidence was known to the defendant at the trial but was not presented because of lack of diligence on his part.—Houser v. Carmody, 173 Mich. 121.

¶ 110. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered testimony where the matters were within the knowledge of the party prior to the trial, and the evidence might have been secured by the exercise of reasonable diligence.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 158 Mich. 94.

¶ 111. Where evidence that witnesses for plaintiff had been arrested was within reach while they were upon the stand, if inquiry had been made in regard thereto, and no diligence on the part of counsel to obtain the same is shown to have been used, no showing is made to warrant a new trial.—Bosek v. Detroit United Railway, 175 Mich. 8.

¶ 112. It is not error to overrule a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence where the affidavits show that all the witnesses lived in the jurisdiction and it is not shown that their testimony could not have been obtained by proper diligence.—Pinkerton Bros. Co. v. Bromley, 128 Mich. 236.

¶ 113. A new trial will not be granted upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, where, with the exercise of reasonable diligence, the evidence of the witness could have been discovered and produced in time for the trial.—Hoover v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 188 Mich. 313.

¶ 114. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, in an action for damages resulting from the explosion of a boiler, when based on the alleged fact that expert witnesses, who testified at the trial and who were unable to state the cause of the explosion, had on a subsequent examination discovered it, where it did not appear, but that such evidence would have been available at the trial had due diligence been exercised.—Sturgis v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 184 Mich. 456.

¶ 115. In an action for injuries sustaine by one riding in a buggy which was struc by a street car, the fact that the driver of th buggy who was the plaintiff's son-in-law wa not called as a witness will not entitle de fendant to a new trial upon producing hir in support of the motion for a new trial, an showing his testimony material to the defens and contradictory to that given by the plair tiff in the absence of any showing of dili gence.—Edwards v. Foote, 129 Mich. 121.

§ 38. ——Evidence existing in public record

¶ 116. Where a party has taken two year to prepare his case for trial and all the fact are matters of public record, a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovere evidence is properly denied.—Harrison Gran ite Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 175 Mich 144.

III. MOTION, PROCEDURE AND ORDEI OR RULING.

§ 39. In general; motion and notice.

Time for application and effect of delay, se post § 40.

Presenting question and obtaining ruling pre paratory to moving, see post § 41.

Affidavits and extrinsic evidence, see pos §§ 42-44.

Conditions on granting or refusing new trial see post § 45.

Orders and disposal of motion, exception and reconsideration, see post §§ 46-48.

Effect of order or ruling, see post § 49.

Motion and procedure for new trial in qu warranto, see Quo Warranto, IV.

Pendency of motion as extending time fo settling bill of exceptions, see Appea § 95.

Insufficiency of new trial motion as mean of saving question of bar by limitation for review, see Saving Questions.

Sufficiency of bill or case to review ruling see Appeal § 191.

Time when execution may issue on judg ment, see Executions § 3.

Motion for new trial as precluding equitable relief from judgment, see Judgments § 85.

Reviewableness on certiorari of new trial orders, see Certiorari § 10.

Moving for new trial to accomplish vacation of judgment and thus open default, see Defaults ¶ 119.

Practice on motion, see Jud. Act, chap. I. § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 12029.

Bond to stay proceedings pending motion for new trial, see Jud. Act, chap. XXII, § 23 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12812 et seq.

¶ 117. A motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence should include the nature and materiality of the evidence.—Elkhoff v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 150.

¶ 118. A proper practice on motion for new trial based on evidence to be taken would be to serve the motion papers, show the necessity and ask for time to take testimony which could be granted in the discretion of the court.—Eikhoff v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 150.

¶ 119. The rule requiring a motion for a new trial to be accompanied by a statement of the ground of the new motion is not satisfied by a statement that it is based on newly discovered evidence and "testimony in the case and testimony to be taken."—Eikhoff v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 150.

§ 40. Time for application and effect of delay.

Time after new trial motion decided for making or extending time to make bill or case, see Appeal § 96.

Delay in suing as affecting case made for new trial, witnesses being dispersed, see also Carriers ¶ 642.

Time prescribed by court rule, see 1916 C. C. Rule 48.

¶ 120. Comp. Laws 1897, § 205, and 1897 Cir. Ct. Law Rule No. 21, in regard to new trials in civil causes, do not fix any limit of "further time" within which a motion for a new trial is in the discretion of the court.—Hayes v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 277.

¶ 121. Circuit Court Rule 31, requiring motions for new trial to be made in two days, was not intended to interfere with the common-law discretion of the court to entertain motions for new trials. Whether it applies to motions for new trials based on newly discovered evidence, quære.—People ex rel. Ætna Live Stock Fire & Tornado Ins. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 20 Mich. 220.

¶ 122. 1897 C. C. Rule No. 21, requiring a motion for a new trial to be taken promptly and recognizing the circuit judge's authority to enlarge the time prescribed does not dispense with the necessity of a meritorious showing.—Eikhoff v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 150.

¶ 123. It is irregular to seek to amend a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto made after judgment so as to make it a motion for a new trial more than five months after an order vacating a judgment under Circuit Court Rule 48, relating to the time of making motions for new trials, especially where several terms of court have intervened.—Yerkes v. Antrim Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 443.

¶ 124. A juror during the course of the trial expressed fixed opinions on the case to outsiders. Defendant's counsel, upon hearing of this, had affidavits to such fact made and presented to the court, moved to have the jury discharged, and was writing out such motion when the jury entered and gave judgment against his client. Held, the defendant acted with sufficient promptness in the matter to entitle him to a new trial.—Cooper v. Carr, 161 Mich. 405.

¶ 124a. A motion for a new trial in a quo warranto case should be made at the term at which the report of the trial is filed, where there is ample time to make it before the close of the term.—People ex rel. Coon v. Plymouth Plank Road Co., 32 Mich. 248.

§ 41. Presenting question and obtaining ruling preparatory to moving.

Hearing and procedure thereon, see 1916 C. C. Rule 48.

¶ 125. Where a verdict was directed for defendant on appeal from the justice, and the directed verdict was based on the specific ground that a discharge in bankruptcy ended defendant's liability but leave to move for a new trial and verdict for plaintiff was reserved, if on new trial the court should become convinced that such was the proper action, the objection by defendant could not be made on the new trial motion for the first time to support the verdict that certain evidence essential to plaintiff was incompetent and ineffectual.—Wineman v. Fisher, 135 Mich. 604.

¶ 126. Where a witness is wanted for further cross-examination on the ground of new information, and he cannot be produced, a request for a continuance or a motion to strike out his testimony should be made before a new trial will be granted.—Bosek v. Detroit United Railway, 175 Mich. 8.

§ 42. Affidavits and extrinsic evidence.

Sufficiency of affidavits on ground of newly discovered evidence, see post § 43.

Affidavits of jurors or evidence as to their misconduct, see post § 44.

Inadmissibility of affidavits to impeach verdict, conclusiveness and effect of verdict, see Verdicts, VI.

Incompetency of witnesses to testify in violation of secrecy of jury proceedings, see Witnesses, II, V.

Right to new trial in reference on basis of affidavits of extrinsic matter, see Reference, VI.

Depositions in support of motion, see Depositions § 1, ¶ 4.

Practice on motion, see Jud. Act, chap. I, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 12029.

¶ 127. Affidavits on motion for a new trial being rebutted by counter-affidavits and being found inherently improbable by the trial judge are properly rejected by him.—Bosek v. Detroit United Railway, 175 Mich. 8.

¶ 128. Where plaintiff was injured by a defective belt while oiling a fan, an affidavit for a new trial stating that defendant expected to prove by a certain person that plaintiff had stated that he was injured while filling another oil cup than that alleged, held too uncertain to justify a new trial.—Cummins v. Boyne City Tanning Co., 177 Mich. 217.

¶ 129. Where a plaintiff makes a motion for a new trial based not only on the record, but upon affidavits, the court may properly refuse such motion where a sufficient counter-showing is made by affidavits filed by defendant.—Lapier v. Beaubien Ice & Coal Co., 162 Mich. 533.

§ 43. ——Sufficiency of affidavits on ground of newly discovered evidence.

¶ 130. A motion for a new trial is properly denied where the affidavit merely states what the party supposed the newly discovered witness would testify to, the witness' affidavit not being given and counter-affidavits having been filed.—Hammond v. Pullman, 129 Mich. 567.

¶ 131. Motion for new trial on alleged newly discovered evidence, held properly denied where the showing was not in compliance with the statute, no witnesses being named nor the proposed testimony of affidavits set out.—Hampton v. Van Nest's Estate, 196 Mich. 404.

¶ 132. A motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is properly refused where the affidavit of the proposed absent witness is not produced, but there is substituted therefor the affidavits of the plaintiff and his counsel, as such latter affidavits are mere hearsay.—Connor v. McRae, 193 Mich. 682.

¶ 133. An affidavit used as a basis for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence which simply states what the affiant believes the proposed witness will testify to without producing an affidavit of the witness, is insufficient.—Cutler v. Spens, 191 Mich. 603.

¶ 134. Denial of a new trial, urged on the ground of newly discovered evidence, held not erroneous where affidavit offered in support thereof did not show diligent effort to produce such evidence on the trial.—Kincade v. Peck, 193 Mich. 207.

¶ 135. An affidavit by a witness not called at the trial, that he was interviewed by plaintiff's lawyer, but did not, from dislike of mixing up in the matter, tell him what he knew, will not sustain a request for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.—Storch v. Rose, 152 Mich. 521.

§ 44. ——Affidavits of jurors or evidence as to their misconduct.

¶ 136. Affidavits of jurors cannot be received to show misconduct of the jury, in support of a motion for a new trial.—City of Battle Creek v. Haak, 139 Mich. 514.

¶ 137. On a motion for a new trial affidavits of jurors cannot be used to impeach their verdict.—Stevenson v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 118 Mich. 651.

¶ 138. On motion for a new trial the opinions and discussions of individual jurors cannot be inquired into.—Churchill v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 56 Mich. 536.

§ 45. Conditions on granting or refusing new trial.

Remission of excess or disclaimer to avoid granting of new trial, see Harmless Error, III, F.

Enforcement of condition on which granted as matter for discretion, see also Appeal ¶ 1764.

¶ 139. Where a new trial is not a matter of right, the judge in granting it may properly impose such a condition as that the parties must waive any supposed right of removal and try the case at the following term.—People ex rel. Mabley v. Detroit Superior Judge, 41 Mich. 31.

¶ 140. Making a new trial dependent upon a refusal to remit a portion of the verdict in personal injury cases, is discretionary and follows a well-settled practice.—Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co., 119 Mich. 282.

¶ 141. It is proper to refuse a new trial on condition that the owner of the verdict will remit the recovery to an amount which the evidence, in the judgment of the trial court, will support.—City of Grand Rapids v. Coit, 149 Mich. 668.

¶ 142. In a suit for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's husband, the jury found for defendant saloonkeeper. On the motion for a new trial the judge held that the verdict was clearly against the weight of the evidence with respect to the fact of the making of the unlawful sales, but that the evidence of damage was so slight as to entitle plaintiff only to nominal damages. He ordered a new trial with the provision that the defendant might within thirty days tender into court for the use of plaintiff attorney's fees of thirty dollars, and other witness, jury, stenographer and clerk fees, amounting to a total of fifty-four dollars. Defendant having made such tender, judgment was entered for defendant. Held, the disposition of the case was improper, as plaintiff was clearly entitled to a new trial and to have the jury assess her damages.—Stanton v. Foley, 168 Mich. 453.

¶ 143. Where, on a motion for a new trial in an action of trespass for cutting and removing timber, on the ground of excessive damages, the trial court after considering the affidavits filed in support of the motion, concludes that the verdict is excessive and orders a remittitur, a claim that he should have submitted the matter to another jury, instead of fixing the amount of damages, is not well taken, where the court did not find defendant excused for failure to produce at the trial better evidence of the amount of timber cut.—North Michigan Land & Live Stock Co. v. Kneeland, 149 Mich. 495.

¶ 144. The court erred in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial upon defendant's electing to pay in settlement of the case a sum named by the court, where the testimony was conflicting and the damages awarded by the jury were merely nominal; since by so doing the court assumed to fix the damages without any option on the part of the plaintiff to refuse the court's award.—Lorf v. City of Detroit, 145 Mich. 265.

§ 46. Orders and disposal of motion, exceptions and reconsideration.

Incidental order or relief, see post § 47.
Statement of reasons for denial or granting of motion, see post § 48.
Effect of order or ruling, see post § 49.
Order valid as grant of new trial but invalid as extension of time to settle bill of exceptions, see also Motions and Orders ¶ 36.
Denial of new trial as in effect a denial of coupled motion for other relief dependent thereon, see Motions and Orders ¶ 34.
Scope of review of order where reasons are not shown in record, see Appeal § 325.
Entry of judgment before expiration of time granted to move for new trial, see Judgments ¶ 100.
Mandamus to correct improper order granting or denying new trial, see Mandamus § 36.
Matters to be included in bill of exceptions or case, see Appeal § 102.
Inclusion of supplemental reasons for ruling in pending bill of exceptions, see Appeal § 102.
Right to writ of error for sole purpose of reviewing new trial order, see Appeal § 50.
Practice on motion, see Jud. Act, chap. I, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 12029.
Time at which motion may be disposed of, see 1916 C. C. Rule 48.
Notice of order to be served on attorneys by clerk, see 1916 C. C. Rule 48.

¶ 145. On a motion for a new trial a verdict for plaintiff cannot be set aside and one entered for defendant as on a direction to the jury and judgment then rendered for defendant without actually trying the case again.—Prowell v. Neuendorf, 141 Mich. 272.

¶ 146. Where exceptions filed to the ruling of a trial judge in denying a motion for a new trial appeal to him, he may vacate his order and grant a new trial.—United States Graphite Co. v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 158 Mich. 598.

§ 47. ——Incidental order or relief.

¶ 147. Where a default judgment was taken against a garnishee defendant the granting of a new trial on his motion would be ineffective unless the default were also set aside since the new trial would merely be an assessment of the damages and the result will be the same as before.—Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Kent Circuit Judge, 144 Mich. 687.

§ 48. ——Statement of reasons for denial or granting of motion.

¶ 148. The circuit judge, while not assigning specifically his reasons for overruling plaintiff's motion for a new trial, which was based upon newly discovered testimony, and upon the ground that the verdict was against the law and the evidence, stated that the affidavits in support of the motion did not correctly state what occurred on the application by plaintiff at the trial to continue said case. Held, that it cannot be said that there was an abuse of discretion in refusing to grant the motion for a new trial.—Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Dodson, 104 Mich. 507.

¶ 149. Where counsel requests that reasons for denying a motion for new trial be filed, a statement that the mover has not "shown sufficient grounds and reasons to justify it" is not a compliance with the law. —Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 123 Mich. 277.

§ 49. Effect of order or ruling.

Effect of grant of new trial on execution sale, see Executions § 124.
Seeking new trial as general appearance, see Appearance § 8.
Effect of new trial motion to prolong time for bringing error, see Appeal § 75.
Possibility of new trial as affecting right to issuance of execution, see Executions § 3.
Effect of ruling on motion for new trial as res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication § 16.
Conclusiveness as bar or estoppel of judgments susceptible of new trial, see Former Adjudication § 25.

¶ 150. A granting of a new trial as to a portion of the defendants, in an action under the Civil Damage Act, and the allowance of a judgment as to the remainder of the defendants, is not error, as the action is several as well as joint, and the right exists to proceed against a portion or all of the defendants, wherefore the plaintiff should not be compelled to lose a judgment against some defendants because others are entitled to a new trial.—Moreland v. Durocher, 121 Mich. 398.

¶ 151. Where a judgment is recovered jointly against a principal and a surety on a joint and several bond, and the court grants a new trial to the surety, the judgment against the principal is not thereby vacated. —McPharlin v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 162 Mich. 141.

IV. PROCEDURE AND ISSUES ON NEW TRIAL.

§ 50. In general.

New trial granted on conditions, see ante § 45.

Procedure on new trial on quo warranto, see Quo Warranto, IV.
Manner, course and conduct of trial generally, see Trial, II.
Former decision as law of the case on retrial or on second review, see Appeal, XII, G, XV.

Directing verdict on evidence adduced at new trial similar to former proofs, see Directing Verdict § 9.
Introduction of defense of limitations on retrial, see Limitations § 103.
Costs on retrial after remand, see Costs § 59.

¶ 152. A second trial must be conducted in the same manner, and by the same rules, as the first.—Barker v. Hebbard, 81 Mich. 267.

¶ 153. Upon each new trial the case must be tried just as if it had never been tried before. The burden of proof remains the same.—Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252.

¶ 154. A new trial is a rehearing of the cause before another jury, but with as little prejudice to either party as if it had never been heard before; and, rulings made on a former trial are not binding.—Gott v. Superior Court Judge, 42 Mich. 625.

¶ 155. Where, on the first trial of a case, the declaration has been amended to meet the evidence, the jury on a second trial has nothing to do with what happened on the first trial, but must try the case upon the amended pleadings and determine what the facts are from the evidence admitted during the second trial.—Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280.

¶ 155a. A party who has been compelled to elect between the common and special counts of his declaration is at liberty, on a new trial, to proceed upon the other counts.—Gott v. Superior Court Judge, 42 Mich. 625.

¶ 155b. A ruling requiring a party to elect between the counts of his declaration, and the practice thereon, would not bind the court upon a new trial of the case if brought to trial in the same shape as before.—Gott v. Superior Court Judge, 42 Mich. 625.

§ 51. Rights waived or barred on first trial.

¶ 156. The appointment of an administrator upon a woman's estate is held to have been acquiesced in by her husband if in a litigation with the administrator he raises no objection to the latter's authority, when the disposition of such an objection would dispose of the case. And no objection so waived can be afterwards raised upon a new trial.—Bassett v. Shepardson, 57 Mich. 428.

¶ 2. A notice of sale of mortgaged premises is sufficient if published in a "weekly newspaper of legal and business information," which has been for many years a medium for publication of legal advertisements; publication in a daily newspaper of general circulation is not necessary.—Hoock v. Sloman, 155 Mich. 1.

¶ 3. Publication in a part of a newspaper marked "Supplement" is sufficient publication in the newspaper since designating part as supplement makes it no less a part of the newspaper.—Mann v. Carson, 120 Mich. 631.

¶ 4. English being the recognized language of this country, whenever a statute refers to publication in the newspapers it means those published in the language of the country.—Auditor General v. Hutchinson, 113 Mich. 245; Visscher v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 666.

¶ 5. A publication of a notice of petition to sell lands for delinquent taxes in English but in a Dutch language paper containing no other matter in the English language is not a publication in the English language sufficient under How. St. § 7251, requiring all legal proceedings to be in the English language. and Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 66, requiring publication in a "newspaper" of such petition.—Visscher v. NON-NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

TREATS of promises in writing to pay money or of orders by one person on another to pay money to a third but in neither case having the attributes of negotiable paper. It excludes official orders or warrants on public treasurers for payments on claims (see Municipal Corporations, XIV; Townships, VI; Schools, IV; Counties, VI) except when such orders involve no element of law peculiarly applicable to themselves.

¶ 2. The indorsement "without recourse" of a non-negotiable note by the payee to a third party, accompanied by a delivery of the note, constitutes a sufficient assignment to pass title to the instrument.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Gregg, 107 Mich. 146; Steere v. Trebilcock, 108 Mich. 464.

¶ 3. The indorsement and delivery of a non-negotiable note by the payee operates as an assignment thereof.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Gregg, 107 Mich. 146; Steere v. Trebilcock, 108 Mich. 464.

¶ 4. Indorsement of a non-negotiable note by the payee transfers the title merely and does not render him liable thereon in case of nonpayment by the maker.—Barger v. Farnham, 130 Mich. 487.

¶ 5. A promise to pay "on or before four years from date, * * * with interest * * * not to be paid annually unless the promisor can make it convenient, and other security to be taken in exchange for this note when said [promisor] can realize the same in proper shape from" [a specified source], is not negotiable, and its form is sufficient to put an assignee upon inquiry.—Humphrey v. Beckwith, 48 Mich. 151.

¶ 6. A non-negotiable instrument can only be transferred by assignment; and though the payee may perhaps assign it by indorsing it, he does not thereby make himself liable for the amount to be paid.—Story v. Lamb, 52 Mich. 525.

¶ 7. An instrument satisfying some but not all of the requisites of a promissory note may, if valid, be proved as a contract, and may be assigned; but the assignee takes only such rights as the payees had.—First Nat. Bank v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432.

¶ 8. Village warrants or orders drawn in payment for work and materials done and furnished are not negotiable instruments, and an indorsee takes them subject to all the equities existing between the village and the payee.—Miner v. Vedder, 66 Mich. 101.

¶ 9. A village warrant drawn on the treasurer for payment of a sum certain for account of a designated fund is not negotiable and the transferee takes it subject to all defenses against the payee.—Field v. Village of Highland Park, 141 Mich. 69.

¶ 10. The term "promissory note" is not correctly applied to an agreement to pay a fixed sum of money at a certain date, with seven per cent interest from date, and eight per cent interest after maturity, and five per cent attorney's fees, without relief from homestead, valuation or appraisement laws, to which is added a waiver by the makers and indorsers of presentment for payment, protest and notice of protest and non-payment, with right to extend the time of payment; and such an instrument is open to the same defenses in the hands of a transferee as in those of the payee.—Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546.

¶ 11. A non-negotiable instrument in the hands of bona fide holders is open to the defense that it was given for a machine bought on trial but which failed to do work as represented by the vendors, and was, accordingly, returned.—Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546.

¶ 12. In a suit by an assignee to foreclose a mortgage given to secure a non-negotiable note, it appeared that the note and mortgage were given to raise money to pay off a prior mortgage on the same land, given by defendants, mortgagors, to complainant's assignor, and by him assigned, without the knowledge of defendants, to a stranger to the suit; that the assignor promised to discharge the prior mortgage, but died without doing so. There was nothing in the record to show that mortgagors had any knowledge that the complainant proposed to buy the second mortgage, or that they did any act, or failed to do any act, that caused complainant to make the purchase. Held, that complainant took no other or greater equity by his purchase and assignment than his assignor had and the mortgagors were not estopped to assert equities.—Walker v. Thompson, 108 Mich. 686.

¶ 13. A purchaser of non-negotiable paper given without sufficient consideration cannot invoke the rule against the maker that, where one of two innocent parties must suffer loss from the conduct of a third, such loss should fall upon the one whose act enabled the wrong to be committed.—Carmody v. Crane, 110 Mich. 508.

Validity of parol promise to pay orders drawn in payment of goods furnished another, see Frauds, Statute of ¶ 97.

Novation of contracts by acceptance of order and substitution of debtors, see Novation.

¶ 14. An order given to one partner alone for money due, did not make the drawee indebted to such partner where the order was never accepted in writing by the drawee, and consequently the money was not subject to garnishment in the hands of the drawee for a debt of such partner.—Stone v. Dowling, 119 Mich. 476.

¶ 15. One who has accepted an order for payment of money to become due on a contract, subject to all the conditions of the contract, may set off as against the payee the amount of expense incurred in completing the contract after it was abandoned by the contractor, who drew the order.—Jenks v. Wells, 90 Mich. 515.

§ 4. Presentment, demand and notice of nonpayment.

Necessity of demand on drawee as precedent to action on order, see also Assignments ¶ 101.

¶ 16. Presentment for payment on a certain date, of orders for the payment of money, payable on the tenth of each month only, is not required where payment is refused by the drawer on the ground that he does not owe the money.—Ryerson v. Tourcotte, 121 Mich. 78.

¶ 17. The rule requiring immediate notice in case of the nonpayment of commercial paper does not apply to a non-negotiable order drawn upon a debtor, and taken by a creditor of the maker merely as a conditional payment, to be applied in case it is collected.—Briggs v. Parsons, 39 Mich. 400.

¶ 18. Under the law of West Virginia a note not made payable at a bank is non-negotiable and indorsers need not be served with notice of nonpayment.—Barger v. Farnham, 130 Mich. 487.

§ 5. Actions.

Assumpsit on the instrument, see also Assumpsit.

Actions on negotiable paper, see Negotiable Instruments, XIV.

¶ 19. A note payable in chattels is transferable, and the assignee may sue on it.—Hicks v. Lyle, 46 Mich. 488.

¶ 20. The mere possession of a due-bill not payable to bearer and not negotiable raises no presumption of ownership; and where plaintiff sues upon it in his own right, and for his own use and benefit, he is not entitled to recover if it appears that the bill always belonged to the wife and was given for her money.—Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104.

¶ 21. A firm borrowed from one of the partners, and gave him a non-negotiable due-bill, which he turned over to his wife in payment of a debt he owed her. Held, that this would transfer to her the title thereto, and she could enforce payment, even though the amount remained to her husband's credit on the partnership books; still, if the firm knew nothing of the transfer, its settlement with the husband would probably be a defense to such enforcement. But if she arranged with her husband as one of the firm to take up the due-bill and give her the firm's note, her right of action on the note could not be prejudiced by the fact that the original credit remained and was allowed to the husband on a subsequent settlement.—Moore v. Foote, 34 Mich. 443.

§ 6. ——Parties.

Right to sue on the paper, see also ante § 5.
Parties to actions on negotiable instruments, see Negotiable Instruments § 95.

¶ 22. The assignee of a non-negotiable demand may still sue thereon in the name of the original contracting party, as he was compelled to do at common law.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489: Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407; Moon v. Harder, 38 Mich. 566; Park v. Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co., 41 Mich. 352; McRoberts v. Lyon, 79 Mich. 25.

¶ 23. The assignment of a non-negotiable demand does not at the common law entitle the assignee to sue in his own name upon the contract; Laws 1862, p. 102, How. St., § 7344, which allows it, is only permissive; and the assignee is still at liberty to sue in the name of the contracting party.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489.

¶ 24. The assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action can sue on it in his own name or in that of his assignor.—Park v. Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co., 41 Mich. 352.

¶ 25. The assignee of a non-negotiable note may sue thereon in his own name.—Peltier v. Babillion, 45 Mich. 384.

¶ 26. The payee of a negotiable note wrote on the back thereof, "For value received, I hereby assign all interest in and to this note to W.," and the latter transferred it by mere indorsement to C. Held, that if negotiability was destroyed by the first transfer, C. could sue in his own name under How. St., § 7344, allowing an assignee of a non-negotiable note to sue in his own name, but if it was not destroyed C. could sue as indorsee.—Stevens v. Hannan, 86 Mich. 305.

§ 7. ——Pleading.

Sufficiency of declaration in justice's court upon non-negotiable instrument, see also Justices of the Peace ¶ 385.
Pleading in actions on negotiable instruments, see Negotiable Instruments § 101.

¶ 27. A declaration by an assignee upon a conditional note not negotiable need not aver any formal assignment, but is sufficient if it avers plaintiff to be the owner and holder.—Draper v. Fletcher, 26 Mich. 154.

¶ 28. Where an assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action sues in his own name he must allege the assignment in his declaration.—Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104; Altman v. Fowler, 70 Mich. 57.

¶ 29. Complainant filed a bill in equity alleging that she had executed such a note and mortgage; that she had delivered the same to the payee, relying upon his promise to pay off an outstanding incumbrance before placing the mortgage of record; that he had failed to procure the discharge of the incumbrance, but that defendant, to whom the note and mortgage had been transferred, claimed the right to enforce payment for the full amount. Held, that the facts alleged did not constitute such an averment of the agency of the payee as would estop complainant from denying the validity of the note.—Carmody v. Crane, 110 Mich. 508.

§ 8. ——Issues, evidence and trial.

General law as to issues and variance, see Pleading, IX, X.
Issues, proof and variance in actions on negotiable instruments, see Negotiable Paper § 103.
Admissibility of parol evidence as to genesis and circumstances of making or indorsing, see Evidence § 159.

Paper as evidence under common counts, see Assumpsit § 61.
Honoring orders for sale of goods to servant as evidence of account stated, see Account Stated ¶ 43.

¶ 30. In an action between original parties upon an instrument that is not negotiable, it is competent for the defendant to show the circumstances under which he indorsed it to the plaintiff, if the evidence does not vary any positive legal agreement made by him.—Lamb v. Story, 45 Mich. 488.

¶ 31. A non-negotiable note not purporting to be for value received may be given in evidence under the common counts.—Rickey v. Morrison, 69 Mich. 139.

¶ 32. Where an instrument containing the usual form of a promissory note, and the usual power of attorney to confess judgment thereon against the maker, is declared on under the common counts by the payee, such instrument, though not negotiable, is admissible in evidence.—Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. McKittrick, 86 Mich. 191.

¶ 33. A non-negotiable note not purporting to be for value received was admitted in evidence against objection, and plaintiff rested without proving any consideration. Held, that the want of such proof could not be complained of if defendant himself went into such proof and plaintiff was permitted to controvert him.—Rickey v. Morrison, 69 Mich. 139.

¶ 34. The admission of value received in a non-negotiable note is prima facie sufficient to show a consideration.—Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. McKittrick, 86 Mich. 191.

¶ 35. An instrument in the form of a promissory note, but rendered non-negotiable by a condition appearing on its face, was indorsed on its back with the name of the payee. Evidence was offered that it was purchased by an agent, and delivered to the holder. Held, the trial court erred in holding there was not sufficient proof of assignment.—Worden Grocer Co. v. Blanding, 161 Mich. 254.

¶ 36. In an action on a promissory note for $1,000 payable in one year which provides that it is given to secure the payee against a mortgage of $1,000 upon property contemporaneously conveyed and if the maker within a year pays the mortgage the note to be void, the failure to pay the mortgage entitles the payee to recover the face of the note, but without interest where the maker has paid interest on the mortgage.—Stearns v. Stearns, 129 Mich. 451.

¶ 5. The authority of notaries public to administer oaths is statutory, and does not pertain to their office by usage or custom.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 6. A notary public before whom as special commissioner the parties have stipulated to take the testimony in a case in chancery has power to administer oaths to the witnesses examined, by virtue of his general authority as notary, whether his appointment as special commissioner is valid or not.—Crone v. Angell, 14 Mich. 340.

¶ 7. Where an attorney-at-law, who as notary public has sworn a claimant to a statement of lien, subsequently appears in justice's court as the claimant's attorney to enforce said lien, the verification does not violate How. St., § 637.—Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7.

¶ 8. The presumption being, according to the usual custom, that a notary public can administer oaths, one should not, without proof, be held incompetent to do so.—Pinkham v. Cockell, 77 Mich. 265.

¶ 9. A claim against a city for damages for personal injuries is not void under Comp. L. 1897, § 2640, making it unlawful for notaries public to administer oaths in causes in which they are engaged as attorneys, where such claim was verified before a notary public who subsequently brought a suit for such injuries as attorney for claimant.—Allen v. City of West Bay City, 140 Mich. 111.

¶ 10. A notary's sureties are liable only for such damages as are the proximate result of the notary's false or fraudulent certificate.—People ex rel. Young v. Nederlander, 177 Mich. 434.

¶ 11. The sureties on a notarial bond are not liable to a person parting with money upon false statements of the notary, and afterwards receiving a forged deed with his fraudulent certificate, since the misrepresentations and not the certificate of the notary were the proximate cause.—People ex rel. Young v. Nederlander, 177 Mich. 434.

¶ 12. A false certificate of acknowledgment by a notary public upon a mortgage may be regarded as proximate cause of the loss of a loan made by a person who took the mortgage as genuine.—People for use of Doran v. Butler, 74 Mich. 643.

¶ 13. In an action on the bond of a notary, conditioned to perform his official duties faithfully without fraud, a verdict cannot be directed in favor of a lender, who took as security a mortgage executed and acknowledged by an impostor in the name of a land owner, where the certificate stated that he was personally known to the notary to be the "same person described in and who executed" the mortgage, where it appeared that the impostor had first visited the notary and was sent to the lender, though this was denied, where it was testified and denied that the notary knew the true identity of the impostor, and where it appeared by testimony of the lender that he had satisfied himself as to the value of the land and had no thought as to the identity of the borrower, leaving open only the question of the validity of the title offered as security, which question the notary passed on, he being also a lawyer.—People for use of Cook v. Cole, 139 Mich. 312.

¶ 14. The official character of a notary public of another state, before whom an affidavit of the amount due upon a justice's judgment rendered in this state, and a transcript of which is offered for filing with the county clerk, is sworn to, must be certified to as required by How. St., § 7448 (subd. 3), to authorize such filing or the entry and docketing of said judgment.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 15. The certificate of a notary carries with it the usual presumption that the officer making it has certified to the truth, and has not been guilty of a wrongful or criminal act.—Donahue v. Vosper, 189 Mich. 78.

¶ 16. The notary's official seal is not evidence of his authority to take an affidavit.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

NOTICE AND RECORD OF TITLE.

TREATS of actual or constructive notice to takers of interests in land or liens thereon of the prior rights, estates, and claims of others, whether such notice is by reason of actual knowledge or of the equitable doctrines of notice or of the statutory effect of record under the recording acts. It also treats of the requisites and indicia of a bona fide taking of the land for value and without notice and of the rights and equities of such takers. Rights, equities and priorities under land transfers and liens, due to the effect of the transaction and not due to notice or record or a taking without notice, are treated in specific topics such as Mortgages, V; Liens § 11; Executions, V, VII, C; Attachment, VIII; Foreclosure, IV. Good faith or fraudulency of transfers as against creditors is treated in Fraudulent Conveyances. The recording or filing or notice of transfers of or instruments of lien on personal property is treated in Chattel Mortgages, I; Sales, XI, XII; Shipping, II, and the doctrine of bona fides as applied to transfers of bills and notes in Negotiable Instruments, XIII.
